There is plenty in our church at present that may be used in the policy, "Prevention is more profitable than Rescue." Let us see if we can use these things at hand for that purpose. If we will keep in mind the greater efficiency of this method we will more heartily support these things. Let us look on our Sunday school as a means of religious education to direct the energy which otherwise would be devoted to things of the world. Let us back our Sunday school with teacher training and keep as our ideal the methods used by the Master Teacher. Let us support our programs more enthusiastically that we may have trained leaders and a higher aim. Let us enforce it all with the realization that to prevent is a more certain method than to try to rescue. Let us think seriously on our efforts and enforce our convictions with prayer.

The first thing that has to be done is to eliminate this idea and it can only be done by gaining the confidence of the boy. Employers recognize the fact that little can be accomplished without the confidence and co-operation of their employees, but we have forgotten this principle and have attempted force. The most effective way of gaining any person's confidence is through being a friend, and with boys you must be a boy. We must not make the mistake of believing that every boy can be won by the same method for they have not all been run through the same mold.

Every boy has a point of contact and it is the duty of the teacher to find that point and having once found it you have a guide by which to begin your offensive. To learn what this point of advantage may be you must study the boy; learn his likes and dislikes, his wants, his troubles, and triumphs and his ambitions. Do not make the mistake of thinking that a boy has no ambitions, for he has and they are very real to him. Many a boy has become a mighty man because of childhood dreams. Encourage him and help him to build the highest ideals possible. Many a teacher has lost a pupil because of lack of encouragement. Encouragement should be freely given. Mr. Willys of the Willys-Overland Incorporated, says, "In the game of salesmanship there is no psychological moment, every moment is that moment." I believe the same is applicable here. Confidence and friendship beget confidence and friendship, which is a gradual growth and not spasmodic.

Having once gained the confidence of the boy it is a comparatively easy matter to get him to come to Sunday school, for his friend who has become his ideal is there. Now that he is at Sunday school is the work finished? No indeed, the work is just begun. Now we face the problem of increasing our forces. In doing this there is one method that must be applied, viz., the appeal to the imagination and the curiosity. This can be done in various ways, for instance, organize the class into an army. All the boys naturally start in as privates and receive promotion in the following manner, every Sunday that he attends and is able to repeat the golden text, has studied the lesson and has good deportment during the class session, shall be promoted one rank. For every new scholar brought and retained as a permanent member, he shall receive a promotion of five ranks. When the student has attained the rank of general and after holding that title three Sundays, he shall win a battle. As a reward for his success he shall receive a prize. Each Sunday a commander-in-chief is chosen, whose duty it is to keep order in the classroom. The class is also divided into groups and each group placed under the command of a squad leader, whose duty it is to keep order within their squad, ascertaining how many studied their lessons, and hearing the golden text repeated. Under such a plan the interest and attention if the class is held very nicely and the teacher finds it possible to speak with ease.

Now we have our class working; how are we going to unite them into a unified body in order that they may gain a spirit of love toward each other and feel that each member is an inseparable part of it? As a solution to this problem the writer offers the plan of organizing the class into teams of various kinds, such as basket ball, base ball and other sports. Organize as many teams as you can. Arouse the spirit of competition. After they have been organized, train them. If you are not able to do it yourself, obtain the services of some one who is. After they attain to a fair degree of skill, arrange for a few games with outside teams. It will arouse pride in the boys and make them feel that they have a vital part in the activities of the Sunday school. Do not stop here, it is not enough. Take the boys on hikes. Occasionally on Sunday afternoons go for a long walk to the woods, perhaps to enjoy the beauty of the wild flowers, the charm of the birds; perhaps to the wood stream to study the water plant and aquatic animal.

Another method of binding the class together is through good live class meetings. Play games, read, try stunts and tricks and plan methods for obtaining new scholars. In fact, be a boy with them. Get away from the spirit of individualism and call forth the group spirit. This can be done and the class can be brought to feel that the other boy's need is his need. This was brought to my attention a few days ago when several of the boys of my class called and one told me with tears in his eyes of an accident that had happened to one of the members of the class. That is the spirit that binds. And should that not be the spirit of the Christian? "LOVE THY NEIGHBOR AS THYSELF."

The person who is not willing to spare the time to develop a class has no business attempting to teach one. It takes time and a lot of it. The Sunday school class can not be successfully taught in one hour a week. The child despises a slacker and so does Christ. Sunday school teachers, upon the Sunday school of today rests the hope of the Sunday school of tomorrow.

Armenian and Syrian Relief. BY DR. G. H. T. MAIN

(President of Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa, now serving as Commissioner to the Caucasus of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief.)

I have been handling refugee concentration along the former boundary line between Russian and Turkish Armenia. Alexandropol, a large center and Ejehmiadzín, a small one, are typical. In the one are 68,000 refugees by actual census at our bread and soup kitchens. In the other there are 7,000. Refugees have streamed into these places hoping to find it possible to cross the border into their former homes in Turkish Armenia near Kars. Concentration at these two places and many others without food or clothing and after a winter of exile in the Caucasus and beyond has produced a condition of horror unparalleled among the atrocities of the great war. On the streets of Alexandropol on the day of my arrival 192 corpses were picked up. This is far below the average per day. One seventh of the refugees are dying each month. At Ejehmiadzín I looked for a time at a refugee burial. Seven bodies were thrown indiscriminately into a square pit as carrion and covered with the earth without any suggestion of care or pity. As I looked at the workmen I saw a hand protruding from the loose earth. It was a woman's hand and seemed to be stretched out in mute appeal. To me this hand reaching upward from the horrible pit symbolized starving Armenia. The workmen told me that the seven in this pit were the first load of thirty-five to be brought out from the village that morning. The cart had gone back for another load.

The refugees dare not go forward. They halt on the border land of their home. The Turks, the Kurd, and the Tartar have taken possession of their land and will hold it by force of arms. A line almost like a battle line from the Black Sea region, where is located the Southwestern Republic with Kars as its capital, to the Caspian Sea, where Baku is the capital of the Azerbaijan Republic, together with a line of Turks, Kurds and Tartars between these two extremes holds the refugees where they are. The total number is more than 330,000. To these must be added the local inhabitants also suffering indescribable hardships. The Allied forces on the Turkish side are not in sufficient numbers to dominate the situation. The only solution is a considerable number of troops to be used as a policing force supplied by a mandatory power. Many Armenian soldiers would be available for such service. Such action must unhappily await the findings of the Peace Conference, and the votes of governing bodies. Every moment of delay means enlargement of existing horrors.

The Armenian republic on the Russian side of the line and our relief committee working together are not able adequately to feed the refugees. Meanwhile seeding time is here and passing. Another season of famine is inevitable unless there is immediate action by some compelling power. The world appears to be unconscious of the overwhelming human tragedy that is being enacted in the Caucasus. The Turk and his racial confederates are carrying forward with growing efficiency the policy of extermination developed during the war by the method of starvation. Starvation is aided by typhus; and already as if in anticipation of the hot season, cholera is developing.

At this last moment can Christian civilization do something to restore and heal? In the emergency I have told the officials of the Armenian Republic that our committee would take over the orphanages until some mandatory power is given authority to assist in establishing order and giving financial stability to the peoples concerned. This move on my part I firmly believe is demanded by the conditions and by the most elementary principles of humanity. Should our government delay in reaching out a helping hand to these suffering people? The question of political expediency ought to be forgotten in the presence of this world catastrophe. These people look to America. Our government is under moral obligations to respond.

If we are to stand the sifting process in church work we need to prove ourselves number one hard wheat in our personal life and faith.

Where Christ reveals himself there is satisfaction in the slenderest portion, and without Christ there is emptiness of the greatest fulness.—Alexander Grosse, 1632.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

An Appeal for Ashland College. BY ROY BRUMBAUGH

(Sermon preached the Sunday previous to Brother Beachler's coming to canvass in the interest of Permanent Endowment for Ashland College. TEXT: Ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. II Timothy 3: 7.) -

Paul was constantly coming in touch with this kind of men. Paul met this class everywhere. The Jews and the Greeks and the Romans were only wise in their own conceits; they turned down Christ, the true wisdom of the world, hence they were ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

Paul spoke again of others measuring themselves by themselves and comparing themselves among themselves; they were not wise and became as fools. They profited only by their own experience, they refused to profit by the knowledge of the Christ, hence ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

Paul had met many who professed themselves to be wise and became as fools. Ever learning. That is the reason he was concerned about Timothy his son in the Lord. He was anxious that this should not befall, or be said of him. There were many inducements and enticements in that direction, that is, to accept the wisdom of the world. Paul was anxious that Timothy should be wise with a saving knowledge of the truth.

They were ever learning from their false teachers, but false teachers and teaching never lead to the truth. They had a form of godliness which they thought gave them authority to teach, but they denied the power of godliness. Hence they could never bring their constituency, their followers to the knowledge of the saving power of Christianity.

What a deplorable condition for one to endure, ever learning and never able. But there are many today who answer to this description, even some professed Christians. The Apostle says "grow in grace" and yet some men have no more grace than they had years ago and some not even as much. They hear many good sermons but they are willing hearers but forgetful doers. Therefore they are unable to become wise unto salvation.

The man with all his wisdom and knowledge-getting who does not get him a heart of understanding by getting Christ is a failure. Too many men and women die in early manhood and womanhood; too many have made and are making an utter and complete failure out of life; too many men and women have been side-tracked and gone down to ruin and destruction, because they were ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Illustrious examples are men like, Ingersoll, Paine, Voltaire, Shelly, Byron, Burns, Poe and a host of others.

When Christ was before Pilate for judgment, he asked Christ "What is truth?" Jesus left the question unanswered. Perhaps because Pilate knew. Before Pilate stood "the way, the truth and the life." The truth and true wisdom was in Jesus. Jesus was the living embodiment and a walking example of the truth. The truth was before Pilate and he had to accept or reject it. Pilate was ever learning and no doubt never came to the knowledge of the truth.

There are two kinds of education in the world and you have observed both. There is an education of the head only and one of the heart. Some men either see their own feet or the stars when they pass you. They are the stuck up and the proud. They wear a number six shoe and a number ten hat. This class of men are of no essential benefit to the world, more than being able to draw their salary. The quicker the last pay day comes the better.

Then there is the education of the heart; that which is sympathetic, kind, patient, willing to help others, willing to consider others better than themselves for Christ's sake. "They first gave themselves unto the Lord." It is the kind that has a word of good cheer, that which is bent on finding its chief joy and glory in serving others. Did not Jesus well say, "He that shall be greatest among you shall be servant of all?"

Life is an investment, a trust, if we do not invest and trust in the eternal truth, our bank of dependence will fail in a day when we are not aware of it, and we will have made an utter and complete failure out of our trust, our life.

Schools are set and established for learning; are they leading to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus? If not they are making a failure, because all else is a side issue and of only secondary importance. Ashland College our own church school is set for the leading of men to the knowledge of the truth. In years past she has made commendable success. Sometimes she has failed in making out of the students sent what the parents expected, but usually the parents have failed first. I have heard my friend, Dr. Jacobs utter words, something like this and I am sure he will pardon me for using the same, "Send a fool to college, even to Ashland, with his ways set and determined, with an unchangeable spirit, with bad habits formed, and he will usually be nothing more than an educated fool when he returns." Ashland College is not a reformatory as some have thought. However this I will guarantee, for I speak from four years of experience, that it has the most wholesome religious atmosphere and environment to be found anywhere.

The need of the hour in the Brethren church and all churches is more ministers, more and better trained leadership. A well equipped and well endowed college will not answer all the difficulties but it will help mightily. Other churches in some instances have even furnished board and clothes to put their students through school. They are still short today but where would they have been had not they done this. If they cannot supply all their pulpits by even doing this, ought we not to at least meet our students half way if we expect to live and grow, by fixing up for them a respectable place to which they may go.

Another thing that has held us back is that salaries oftentimes have been below a living wage. One text people quote too often, "Freely ye have received freely give." They ought to tack something like this on the end of it, "The laborer is worthy of his hire," and again, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Ought we not all to sacrifice to meet each other half way? Then there will not be such a shortage of ministers; they will get along better and so will the laity.

You say yes but men can preach without going to college, yes, and men can live without going to common school or high school. But I think that when a man starts out to preach without an education if he has had a chance to be educated he insults his Lord. Yes, men can preach a heap better with an education. Men sometimes point to men like Sunday and Moody and what they have accomplished and are accomplishing without college training. But what might they not have done or be able to do, if they had had the knowledge of the world coupled with the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ? This is what helped make Paul such a mighty preacher and a force in early Christianity, he was thoroughly educated and Christ could use him the better. The church in changing pastors in the east especially, ask, "Can he preach?" "Is he an Ashland College man?" You yourselves have heard men who were really sincere, who wanted to do and did do all they could, but they were not impressive; they were handicapped all their lives long because of a lack of training. Some people think, Open your mouth and the Lord will fill it, yes, with wind. We must

Junior and Intermediate Awakening. By Miss Nora Bracken

This is the time of the year when new life bursts forth. We look about us everywhere and see Springtime awakening. Nature has thrown off her winter garments and is being clothed with spring vesture.

The first to tell us that spring is here, were the little birds. You were no doubt awakened one morning by a robin, warbling forth his merry notes, on a bough near your window. Now you hear a chorus of many voices from early dawn until late in the evening.

Soon after these messengers, came others—the flowers. The little crocus pushed her head up through the moist earth. The yellow daffodils peeped from behind the curtains in the windows of many homes. The trailing arbutus crept over the mountain side and the violets are spring up in the old meadows. Now we see the buds on the trees bursting open to give room for the green foliage which will soon be mother nature's choice garment. All these, awake and at work, tell us that slumber days are over. All these tell us of God's love. They tell us that God is good.

What great lessons these little forces of nature should teach the boys and girls. Our winter slumber days, if such we have had, should also cease. We should be up with the birds and the flowers and be busy in our Endeavor work. There are many ways in which you young Endeavorers can be serving the Master. Your field is filled with opportunities. The Master wants you to attend your weekly Christian Endeavor meetings. He not only wants your presence but needs your voice. Every time you read a verse of Scripture, every time you help to sing his praises, every time you speak a word for him, you grow stronger. These meetings will make you happy. We don't see boys and girls come out of Christian Endeavor meetings with sad countenances, but instead we find them with sunny smiles and cheerful voices. This is the kind of boys and girls the world is looking for.

There are many of our young and little people who have not yet given their hearts to God. They have not yet found him. Now you, who have found him, should be winners of souls. You should seek others for Christ. You should tell them of his love. Many are dying for a little bit of love—go tell it. This is what it means to be Endeavorers.

These spring days are joy days. They are filled with enthusiasm. They are the best days of the year. So why not make these the best Endeavor days? Why not let this be our spring song:

The Christ in the heavens above;
The birds in the trees;
The bees in the clover;
The flowers at our feet;
The boys and girls in the Christian Endeavor;
All are at work for God and his fellowmen.

Junior and Intermediate Work

It is gratifying to note the growing interest in Junior and Intermediate Christian Endeavor. Through the maintenance of these societies certain churches have been provided with choice workers. This splendid work with the boys and girls nourishes and gives direction to the spiritual forces of life during the most trainable and impressionable years. To put into the boyhood and girlhood of those crucial and pivotal years what we want to find in the manhood and womanhood of maturer years is to employ the finest kingdom strategy. Blessed are the men and women who follow the gleam of this thought, multiplying themselves in manifold ways in the life of those whom they train and direct. We are glad to publish the reports given below in the hope that these messages will inspire increased activity among the boys and girls during the spring and summer months. Let others report their work.

J. A. GARBER.

Linwood, Maryland

The Intermediate Christian Endeavor society was re-organized on November 22, 1918 with eleven active and four associate members present.

With Mrs. E. M. Riddle as our most helpful superintendent, we are striving in every way to faithfully keep our pledge.

Our two committees—Lookout and Social—are doing splendid work.

At every meeting we strive to have as much originality as possible, and as was planned and has so far been carried out, have at each meeting had some kind of special music.

We observe each monthly consecration meeting; also observed Ashland College night and from our special offering sent $5.00 to Ashland College. We now have $5.96 in our treasury.

We have up to this time held two socials.

Our membership has now increased to twenty-four; eighteen active members, every one a church member and five associate members.

This is a commendable showing, the best ever. There are remaining a few schools in each district, however, that have been contributors to this work heretofore, that have not yet responded this year, owing to the closing of the schools at the usual time for the lifting of this offering. These we will hear from later as well as some schools that will be new contributors. When every Brethren school falls in line, even in a small way, in support of this work, our Association will be in position to launch out on a larger and more effective plan for the advancement of the church's interests.

The NEXT item of importance is the STATISTICAL REPORT of the schools for the year ending with March, 1919, for annual report to National Conference. Report Postal Card blanks will be mailed within a week to every superintendent whose address we have. Every loyal Brethren superintendent will readily see the importance of promptly filling out this card and dropping it into the mail. It is just as important that we secure a report from the small school as from the large school. If one school is missing the report to National Conference is not a true representation of our work.

YOUR church wants to know about YOUR school.

MISSIONS

Lost Creek, Kentucky

The school work for this year at Riverside is now over. Eventful indeed has the year been. In it all the Lord has made himself more real to his children at this place than ever before. We praise his holy name for it.

The first thing that I wish to tell you about as a testimony to his power, is the constraining, impelling influence of the Second Coming or personal return of our Lord in the air for his "bride," the church, over those who are looking for him in that way. As you know we had no one to look after the dormitory work during the fall, i. e., no one regularly on the job. We did not intend to open the winter term without some one here for that. We prayed; others prayed. Finally close to the end of the time, word came that Brother and Sister Russell Humbert, and Mary Elizabeth of Flora, Indiana, would be here for that work. They came, and have again returned to their home at Flora, Indiana. Their work was very, very satisfactory. They indeed are workmen of whom none need be ashamed. It was a real sacrifice for them to come and leave their work at home. But Brother Humbert gave testimony that one of the main reasons why they came was that they might do something MORE for their Savior than they had been doing, before he might return again. These are not the "housetop" expectants, but those who want "to occupy" acceptably, "until he comes again," and in so doing, work hard and efficiently even to the last minute. We feel constrained to give this incident as a testimony to the power of the word.

The second thing that we wish to report is somewhat a personal matter, but with your pardon we will give it. It relates to the sickness of our baby girl about two years old. Four weeks ago she had pneumonia fever. When that fever broke she sank very, very low, so low that life seemed extinct. Then following that, there was a siege of three weeks of some other kind of fever, not known just what it was. During this last three weeks her temperature went as high as 105 under the arm, which they tell us means 106 at the mouth. When she first got seriously low, she was anointed by her father, he being the only elder present. At that and other times, much prayer was had in her behalf. At the time of the break of the pneumonia, the teachers and workers were all in the room in prayer. After much prayer there, some of them retired to another room, and prayed her "through," i. e., they in the other room continued in prayer a long time, and we all felt that it was only that praying that morning that kept the child alive. Then later when her fever would go so high, and it seemed as if she could not endure it, all were called together for prayer, and mark it, every time her fever fell some after prayer was had for her, sometimes more than others, but it fell, and the child had rest then. To us it was nothing other than a wonderful, definite answer to prayer. The child is now fully recovered.

Indeed the Lord has been very good to us here this year, this terrible year of suffering, sickness and death. There has not been any of our worshipers taken away this year by death, and none of the scholars. We have had some very severe cases in the dormitories, but all recovered, and while there is much sickness about us yet, we now believe that with the coming of settled weather there will be better health, and more work done for him.

The spiritual phase of the work seems good at this time. Usually after school closes, and the pupils go home, there is a noticeable drop in a way, in the services. But this year such was not even noticeable. The services are holding up fine now, with as much sickness as there is about us. But better than all, this school year has witnessed the greatest turning to the Lord of any school year. There have been seventeen confessions, some of whom have already been baptized and received into fellowship, and the others will be later. Some of these have already been mentioned, and I will not repeat that. But the thing that was especially pleasing this year in our confessions, was the number of young men, and the apparent genuineness of their conversion. Why in the past we could not reach more young men, has always been a matter of much concern and disappointment. WE FULLY ARE AWARE OF THE FACT THAT IF RIVERSIDE CANNOT PRODUCE ANY MEN WHO WILL CARRY OR HELP CARRY THE GOSPEL ON, THAT THEN THERE WILL BE NO EXCUSE FOR THE CHURCH TO MAINTAIN RIVERSIDE. But it seems as if a better day is coming, for we have succeeded in reaching young men this year, more, yes much more, than ever before. We now have a young man who has pledged his life for service anywhere that his Lord may call him, and he is a fine fellow too, and had been a successful president of our Christian Endeavor. This young man has not completed what Riverside can give him, but this year he has had to drop out of school to help make some money for his folks, and has found employment as brakeman on the railroad, a mighty poor place to develop the spiritual life. Here is a difficulty that we find with some of our young men, who otherwise might be working for the church. But there are other prospects that look quite good now. We hope to report this year some advances along the religious line directly, if health conditions improve as we hope they will. We still have some "flu" about us, also smallpox and measles. We ask for your prayers that we may live in his will, that he may be acceptably glorified by his children in this mountain work. G. E. DRUSHAL.

The First Fruits

The first fruits of the Easter Offering are coming in. At this writing (Friday noon, April 24th) the following churches have reported:

Muncie, Indiana,	$ 31.50
Middlebranch, Ohio,	70.60
Third Church, Philadelphia,	110.00
Cerro Gordo, Ill. (34)	17.40
Coopers Cove, Va.,	3.40
Quicksburg, Va.,	12.76
Roann, Ind.,	150.00
Dayton, Ohio,	363.60
Gretna, Ohio,	72.35
Roanoke, Va.,	57.85
Goshen, Ind.,	240.00
Sidney, Ind.,	46.35
New Paris, Ind.,	72.30
Martinsburg, Pa.,	44.85
Terra Alta, W. Va.,	37.50
Philadelphia, Pa., (1st Ch.)	260.00
Long Beach, Calif.,	$2,550.00

This is not a regular treasurer's report, understood, but it is given here to tell the story of the first fruits of the Easter Offering for 1919. If the first fruits are to be taken as a fair indication, then the greatest Easter Offering in the history of the Brethren church is coming in beyond all doubt. I am not taking time to look up the figures for last year, but practically all these first churches reporting have far exceeded last year's gift. We have not received the money from all of these—just a word as to what the offering was in some cases. Just study these figures, and see how the missionary spirit is growing in our church! Terra Alta has had no pastor for some years, and her church enrollment is only 35 members, and yet she goes more than $1.00 per member. New Paris, that was scarcely on our map before this year, goes over the top with more than $2.00 per member. The Third church of Philadelphia, whose largest offering before amounted to $35.00 goes over the top now with more than $1.50 per member. The First church of Philadelphia has been sending in $1.00 per year heretofore. What has happened to her? Long Beach telegraphs, "Easter Offering over twenty-five hundred and fifty and more coming." May the "more coming" go over $3,000 is my prayer. The above are not just picked churches, but ALL the first reporting. Keep the hall rolling, brethren, and we may go over the $1.00 per member mark, and then we will secure that needed property for Bock and Atkinson in Argentina, and clear off that mortgage for Yoder, send Sickels down immediately to care for that Auto Coach, spread smiles all over the faces of the warriors at "the siege of Brazzaville," and do a lot of other things that will bring the approving smile of the First-and-Greatest-of-All-Missionaries down upon the Brethren church. We are just making this first report that all may rejoice with us in the prospects!! Will those yet to come do as well as these?

LOUIS S. BAUMAN.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

CLAY CITY

Our evangelistic meeting at Clay City is now a matter of history. L. S. Bauman came to us on Monday, March 10, and laid siege to the forces of sin that night, continuing for three weeks. It is almost needless to speak of the powerful broadsides hurled into the enemy's camp, in his characteristic way. But the battle was not an easy one. Clay City is anything but an easy field. However, the Lord was pleased to crown our efforts by giving us the joy of seeing just twenty souls take a definite stand. Of this number two were re-consecrations and two came in the church by relation. Fourteen were received by baptism, and two yet await baptism. Again, among those received were four husbands with their wives, as well as a wife from one home and a husband from another. The others were young people. This we feel is a great victory. But we are conscious of the great responsibility this brings to the church, and wish therefore to ask the brotherhood to pray that we may be faithful and wise in the discharge thereof. This makes a total of thirty-six people who have been received into the church in less than two years, or almost one-half of the present membership.

But the above does not tell the whole story. There are other indications of the dimensions of our victory. For example the splendid hearing accorded Brother Bauman gave a splendid opportunity for bringing our plea before the people of this community in a way which had not been granted us hitherto. And we feel that seed so faithfully sown is bound to yield a most abundant harvest in the months and years to come. Then the financial outcome of the meeting speaks eloquently of its success. Nine free-will offerings were lifted, (with such little urging that Brother Bauman thought we were almost sinning), which aggregated $274.35. And the greater portion of this amount was given by interested outsiders (outside our own membership).

Brother Bauman won his way into the hearts of the people of the community, and we shall be glad to have him with us whenever he can come.

I am also pleased to announce that one of our most splendid young men, Robert R. Goshorn, (now in France), has written me of his determination to offer himself for service on either of our Foreign Mission fields. This is his Easter offering. What will yours be?

GEO. W. KINZIE.

COMPTON AVENUE, LOS ANGELES.

This work at Compton Avenue Church is moving forward. We had the common experience of churches relative to the "flu" but the work is back to normal and from present prospects there are great days ahead for the work here. Since the last report things of more than passing importance have been transpiring. A church constitution was adopted at our last annual business meeting. This meets a long-felt need. The church membership has been revised in preparation for a forward movement. We have learned it is unwise to carry a lot of dead timber when the war against evil is to be waged. At our annual business meeting every department showed a balance on the right side of the ledger. All this in spite of the handicap of the eight weeks' closing on account of the "flu". While other churches of the city were compelled to borrow money to meet their current expenses the loyalty of these people made it possible to meet all our financial obligations besides have something to the good when we were again permitted to begin services. The financial condition of the church was never better. Practically twice as many people as ever before are sharing in the regular weekly contributions. What makes this out of the ordinary is that it is entirely voluntary. Not a single bit of solicitation has been necessary this year to have the people meet the regular financial needs of the church.

All the departments of the work are in fine shape. The Sunday school is doing a fine work. A number of our boys have returned from camp and have added power to our work. Best of all, the Lord has been wonderfully blessing us. On the last Sunday in February, the Holy Spirit was poured out in a truly marvelous way. At our regular services there were twenty-six reconsecrations and six confessions of Christ as Saviour. Never in all my experience have I witnessed such an outpouring. Each Sunday since, with a single exception, we have had confessions. Twice during this time there have been confessions at prayer meeting. Since the last report seventeen have been baptized who have gone to another church. Four who have made confession have not yet been baptized. Home influence is keeping some of these away. Two most excellent people have been received by letter making the total additions to the church since last report nineteen. Besides this the church has taken on new power. Never has the spirit of the Lord been so manifested as now. Sixty were present at the last prayer meeting. All this is acknowledged to be due to the work of the Holy Spirit in our midst in answer to prayer. These people pray as they have never prayed before and they pray as few people have learned to pray. Besides the regular Wednesday evening prayer meeting, the Friday evening cottage prayer meeting, and the home devotions, we have a band of women who meet on Saturday afternoon for two or three hours and a band of men who meet on Saturday night and sometimes pray until the wee hours of the night. Prayer is made for the work in general and especially for the Sunday services. Is it any wonder the Lord is moving things and that souls are being reached? All honor to him who gave himself to save sinners.

A new church building project is being discussed and no one need be surprised if Compton Avenue has a new building within the next few years that will more adequately meet her needs.

We are now planning for our Easter program and Foreign Missionary offering. We are hoping for a larger gift from this church than ever before. "The fields are white unto the harvest" and the call is very definite. We want a small share in the work of saving the lost.

We covet the prayers of the entire brotherhood that we may continue to let him have His way with us.

J. C. BEAL.

GOSHEN, INDIANA

The Goshen church is pleased to have a large number of boys and girls connected with its growing work. Their instruction in the Sunday school is supplemented with training in the Endeavor societies, there being almost a hundred Junior and Intermediates.

The Junior society is the older of the two. During the last quarter twenty-one new members were enrolled. Besides the regular programs the children are drilled in the String of Pearls memory tests, and are making good progress. They are encouraged to help the church, contributing recently two dollars and a half to the parsonage fund.

Seeing the need of a separate organization for the older children we organized an Intermediate society on September 8, 1918. There were seventeen charter members from whom the following officers were selected: President, Fern Miller; vice president, Paul Warner; secretary, Mamie Noel; treasurer, Loren Duker. Since our membership has been increased by sixteen giving us a total of thirty-three. In addition to the use of the regular programs these young persons learn the books of the Bible, The Ten commandments and Beatitudes. They, too, enjoy helping the church, and gave five dollars to the parsonage fund.

The writer superintends both societies, but has a splendid helper in the person of Brother Charles Gill. We find much joy in our work, but, realizing its great importance, desire an interest in the prayers of all Endeavorers. In the name of our boys and girls we extend greetings to all working for "Christ and the church."

MRS. EMMA HESS.

PORTIS, KANSAS

Brother Beachler has come and gone, and we wish him godspeed and strength to finish the remainder of his campaign for Permanent Endowment. He will tell you when our report appears that Portis did not leave him sleep in any of the Kansas mud, and you will discover that there are no flies on the church here, for it is not yet dead; neither is it dying, but living and active, pumping around her share for at least everything in a financial way that is designated in the Four Year Program. It is a joy to serve a church that is not afraid of dying if a few big dollars leave home. Praise God for the Brethren churches that have a vision of the world's need.

While Brother Beachler was here he preached for us as his custom is each evening. His sermons have the awakening jolt, just what is needed for the world today. While he was with us one made the good confession. I continued the meeting for one week after he left and one more accepted the blessed Christ. We had thought to continue the meeting longer but unsettled weather, bad roads and a busy time for the farmers called us to a halt. We felt as though we had made the truth plain and had given men a chance to honor and accept Christ. Good crowds were in attendance when weather and roads permitted.

The Sunday school is about back to normal. One week ago Sunday we had 104 present. I might also add that the S. S. M. M., the S. S. C. E., the Christian Endeavor and the Sunday school, all lined up for their share on the raising of Permanent Endowment. At our recent business meeting I received a unanimous call to serve the church another year. Of course I am staying, one ought to stick by a good thing when he has got it as long as he can. Portis sure knows how to treat a man and make him feel at home. May God's choicest blessings be upon us for the coming year. May he lead all our churches into a greater work.

ROY BRUMBAUGH.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLORIDA

After spending a year and six months in the beautiful sunshine of Florida, we are now about ready to start for Indiana once again. We hope to do some work among the churches this summer. Our first meeting will be at Corinth, beginning May 18th, with Brother Stewart as pastor. This will be our seventh meeting in this church and we are expecting good results and a fine visit among old friends. I have had so many calls during my past ministry to visit some of the smaller churches and always thought I would do so, when I found a little more time. So I hope to give them the preference this summer. I will also act as a supply for some of the churches that have no pastor at present. After June first our address will be South Bend, Indiana. Those writing to me before that date can reach me at 102 S. G. Street, Marion, Indiana.

I am hoping that this may be the best year the church has ever had. Why not fill up the missionary treasury with the surplus money that has been made and let them go ahead in a big way for the Lord? Pray for us.

A. T. WIRICK.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The Northern District of Brethren churches held their annual Conference and Bible Institute at Manteca, California, from March 23d to 30th, inclusive. A hall had been procured for the purpose in which was held the largest and best conference this district has ever known, owing to the fact that we had with us National Moderator W. S. Bell and A. V. Kimmel from the Southern District, as well as our own able ministerial brethren, Francis J. Reagan, N. V. Leatherman, J. Wesley Platt, Roger Darling, C. E. Johnson and G. B. Noag. The Brethren Forward Missionary Movement was kept uppermost in the minds of the leaders of the conference with the result that over 5,000 dollars was raised in a short period on Sunday afternoon for the purpose of establishing a new Brethren church at Manteca, California,* of which Brother Platt was called to have charge as pastor for the following year.

In the course of the conference there were eighteen people who decided for Christ.

It was a spiritual feast to all who attended.

We ask the Brethren throughout the land to pray for the continuance of this effort to extend the work of the Master.

Elders present as delegates to Conference:

Francis J. Reagan, Turlock, California; J. Wesley Platt, Manteca, California; N. V. Leatherman, Ripon, California; C. E. Johnson, Turlock, California; Roger Darling, San Jose, California; Jacob Shank, Jenny Lind, California; D. W. Ronk, Ripon, California; Columbus Ronk, Turlock, California.

AUGUSTA C. MANSFIELD, Secretary.

GARWIN, IOWA

While we have not been heard from lately, there may be a reason. During the epidemic there was nothing to report, and since it has passed we have been too busy to report.

We commenced our services the last Sunday of February and have been able to continue without interruption. We were anxious to get to work and while we were not able to make up some parts that had been missed during the time we were closed, we have commenced with new life and interest.

Contrary to many reports our attendance has been better in the morning, than it was before we closed last fall. Our Sunday school has been increasing in attendance each Sunday since good weather made travel possible. Sunday, April the 20th, we had enrolled in our classes 160. The attendance for the morning church service has been splendid. The main auditorium frequently being comfortably filled.

March 12, when our business meeting was held, we decided to pay off the parsonage indebtedness. Six weeks was set for the raising of the $1,802; in four weeks we were oversubscribed. Some improvements are contemplated and will soon be completed. Our foreign mission offering will be taken April 27. We held a memorial service April 20, for Raymond Peterson, one of our boys and members who made the supreme sacrifice in France. The church was entirely filled on this occasion.

An Easter program was given Sunday evening, April 20, and was appreciated by a large crowd. We now have our plans completed and will start our revival meeting, May the 18th, with Brother Coleman of Leon, Iowa, at the helm. We are looking forward to a great meeting, may we have the interest of the brotherhood?

Considering the fact that we were closed for practically five months, and have had services only six days at the present writing, our progress has been good. With the completing of what we have in view, and have already finished, this church year of only seven months, is going to be one of the best, if not the best years in the history of the Carlton Brethren church. This we attribute to a sincere and hearty co-operation of all.

*We of the parsonage are often remembered by the people by various gifts and presents. Mrs. Ankrum has received a number of gifts and presents from time to time and I have not been overlooked. May we have the interest of the brotherhood at large in the work we are attempting to do for the Kingdom?

FREEMAN ANKRUM.

NEW ENTERPRISE, INDIANA

There has been no report from this church for some time, so we thought we would let the readers of the Evangelist know that we still exist. We took charge of the church about January first as they failed to get a man at the beginning of the Conference Year. There were no services for some months on account of unavoidable hindrances, but the work seems to be taking on new life. We had our Easter service on the 13th. It was a splendid service with some special music, recitations and the regular sermon. Our offering was more than our required amount per capita. The Brethren Evangelist is being placed in every home. The credit for this is due Sister Anderson who is getting the list of subscribers. I am well pleased with the work. We have a fine class of people, zealous in good works. This church had no revival this last winter but we would like to pave the way for some good evangelist this fall or next winter. This is a splendid field.

I would like to say some good things about the Evangelist, if I could say them without the Editor hearing them. Well, you know what I mean. My prayer is that the work in general may take on new life along every line in these last days.

FROM SOUTH AMERICA

Cabrera, Argentina, March 4, 1919.

Dear Readers of "The Evangelist:"

The Apostle Paul said: "For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." In the Argentine Republic countless fields of opportunity are awaiting the "sower." An invitation to make known "the power of God unto salvation" to the people of the neighboring town of Deheza was given us by a sausage seller who called at our door. Before leaving he was handed a pamphlet—"Porciones Escogidas"—containing numerous verses of the Bible. On his next visit he spoke of his interest in the Gospel. Said that the first tidings of the good news had reached him while he was working on the Panama Canal, and that he was now anxious to have us organize a Sunday school in Deheza, for the benefit of his children. The invitation was accepted. A canvass was made of the town, leaving a Gospel at each door. A goodly number of parents spoke favorably of a Sunday school, but no suitable hall was obtainable at the time. Within a few days there came to the rescue the sausage seller, who wrote me that he would help us out in finding a room. On calling at his home I found him repairing his cart. We both managed to put in a stubborn bolt to hold the spring; then we got in for a ride through town, to see if something adaptable to our need could be found. There were few offers. Finally an Italian agreed to rent us a small room with dirt floor for ten pesos a month, but there were no seats. The neighbors promised to lend us chairs and benches on each Sunday morning to be returned promptly. On the first Sunday (in September) eight children came out. Then there were ten, twelve and fourteen, etc. Within a few weeks there would certainly be a school of thirty or forty, so we thought, but there was an adversary, and he is still with us.

A neatly dressed young man came to Sunday school one morning. By the hush that fell over some of the children it was plain that our visitor exerted influence over them. At the close of the session he greeted us cordially and went his way. I was told that our visitor was the school teacher who had come to spy out those present, and that he had started a campaign of opposition against us by stating that the third chapter of St. John which had been distributed contained questionable reading for the young people, and also that he had warned the parents that all children who attended our school would not be tolerated in the public school. The result is, that four families have withdrawn, and that our loyal children are compelled to endure the taunts of their playmates as well as the threats and slights of the teacher, for six days a week in order to study the Word of God for one hour on Sunday morning. The adversary has been successful in breaking up a private school conducted by a gentleman who was faithful in attendance and who now finds himself obliged to seek work in his profession amongst isolated ranches in the country. In visiting with the families I find that the public school teacher threatens all Protestant children with expulsion, and that he hopes to convince everybody that our religion is deceptive and foolish. I am constrained to name our adversary as one of "the enemies of the cross of Christ."

The door of opportunity in Deheza has not been shut, nor will it be. We need some one to contribute towards the rent and seats. Recently we located in a hall with a board floor. The prayers of all who may read these lines will "save some" who are now reading the Bible. More workers are needed in this district. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth laborers into his harvest."

Later I shall write of the mission in Cabrera. Pray for us.

EDWARD G. ATKINSON.

FALLS CITY, NEBRASKA

The following is a clipping from the Falls City Journal, March 24, 1919:

Pastor Remembered

At the close of the evening service at the Brethren church yesterday, John Lichty, one of the members arose and in a neat speech presented the pastor, Rev. H. F. Stuckman with a roll of money totalling $300. Of course the good person could do little more than say "thank you" to the ones responsible. Rev. Stuckman has been pastor of the local church for five years and in that time has won the confidence and esteem of the church and community. His friends took this means of expressing the thanks for his service. The gift was entirely independent of the adequate salary which this church pays its pastor promptly. No doubt but what Rev. Stuckman will be in a position to buy Victory Bonds when the time arrives.

SECTIONAL CONFERENCE

One of the Ohio Sectional conferences will be held at the Fairhaven church on May 25, with the Homerville church co-operating. The Brethren of Zion Hill and Rittman, though they have had their conference, are invited to attend the Fairhaven conference. The work of the Four Year Program and the various other state activities will receive attention here as at other similar conferences. The members of the two participating congregations should be out in full force.

FILLMORE, CALIFORNIA

Dear Evangelist Readers:

It has been some weeks since you have heard from us but we are still on the map and doing business for the King. It seems hard sometimes for this is a hard field, it is a real man's job. We are located in the midst of the oil fields. And they are about like mining districts. Many of you know what it is to do Christian work in a mining country. There are a good many fine people here, but a lot of godless ones too. We have visited a good many homes that had no Bibles. We have sold and given away quite a number of Bibles and Testaments. Many of these people came to California to make money but it seems that more of them came here to have a good time. They left their Christianity on the east side of the Rockies. I am often made to think and say that these folks are money mad and amusement crazy.

But through the vision of Southern California Mission Board and the prayers of God's people and the loyalty of a small group of believers here at Fillmore, we go on to victory in his name who loves us and bought us with his blood. And we still believe in blood atonement and the vicarious death on the cross. For these reasons and many others we again wish to report a meeting here.

We secured the promise of Brother N. W. Jennings and his wife to help us in an evangelistic campaign. Most of you know Brother Jennings and have heard his burning messages about Jesus, the old rugged cross and his lovable way of presenting the gospel truth. On March 23 we opened the fight and from that time to April 13th, three weeks, we kept it up. There are many things against us as a people here, but if God be for us who can be against us. The crowds were good from the start and kept up all the time, notwithstanding it was a busy time. Brother Jennings brought the messages with his usual power and on Friday night the close of the first week when the invitation was given seven came forward and made the great confession. At the close of the three weeks thirty had made confession of Christ; twenty-three of these have been baptized and received into the church. Several await baptism and a few will go to the other local churches. With all this bitter fight against Satan and his hosts, we got a great victory.

I wish the whole Brethren church might have as large a vision of God's work as these six churches of Southern California. I tell you the Brethren church would not hover long around the 25,000 membership but would leap ahead. Say, Brethren, let us buckle on the armor a little tighter and pray a little more and stick close to the teachings of Jesus, because as I go among the people here, I find a great desire to know the truth.

Let me say something here about the largeness of our field. There is no true immersionist church for 65 miles south of us, none for more than 100 miles north, none to the seashore west and none east for many miles. This seems strange to the people here. They come in crowds to see us baptize. Last night at the Wednesday night prayer service we had baptism and the church was more than half full of people. They asked me many questions about this strange baptism. Brother Jennings had endeared himself to these people during the three weeks' meeting, so we invited him to remain over the 14th of April and help us in the communion service which was a great blessing to the church. We only have 63 members now and when the tables were filled we had 60 surrounding them. Can the larger churches show a better percentage of membership communing than that? There were only four visiting members here, for we are 65 miles from any of our other churches. The visiting members were Brother and Sister Jennings, Brother N. C. Nielsen of the Long Beach church, and Sister Ruth McClain of the First Church of Los Angeles who played for us during the meetings. Pray for us.

S. LOWMAN.

NEW PARIS, INDIANA

The Easter missionary offering of the Sunday school of the First Brethren church of New Paris, Indiana, was $72.31, with an attendance of thirty-six, or an average of over $2.00 per scholar.

The school decided to divide the amount equally between the African and South American fields.

Although small in numbers, we feel that the Lord is with us and has blessed us in our work.

CARL E. KASER, Secretary.

COMMUNION NOTICES

The Brethren at Roanoke, Indiana, will observe holy communion May the 12th. Neighboring Brethren are invited to come and enjoy this most blessed service with us.

W. F. JOHNSON, Pastor.

The Fairhaven, Ohio, church will observe holy communion on Sunday evening, May 11th. All members are urged to be present and neighboring Brethren are invited.

B. F. OWEN, Pastor.

The Brethren at Berne, Indiana, will hold their spring communion May the 19th. A welcome awaits any Brethren who will come and enjoy these blessings with us. Any one from

1719 Two Hundred Years of Brethrenism in America 1919

A New and Up-to-date Brethren Day Program has been prepared for the celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of Brethrenism in America. A letter containing full particulars has been mailed to every pastor in the brotherhood. If not received within a few days write the undersigned for a copy of the letter. Let us make the year 1919 memorable in the history of Brethrenism by an appropriate celebration of this bi-centennial and a great forward movement.

Business Manager's Corner

A WOMAN TO THE RESCUE

Many a local church is largely dependent upon the women members of the congregation for the spiritual life and activities of the church. When Paul and his companion went to the place beside the river "where prayer was wont to be made" and spoke to "the women who resorted thither" he met a situation that has been altogether too common throughout the whole history of the church. But God bless these faithful women. Just how the church would get along without them it is hard to say.

The Brethren Publishing Company is indebted to one of these faithful ones for one more church being added to the Evangelist Honor Roll. When Brother Ditch sent in the list of subscriptions that placed the New Enterprise church, near Roann, Indiana, upon the Roll he said "the credit for this is due to Sister Anderson who secured the list." This is characteristic of the modesty of Brother Ditch whom for the twenty-five years we have known him has always been a model of humility; but we wish to thank both Brother Ditch and Sister Anderson for this good work done at New Enterprise. It increased the number of subscribers at New Enterprise just SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY percent.

Indiana now heads the list of all the conference districts in the number of churches on the Honor Roll with TWENTY-THREE churches on the list. However there are still seventeen churches in Indiana that had better say, "no twenty-three for me" and proceed to get rid of that unlucky number.

Southern California to the Front

While Indiana is in the lead in regard to the actual number of churches on the Honor Roll, Southern California is at the head of all the conferences in that every church in that district is now on the Honor Roll and the contagion is spreading northward and has already secured a hold on the northern conference district and the first church in that district to win a place on the Honor Roll is Turlock, which we gladly add to the roll this week. Brother J. Francis Reagan is pastor here and we have known for several months that he was after a place for his church and now it has become an accomplished fact. Thank you, Brother Reagan, it was a real victory for Christ and the church and also for you. The eastern churches had better watch their steps just a little or the great state of California will "pass under the wire" ahead of them all with every church in the entire state holding a place of honor in this campaign for FIVE THOUSAND subscribers to the Evangelist before August first. Who will be next? There is always room at the top, but the next fell low must climb higher. Now everybody climb.

R. R. TEETER,

Business Manager.

The Greatest Individual In The World

The greatest individual in the world is a comparatively inconspicuous person, and is a member of the so-called weaker sex. She is not to be found in the halls of fame. She does not lead armies forth to conquer the world. She does not rule great empires. She does not make it her business to amass immense fortunes, nor to direct the mighty industries of the world. She may in a measure share in all these, but they are not the things that make her great. True greatness is measured not by the possessions, nor power, nor eminence one enjoys, but by the quality of life, the self-forgetfulness in service, the permanence of influence and the positive contribution to the things of abiding worth. The one individual in all the world whose life turns quickest after God, gives self most when there is no hope of return, fashions life and influences character most largely and permanently and out of whose life flows forth the stream of life as from none other is mother,—humble, timid, unassuming mother, whose life is often hid away in our homes.

Mother is greatest in love. Her love is deepest, purest and divinest of all. This is inevitably true because her relation to the child is most intimate and her sacrifice has been greatest. She is closer to the child than any other. Of her own life she gives it sustenance and growth. Its every need is met by her motherly wisdom and its every comfort and satisfaction is made possible by her loving watchfulness. She lives with it and for it constantly. During the first few years of its life she is scarcely separated from it day or night. No one knows its life like she knows it and no one can love it as she can. She pours forth her very soul upon it. Furthermore she has paid the price of a great love. The greatness of love depends upon the price it costs. No great love can be cheaply purchased. And she who has paid most dearly loves most deeply. She who has gone down into the valley of the shadow for the prize she sought knows its value more than any other person in all the world.

Who can understand the love of a mother, save possibly another mother? And most unlikely, what man can understand a mother's love? It is beyond his power to comprehend. He has not been able to fathom the depths, or compute the strength, or measure the endurance of true mother love. It matters not where he goes, he cannot get beyond its reach; it follows him to the last and to the depths. Man can simply marvel in the presence of true mother love; it was not given him to understand it. God has given to mother the power of loving in relation to her offspring such as he has not given to man. I would that we could understand it, for then we should better understand the love of God himself. After God's love mother love is the strongest, deepest, broadest thing in all the world. True love wherever found is the greatest force in the universe, and in mother it finds its fullest and most perfect human realization. Love is her strongest virtue and proves her greatest power.

Mother is greatest in influence. She is most constantly with the child, is most closely related to it and she is most completely identified with its life. Most naturally her influence would be greater. There is no desire to minimize the influence of the father; there is no need of it. But during the first ten years of the child's life and even before it sees the light of day, mother's influence is beyond comparison. During those tender years she can mold its little life almost as she may choose. For good or ill, she influences the child of her own flesh and blood. She may by her temperate life, her sweet disposition and her lofty soul send forth the life of her life with tendencies that will prove its strength and stay in later life, or by disregard for right living, by giving way to spasms of ill temper and by feasting the mind on vicious novels, unwholesome picture shows and unworthy thoughts, she can send her child out into life evilly disposed and to battle with unsurmountable handicaps through life. She may most wisely train the child as it grows from year to year and bind it inseparably to herself in such confidence that it will come to her to share its joys and sorrows, to get help in its difficulties and guidance in its perplexities, to tell its childish ambitions and its youthful dreams. She may lead the child step by step to confide implicitly in her and prove herself so invariably worthy of confidence that it will ever come to her first for information to satisfy its inquiring mind and as the child passes through the critical period of self-discovery she will be in a position to know its problems and to guide it wisely. Or she may by her own indiscreet conduct and her disappointment of the child cause it to refuse to confide in her and thus permit a barrier to grow up between them so that she will find it impossible for her to be her child's instructor and adviser just when it needs her help most. Before the pulpit or the Sabbath school begins, mother has already begun and has been weaving the plastic wax of character for weal or for woe, for heaven or for hell. A prodigious power this; the same power that sent Samuel out of the godly home of Hannah to bless the world, also sent the wicked Ahab out of the godless home of the unscrupulous and godless Jezebel to curse the world. Both "walked in the way of his mother."

Thank God for the noble women who do realize the wonderful possibilities of their influence for good and use that influence to the greatest extent for God and the right. There are many mothers who are so fashioning the young lives entrusted to their care that they will be noble in heart and faithful in service. If we could know how many men owe their success in life to ideals and inspiration imparted to them by wise Christian mothers, I doubt not we should divide the honors more equally. At the starting point of a vast majority of successful Christian lives stands a Christian mother. God bless her whose ministry is older and deeper and more potent than that of the pulpit. She who presides over the cradle and impresses the infant soul with its first gospel truths exercises the greatest influence of all.

Mother not only exercises the greatest influence, she also bears the greatest responsibility. This follows logically. Turn over every opportunity and you will find on the other side a corresponding responsibility. If the mother is supreme in her power to influence and mold life, she must also be supreme in her responsibility to exercise such influence. What a sacred honor motherhood is; but we must also say in the next breath what an awful responsibility it incurs.

Notwithstanding the many good mothers for whom the world is grateful, there are found everywhere mothers who are negligent of their duties. The sad conditions of much of our young manhood and young womanhood is the result. Many a mother's heart has been broken by a wayward son or daughter because she has neglected duty or considered her responsibility lightly. Boys have been permitted to spend most of their time on the streets or in loafing places away from home and there have been led step by step into sin until they have brought disgrace upon themselves and their homes. Girls are permitted to tramp the streets at night unaccompanied, or accompanied by other girls as foolish and unstable as themselves until they come in touch with influences that soil the soul and make it impossible for the mind ever to be as pure as it once was. Such things are happening every day through the neglect of mothers and fathers. Fathers are doubtless more often blameable for the waywardness of their boys than are mothers and there is no desire to relieve them of their responsibility. Father and mother must stand side by side in responsibility for their children. But mother loves deepest and exercises the most subtle influence, and during the tender years has the children under her care more constantly than father.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

You will see by looking on the Christian Endeavor page that May is set for another "drive." This time it is "Tenth Legioners."

We have changed the size of type and measure of column for the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor pages temporarily. This step is taken in view of some plans we have which will be advanced by the change. More later about this.

Another splendid report comes to us from the Compton Avenue church of Los Angeles. More converts and more consecrations to service are reported. They are having a continual demonstration of the presence of the Holy Spirit. It pays to spend time in prayer.

A report from Brother Anderson tells us that the people of College Corner church were eager for the foreign mission offering and that the work there is in good condition, with every department working toward the goals of the Four Year Program. Brother Anderson also announces the closing of his pastorate at Dutchtown.

Brother W. R. Deeter tells of the continued progress of the work of the Oakhill, Indiana, church. Easter Sunday was celebrated by the baptism of more new members. There is talk of a new church at this place also. Let the good work continue, it speaks of intensive growth as well as extensive.

Our college correspondent, Brother W. R. Deeter has some interesting items to report this week; read them. Its a good plan to keep posted as to what is going on at our own school. Everybody is more deeply interested in it since so many have made investments there.

Brother Carpenter appears again with another of his characteristically interesting series of mission news. Brother Carpenter has the happy faculty of writing a lot in a short space and in a catchy way. Read what he says about Krypton's Foreign mission offering, the new station, the need of more workers, self-support, etc.

Brother Carpenter reports the revival meeting at Peru, Indiana, led by Brother Thomas as evangelist. It was a hard fought battle, but victory came. The church experienced a reviving and a number of members were added to the church. There has been a steady growth at the Little Brown Church and this gives it an added boost. God bless Brother Carpenter and his faithful flock, and Brother Thomas as he continues his evangelistic labors.

Brother I. B. Tront of Berlin, Pennsylvania, reports accessions to the church since last report and states that the Sunday school is in a healthy growing condition. They are talking about a larger building to accommodate the increased number of scholars; that speaks well for Berlin and her pastor. May God prosper them still more in their good work. Brother Tront also speaks appreciatively of his visit to Dayton, in a separate article.

It is a pleasure for us to present our big family of readers a very interesting report from Brother Yoder this week. In the envelop Brother Yoder enclosed a post card picture of their Sunday school taking an outing, also a card on which is printed in Spanish what we guess are (for we don't know the Spanish language) "The Ten Commandments of God in the New Testament." The references are also given.

We don't often have the privilege of reading articles from the pen of our fathers in the church, such as Brother Swihart is, but he grants us that rare privilege this week. You will be anxious to read his interesting article. We are glad to have these veterans of the cross with us and hope that the few who remain may be permitted to abide with us for a good season yet.

We have at last caught up with our church news and hope to be able to publish your news letters quite promptly after they reach us. So send them on. And if you possibly can, send them so as to reach us the early part of the week. It will enable us to get our manuscript ready for the typesetter promptly. We want to say that we sincerely appreciate the co-operation we have been receiving. Thank you, friends, all.

A report from Brother Cover shows that the Hagerstown, Maryland, church is in a healthy condition and growing. Under the efficient leadership of the pastor and his wife, the Sunday school is being developed and enlarged. Brother Cover has been very successful in training workers, and he is not neglecting this important part of the pastor's work at his present charge. A two weeks' revival effort preceeding Easter closed with the communion service and a number of converts.

The Mansfield Mission under the enthusiastic leadership of Brother Rowsey of the College is meeting with splendid success. He and Brother Owen, also of the College recently held a revival meeting, Brother Owen doing the preaching. The results speak for the meeting in more ways than one. Besides receiving a goodly number of converts into the fellowship of the church, these young preachers launched a campaign for the paying off of the church debt. And they went "over the top." May the gracious Father lead Mansfield on from victory to victory.

It is our pleasure to have a letter from Brother Stuckman. He assures us that something is taking place (and in an orderly manner) there all the time, and we believe him, because reports from that congregation have preceded his to the same effect. A great Easter offering was made at that place and an enjoyable communion service held on Easter Sunday night. He seems fearful about reporting in full about that surprise gift to the pastor. Brother Stuckman, you can't keep it; it's out already. But we wouldn't advise any one to try to get your job with an expression of confidence like that to rest on.

Some one asked Raphael how he made his wonderful pictures, and he replied, "I dream dreams and see visions, and then I paint my dreams and visions." We shall never have "A Greater Brethren Church" until we do some dreaming of larger things and get a vision of our larger possibilities and then try to realize those dreams and visions. Every church must catch a vision of service and enlargement for its local field beyond anything ever thought possible, then progress will be made as certainly as the youth grows into his visions of manhood.

Mothers Of The Bible

By Miss Marie Lichty—Editor, The Woman's Outlook

The Bible stands out to us as an inspired account of the dealings of men. We are told that the term men includes both men and women and we accept it. Yet we further believe that when we think of the Bible, if our thoughts turn to characters at all, they reflect upon the lives of men,—not women. The percentage of women mentioned therein is small as compared with the names of men mentioned. But such a fact does not bar us from the appreciation of the women who are pictured.

Many tributes have been paid to womankind and justly have they been. The emphasis upon a Mother's Day is highly fitting to those who have known motherhood. And now with the return of this day our minds turn anew to the praise and appreciation of motherhood. But is it not enjoyable to look back to those who mothered the men of Bible times? Though we admit that the real content of our sacred book is composed of the works of men we cannot deny the fine share women have had with their indirect influence. To Bible mothers did not come the opportunity of direct leadership but through that continual avenue of influence and inspiration mothers have been leaders through their sons. What finer example of a consecrated mother could you find than that of Hannah, the mother of Samuel? Hannah had wanted a son that she might "give him to the Lord all the days of his life." Her prayer was answered and her promise kept. As they were accustomed to go up to Shiloh once a year to offer sacrifice and to perform the vows they had made since their previous visit, Hannah took the child as soon as he was old enough to do without her care. In fulfillment of her pledge he was to be given up to the service of Jehovah, and to dwell in his presence. We are told that the pious surrender was solemnized by a special consecration. A bullock was slain at Shiloh, loaves, flour, and wine presented as an offering, and Samuel handed over to the charge of Eli; his fond mother breaking away from him, doubtless with many tears, after uttering the famous hymn quoted in Mary's magnificat. Hannah was a mother with a mother's heart and memory. Even though her child was apart from her she never failed to take up to him a coat each year that she went to Shiloh. And Samuel, in turn was grateful for his sonship and became so endeared to his mother's gift, that he wore it, for his mother's sake to his latest years.

Think again of Naomi who was mother indeed to the two daughter-in-laws so early widowed. Ruth and Orpha acknowledged her help and mothering. Especially so did Ruth when she chose to make Naomi's people her people. Naomi had been worthy of the love of her daughters and they could not bear to leave her. But Naomi, kind and loving as she was, was no less practical. Marriage was the one great hope of the sex in those days. So Naomi entreated again that they go back to their home. Orpha felt the common sense of it and turned back but Ruth clung to her mother-in-law until many years later when she remarried and became the mother of one in the line of David.

The story of Moses in the bulrushes is old and beautiful but what part surpasses that where his sister, Miriam, at the direction of the princess procures Moses' own mother as the Hebrew woman who should care for the child. What part of Moses' real training, so evident in later life, can we not attribute to his mother's love and guidance? Imagine the gratitude and joy of the mother, called to care for her own in safety, when the terrible decree of slaughter was being enforced.

The name of David's mother has not been recorded but the writers tell us that we have her illustrious son's testimony that she was a godly woman, for he twice expressly speaks of her as a "handmaid of Jehovah." One in particular says, "could it, indeed have been doubted, even had he not done so, that he owed his early religiousness to her who had the training of his infancy, or that he is another gift of a mother's piety to the church of God. The very name she gave him—David—her "darling"—tells the story of her early years; how he clung to her as only a youngest child can, drank in her words, and reflected her gifts and graces. He may have taken his hero-soul from his father, but I cannot help thinking that, like so many other poets and saints, he owed his intellectual and spiritual greatness to his mother.

Distasteful as were the characters of women such as Athalia and Jezebel, yet their wickedness is lost sight of when we think of Mary and Elizabeth. Of all examples of motherhood, that of Mary, the mother of Christ stands out resplendent in the beauty of those qualities which characterized her. Closely akin to her was Elizabeth the mother of John.

Great mothers! Great sons! The mother's name may be forgotten but her character is ever present in the life of the son whose name is known and whose work is good.

Mothers Of Great Men. By Lucile Teeter

The introduction and underlying theme of this subject could be expressed no more fittingly than by this quotation from Emerson—"Men are what their mothers make them. You may as well ask a loom which weaves huckaback why it does not make cashmere, as expect poetry from an engineer, or a chemical discovery from that Jobber." Michelet expressed a similar thought: "It is the general rule, that all superior men inherit the elements of superiority from their mothers." Not alone the direct physical and mental inheritance but the position of the mother as the earliest influence and instructor in a child's life has by many distinguished men been considered as one of the chief causes contributory to their success and greatness.

Perhaps Lincoln's appreciation of his mother is one of the best known examples. His statement of this influence, "All that I am or hope to be I owe to my angel mother," is very similar to that of John Quincy Adams. "All that I am my mother made me." It is quite generally known that Lincoln's mother was of assistance and inspiration to him in gaining his elementary education, and while less is known of the mother of Adams, such a statement by so eminent a man is proof of her splendid qualities in influence upon the life of her son.

Lord MacCauley, in a tribute to his mother speaks of the memory of many evenings in which she read to him whatever was suitable to his age. So is it not very probable that to her might be traced his interest in and impetus to enter upon a literary career?

Henry Clay after the death of his mother, it is said, rarely met his constituents without some mention of her of whom he always spoke as a model of maternal character and womanly excellence.

Ruskin directly attributes much of his literary taste to the influence of his mother in these words, "My mother's influence in molding character was conspicuous. She forced me to learn daily long chapters of the Bible by heart. To that discipline and patient, accurate resolve, I owe not only much of my general power of taking pains, but the best part of my taste for literature." He also spoke of his home training thus, "Nothing was ever promised me that was not given; nothing ever threatened me that was not inflicted, and nothing ever told me that was not true." These two statements alone certainly give an excellent characterization of a splendid mother.

It is said that wherever the name of Thomas Gray, author of "Elegy in a Country Churchyard," is known is also spread the memory of his mother's virtues. Her character he immortalized by this inscription, "The careful, tender mother of many children, one of whom alone had the misfortune to survive her."

Tributes to Mother

Our Mother. By Walter O. Nischwitz

As we approach the day that has been set aside in memory of and for the purpose of praising our mothers, we come to more fully realize what they mean to us. Just what does your mother mean to you? To me our mothers are the best earthly friends we are privileged to have. Think with me of the faith they have had in us and the loyalty they have shown. When we have gone astray and our mothers' hearts have been grieved by our own conduct, has any one been able to convince them that there was no chance left for us? Emphatically no, for it is at this time that our mothers reveal fully that which is akin to our Maker—mother love. If we could only go to the depths of this love and see all that is involved in it, what different lives we would live. Mother has all her interests centered on you throughout your life, although you may not be conscious of it. At times we become rebellious, thinking that our mothers are dealing too severely with us, but as we grow older and look back on those beautiful days spent with mother, we know that she was right. When we meet with success in life and try to discover the sources of our success, one word stands uppermost in our minds. It is MOTHER. We follow her tender, ever willing hand from the cradle up to maturity and exclaim with Lincoln, "All that I am and all that I ever hope to be I owe to my angel mother." How true this is with us. But does your mother mean all of that to you? If not, why not? Simply because you fail to appreciate all that she has done for you. What a pitiful sight it is to see a boy or girl, man or woman forsake their mother. Think how she feels then, after she has done all that was in her power to do for you. Has ever a man or woman acquired the highest success in life, who has deserted his or her mother? Roosevelt expressed the absolute truth when he said, "Show me the man who loves and cares for his mother and I will show you a man who will be successful in life." So let us be ever faithful and true to the one who is willing to sacrifice her all for us and best of all show her your appreciation on Mothers' Day and forever, for all she has done for you.

The Debt I Cannot Pay. By Harold Beaver

If I were hanged on the highest hill,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!
I know whose love would follow me still,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!

Many are the tributes paid to warriors, statesmen, poets and musicians, but our obligations to these can in no way compare with the debt we owe to our mothers. No poem is half so beautiful as the poem mother taught, and no music is half so sweet as the sweet lullabies that mother sang. Mother! The name is far above all other earthly names. She charms our fancies and stops our fears. Mother! She was the refuge of our childhood days. It is the memory of mother that gives most sweetness to the recollection of childhood's happy days.

Though of less frequent occurrence there may be mentioned men of prominence whose mothers have had the opposite influence. Lord Byron, with all his eccentricities and faults of a nevertheless brilliant mind is commonly recognized as a result of the negative influence of a mother's character upon him.

If a careful study were made of the character-development of all distinguished men, it would be shown in various marked ways the part which their mothers played in the attainment of their success, for "It is generally admitted, and very frequently proven that virtue and genius, and all the natural good qualities which men possess, are derived from their mothers."

Ashland, Ohio.

The influence of mother is the one great factor in the nation's life. Her influence in the home can make or mar the lives under her care, and through her she effects the nation. Some one has said that back of the throne is the nation, back of the nation is the state, back of the state is the home and the mother is the foundation of the home. It is impossible to overestimate the influence of mother on the home, state and nation, because the ideals and aims that mother cherishes for her children are mighty spurs to them to do their best to attain them. It is mother that brings out that which is best in us all and thus fashions society in all its departments.

The measure of mother's love cannot be found except in the great love that led God to give his Son to save a lost world; no love is greater than her love except that love. Though we sink to the depths of sin, mother's love will follow us. And the memory of her prayers and the charm of her life will lead us back to righteousness.

Mother's love everywhere is strong. In the animal kingdom, the mother will care for her young, protect them and fight till she dies to save their lives if necessary. There is no love like mother's. If there is one thing outside of God's love that should compel us on to a great, good and noble end, it is mother's love.

Mother. By Mrs. Helen Vanator

When one's childhood home has been true and sweet its memories never can be effaced. Its teaching may go long unheeded, sin may sweep over the soul, life may be shattered and broken, but the memories of that early home life live on like the solitary star burning in the gloom of the night. Mother's voice of love and prayer comes back like a song in the night. All the reverence of your soul is kindled into deepest, purest admiration as you recall the love and sacrifice showered upon you. The gray hairs and the furrowed brow are testimonies of her care and toil for you. She lost her youthful freshness and beauty in her self-denying toil and suffering for your sake. The time to show your affection and gratitude is along the years, while mother is living and treading earth's paths. If you strew thorns now, why bear flowers to the grave? Kindness to the living is better than tears of penitence over the dead. The best monument for grateful affection to erect is a noble, beautiful life, a joy to the heart and an honor in the eyes of fond parental hope.

"Still fond memory points our hearts to thee,
And paint the pleasures of thy peaceful home;
While duty bids us all thy griefs assuage,
And smooth the pillow of thy sinking age."

Mother. By Miss Margaret Banghart

It has been said that the three greatest words in the English language are, mother, home and heaven. It would be hard to pick from these the one which is the greatest but when you are lonesome, homesick and blue your thoughts always turn to mother. Among the names that have been made the most of in the last few years is "mother." Poems have been written and songs have been composed about her. And well they might be for who but mother has had the worries and sacrifices of war? It is mother who takes away the troubles and cares and it is mother who always loves you regardless of how far away you have wandered. It is she who always stands with open arms to welcome you back again. An instance of the great love of mother is told of Rizpah, wife of King Saul, who when her sons were hanged stayed near the bodies from "beginning of harvest until water poured on them from heaven." She watched that no wild beast or bird came near them night or day.

"If I were hanged on the highest hill,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!
I know whose love would follow me still,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!
If I were drowned in the deepest sea,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!
I know whose tears would come down to me,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!"

Tribute to Mother. By Miss Carrie M. Stoffer

Mother! How beautiful that name sounds on our ears! What memories it awakens in our minds of childhood's happy days with mother always near us! It was she who shared our joys and sorrows. It was her gentle voice that soothed us to sleep at eventide. It has been her love that has guided us in the past and that will remain with us to guide us afloat. What can be more beautiful than the love of a mother for her children! That love which never wavers! That love which always trusts and forgives! That love which approaches the sublime, the infinite! What can be more noble than the sacrifices for those she holds dear! She often gives life itself that her children may live. Willingly she gives to them her all but yet does not think of reward. So silently and bravely she bears her part that we can say with Joaquin Miller, "The bravest battle that ever was fought, was fought by the mothers of men." Then too, how many can say with Abraham Lincoln, "All that I am,

I owe to my angel mother." That quiet influence with which she surrounds her children in those impressionable years can never be erased. It lives on through the years ever inspiring and guiding. For all of this immeasurable service, we can but express our appreciation,—the reward can come only from an all wise Father who rewards all.

An Appreciation Of Mother. By Clayton Starn

We are glad for this another Mother's Day on which we can express our appreciation for our dear mothers. Her noble influence means much to us all through life and will mean much after she has departed to that realm from which none ever return. We often wonder when we have come to mature life why we did not appreciate mother more, and why we were so rude at times during our younger days. And we wonder what we might have been had it not been for mother's tireless efforts and tender care. She has spent many a moment in silent prayer for us, has endured many an hour of pain in our behalf, has answered every cry of pain and given us many a cheery word. Mother! How sad it is that we do not appreciate this maternal love as we should until she is gone. Then we breathe the words of that beautiful song:

"Mother, come back from the echoless shore,
Make me a child again, just as of yore.
Over my slumbers your loving watch keep,
Rock me to sleep, mother! Rock me to sleep!"

God pity the homes that have no true mother. If there are criminals and vagabonds today, it is largely due to the kind of homes and mothers those people had. Some go wrong in spite of a mother's training and in direct disobedience to her advice. Some young people get the idea that mother's ideas are not good and that her company is not the kind that will help them up in society. They feel just a little bit ashamed of mother when other young associates are around. God forbid that we should ever be ashamed of mother. It should be our great privilege and joy to have her presence. And may we so live that when she shall leave us here, we may in God's good time meet her in that Great Reunion.

That Doughboy Religion. By Dr. Charles A. Bame

I presume that Judge Lindsey has had his supreme satisfaction over his recent assault on churches and religion. His commendation by a leading preacher of one of the most Biblical of the churches ought to quite offset the severe criticism administered by another of the church leaders. It is however amazing to me that such commendation should come from any lover of the church. Lindsey went to Westminster Abbey and saw a few scattered pewholders and no religion. He went to the trenches where he met a man who had been four years a burglar; another who had been convicted as a thief; another who had "promoted schemes to rob and exploit great masses of people who had all been converted to the new religion of war." Well, if that's the kind of religion to which they had been converted, all right. But to think that that could be recommended to our people in our church paper by a leader among us as to the point, is more than I can allow. That may be a part of the creed of the new religion; it is not a part of the religion of Christ. It may be a part of the religion we shall be asked to accept; but we are also asked to accept paganism. But be it far from me or my brethren to commend it! The plea of Judge Lindsey as well as Doctor Gillin is that we shall not over-emphasize the salvation of the soul to the exclusion of the salvation of society. Now, the question I'd like to ask these promoters of the salvation of society is how shall it be done apart from the salvation of the individual. We must learn the "religion of service" says Lindsey; who in the Brethren church teaches else? Would Doctor Gillin have us drop our preaching concerning the doctrines he mentions to save society? Or, shall we go on preaching these doctrines in order that the lessons they teach shall be gained by society. If so, why commend a salvation that is not in accord with the plan of the word of God. Lindsey says "one of the most courageous had been one of the worst of 'sinners' in times of peace." So, what conclusion can one come to but that he thinks courage made of him a Christian? Will the Doctor who commends the article commend that? The crux of the whole affair is that we shall cut loose from the old standards and accept the new. All during the war, we have been hearing that these soldier boys will remake the world when they return. I have been saying so myself; but when the preachers and moralists of the church begin to ask that we let loose of the "landmarks" of our history and accept those set up by the "religion of war," I am ready to part company and stay by the revelation of the Book. By what new process can we save society wholesale? I am ready for the answer and ready to act on it, if it can be shown. But the fact is, we have found no better way of saving society than to take them single-file as did the Savior. Communism has been tried and tried in the name of Christ. Asceticism has been tried in the same holy name. Social movements in our great cities have tried the wholesale method and, the doctor knows well, came to the Men and Religion Forward Movement a few years ago and confessed their need of religion to finish the task. Now, Bolshevism makes its effort and the worst condition in what the world thought was civilization is the result. No, the wholesale method is not the one. There is no method known to man by which the "salvation of society" can be accomplished save the one all Brethren have been using all their history and it is needless for us to try to break off a method which is slow for the sake of following a whim that has no foundation in fact. "Service" has been one of the biggest words in our church vocabulary. Duty is akin; and where on earth do you find that word more strongly emphasized than in the Dunkard fraternity. No, we do not strain out the gnat and swallow the camel when we stay close to the teachings (doctrines) of Jesus Christ even though it happen to contain the doctrine of post-or per-millennialism.

For years I have been preaching that there must come a social readjustment. The fact that a man by keen generalship of his fellow-men can start with nothing and in 30 years have millions of dollars which they have earned for him makes for social inequality and starts the movement that we now know as Bolshevism. I have even suffered criticism and censure for preaching that these wrongs must be righted; but that did not take me away from the teachings of our church nor of the Christ. It did not lead me to castigate the preachers nor cast reflections on the church as it has Judge Lindsey. "Church forms" are needed to the establishment of religion else the Great Teacher would not have given them by his own example; without the form, we soon lose all else. "The body without the spirit is dead; so the spirit without the body has no home. The body is the temple of the spirit. The ordinance is the window through which we look for and receive the gift. John 15:5 with verse 10. The Four Year Program has already done wonders for the church. One leader said recently that it had done more than its promoters had ever expected of it. It has done good and no harm. Brethren, stick to the program and the ordinances. They are not contrary to the gospel. They point in the right direction. Until we are shown a better way, let's stick to the salvation of society by the best method the world has ever found—the way of the cross and the church—preaching the gospel to EVERY CREATURE.

Evangelism of the Early Days. By J. H. Swihart

In treating this subject I hardly know just what course to pursue that might be of interest to readers of the Evangelist. Of course what I may say will apply exclusively to the early evangelism of the Dunkard fraternity all divisions included. That the spirit of evangelism has existed within the church for many years has been evident to the writer. Once when in conversation with a German Baptist elder, when yet a young man the elder said, referring evidently to the working of the Annual Meetings, "It is believed by some that our church machinery is not complete, that the church should have evangelists so as to properly carry out the purpose of her mission. "Up to this time, say fifty years ago, there was very little attention given to progress and evangelism. There was an element in the church that favored it but there was also one that was not favorable to it. The one believed that the rigid rules of the church would finally curb the progress of the cause so as to endanger her real usefulness. The other entertained fears that the younger element, if not held in check, would introduce too much pride and would finally cause trouble that would bring about ruinous results, and so between the two the subject of evangelism was practically left to slumber, but was not dead. We know of a few instances that stirred slightly the matter to active energy. A few calls for mission work received slight attention even in those early days.

Our Call to the Ministry and Experiences in the West.

A very short time after our call to the ministry in Indiana in the year 1866, we had a call from Illinois to do carpenter work at good wages. This being our occupation we accepted the call, moved west and went to work according to contract. There being no Brethren church in that part of the country, we naturally supposed we would not be called on any way soon to do ministerial work. In this we were however mistaken for we were soon called to preach a funeral. After that we were asked by the neighbors, regardless of denominational preferences, to hold regular services. This was surprising to me and on making inquiry found that there had been no religious services of any kind held there for nine years, and as a matter of course such as had any religious inclination were very hungry. We further learned that there were families of Dunkard faith living scattered through the surrounding counties who were practically without religious services of their preference, on account of their being so widely separated from each other and from any Brethren church. Finally however some ministers of the Western Brethren paid us a visit and much to our surprise suggested that we should look after those folks and minister to their needs by holding social and prayer meetings with them and hold an occasional protracted meeting for them. This kind of work seemed new and to me having never known anything done that way in Indiana by Dunkard people. Obedient to their wish we however looked after those isolated sections and found families of Brethren and others of Brethren parentage. And sharers of the faith elated around through our immediate and adjoining counties who were willing to endorse the Gospel conditions of Salvation and accept the Bible as their rule of faith and practice.

Thus it was not hard, with a field ready to harvest, to obtain satisfactory results. And not a few of the sons and daughters of Adam of Brethren parentage turned to God bringing others with them, not because of any noble preaching or special methods were used but because of the effect of the Gospel, the power of God unto Salvation, delivered in a very ordinary and unassuming way. And that was about the way that the most of the preaching was done, so far as I know, by Dunkard preachers in those early times.

Many Things Have Changed

During our twelve years' stay in the west, we responded to unanimous calls and in consequence gave what time we could possibly spare, working through sections of Illinois and Iowa and by request held two evangelistic campaigns in Michigan. In those days it was not a very difficult matter to find large crowds in attendance and with the message presented in a plain manner without the use of any particular methods satisfactory results were usually obtained. But even then it was foreseen that things would necessarily have to change, that in order to keep pace with the literature of the age the church would be forced to cease striking at every little bug that chanced to cross her path and would have to devote the precious time thus wasted to education, which would do away with ignorance and superstition. Of course I am speaking now of the Dunkard fraternity at large for in those early days, we were all supposed to be members of the one great body. Experience and observation has proved to us that the things foreseen in those early days have come to pass. Preaching that would do in days of yore, would not answer a good purpose in these days with a thousand "isms" and thousands of other attractions to draw the mind from the one thing needful.

CHRISTIANS SHOULD SHINE

In the forests bordering the Gulf of Mexico shining beetles are common. They are about an inch long and have two spots behind the eyes filled with a luminous substance, and underneath their bodies there is more of this matter that shines. When they fly at night they give forth a bright light. The natives use them as miniature lamps. A young maiden may be seen with three or four of them, under a gauze net on her hair.

So the Christian should shine and show others the way. That which shines in a man's life is his good deeds.—Ex.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Golden Day. By Earl M. Riddle

(And this, knowing the season, that already it is time for you to awake out of sleep, for now is salvation nearer to us than when we first believed. The night is far spent and the day is at hand, let us therefore cast off the works of darkness and let us put on the armor of light. Rom. 13:11, 12.)

There are two days upon which and about which we should never worry. They are carefree, free from fear and apprehension. One of these days is yesterday. Yesterday may have had its aches and pains for some; it may have had its cares and faults for some; it may have had its mistakes and blunders for others, but yesterday has passed from our reach, except for the power of that wonderful gift, called memory which enables us to recall what we have experienced. Memory does not serve us to recall yesterday's experiences save those that came under our own experiences. We cannot undo or unsay any act or word of yesterday. All that it holds of our life is in the hands of the mighty love that can bring sweet water out of the bitterest desert, that love that can make wrong things right, that can turn weeping into laughter and give joy of the morning for woe of the night. Save for the beautiful memories, as all ought to be, that gives light to the soul as a bouquet gives fragrance to a room, yesterday holds nothing in store for us. It was ours, it is now God's.

There is another day—tomorrow. A great many people worry and fret about tomorrow, until they are not physically or mentally able to cope with the demands of the day. To be sure it will have its burdens and perils for some. It will possess promises and poor performances for others. It will have failures and successes but who is master of tomorrow to any greater extent than he is over the day whose sun has set, called yesterday. However we cannot forget that hope and anticipation of the heart which fills us for the day that is to dawn. With the exception of this star of hope, all else for me is in the hands of infinite LOVE who holds for us the treasures of yesterday.

Then, let us think of what is left for us, "Only Today," Today is the "Golden Day." Many of us are lost with the strife of yesterday, likewise with the problems of tomorrow, but any man can fight the battles of today. Be reminded of the blessing to the twelve tribes of Israel, according to desert, "As thy days so shall thy strength be." Indeed it is only when the toils and hardships of today, have heaped upon them the burdens of yesterday and tomorrow that we break down. The remorse for what happened yesterday and the dread of what may be disclosed by tomorrow is what drives men mad.

Today is a great day. The unsuspected of yesterday has become the reality of today. Those dreams of a few hours ago are now shaped into invented realities for a world of eyes to behold. In fact, nearly every activity of our whole life gives birth today to some great opportunity or privilege that was an unsuspected dream. We are now aware as never before of how rapidly our soldiers were transported across the great deep to the war zone. We have a vague conception of the magnitude of the achievement of our nation.

Upon the arrival of these thousands of home-comers cannot the church of Jesus Christ make an appeal; an appeal that will call forth some of this unbounded energy such as has been displayed in these latter days, that we might herald the words, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve," and "this is the day of salvation." In the recent world struggle we have seen men and women as leaders who stood head and shoulders above their fellowmen. We have seen this same thing in history for centuries even to the thirteenth and fourteenth when the Crusades, expeditions and wars were conducted by the Christians of Europe to uphold the rights of pilgrims at Jerusalem, and ultimately to establish a firm foothold for Christianity. This "Golden Day" ought to be launching a great Crusade, not of wars or destructive expeditions but one of greater organized effort and import for the sake of America. It is my conviction and I feel that I am not alone, that America is destined under God to be the moral leader of the world. Just as heroic and chivalrous as our young men and women helped to save America from the threatened peril, so ought, at least some be, when such a day of opportunity confronts us to save our country for Jesus Christ.

Young people, will we not in whatsoever walk of life, more fully align ourselves with the forces of this country which make for right since this day has opened every tribe and nation to the renewed message of the gospel of Christ?

Therefore if we faithfully and dutifully run our course and work the appointed task of this day, God, the Almighty and the all loving will care for all else.

Enthusiasm in the Sunday School

By Miss Pauline Lichty

A Sunday school without enthusiasm is like a piece of pie without the "filling," or a piece of cake without the icing, or like the reproduction of a great painting without the beautiful coloring. No Sunday school can be a good Sunday school without a large amount of real sound enthusiasm. And I might say in the beginning that I do not mean the kind that springs up like a mushroom, over night, then in a day or two withers and dies.

Now where should the enthusiasm of a school come from? First I should say, no school can be full of snap, without an enthusiastic superintendent. The whole "workings" of a modern Sunday school hinge on the superintendent. Even in so small an item as the announcement of the hymns, or the reading of the Scripture, or the lesson comments, all must be given with snap together of course, with a spirit of reverence. But a school may have an enthusiastic superintendent and yet may be "dead," so to speak. He has to impart to his fellow officers his enthusiasm, and I think the first person he should begin on is the Sunday school secretary. So much depends upon the way Sunday school reports are given. They must be optimistic, never discouraging, and instead of always picking out the flaws, he should pick out the good things and emphasize those. Of course, I do not mean to say that the bad parts should never be brought out, but how much better the people feel after school, if they have been patted on the back instead of scolded. The secretary by his access to classrooms and class records, should be the first one to see when some of the machinery needs oiling, or old parts should be replaced with new. So you see a live secretary can be a very valuable asset to a superintendent.

It seems that next to the secretary, the entire teaching force should be enthusiastic. Now the logical place to impart this enthusiasm to the corps of workers is at the monthly cabinet or workers' meeting. And, by the way, I haven't much faith or confidence in the school that neglects or fails to have these monthly meetings. All plans and schemes for making a more efficient school should be born at these meetings. If a short snappy program is planned before hand these meetings cannot help but be beneficial. A good superintendent will welcome suggestions here from his workers too. In fact, enthusiasm is so contagious that

The Close Walk. By George S. Baer

OUR SCRIPTURE

And Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him (Gen. 5:24). These are the generations of Noah: Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God (Gen. 6:9). There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit (Rom. 8:1). I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace (Eph. 4:1-3). Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. See that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise (Eph. 5:14-15). Walk as children of the light (for the fruit of the light is in all goodness and righteousness and truth), proving what is well-pleasing unto the Lord; and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness ((Eph. 5:8b-10). Thou hast a few names in Sardis that have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy (Rev. 3:4).

OUR MEDITATIONS

The Christian life is like a walk and the conditions of that walk vary greatly. Some walk uprightly and circumspectly, seeking to prove worthy of the calling wherewith they were called. While others walk indifferently and carelessly, not realizing the importance of their right conduct before the world. Some walk with face constantly forward, sometimes wavering and weak it may be, but ever looking to him who is able to save to the uttermost all them that call upon him. While others walk aimlessly and along the line of least resistance, seeking to enjoy as much of the forbidden pleasures of this world as possible without being counted out of church membership. There is a kind of walk suggested in God's word which would make the Christian life more enjoyable and profitable to us all and cause the name and church of Christ would receive greater glory. It is suggested by the phrase "walked with God." We cannot walk with God unless we remain close to him. That is our glorious privilege, to walk side by side with the Master.

But if ye are to walk the close walk we must enter into the spirit of sacrifice with Christ. We must sacrifice personal preferment. The interests of others and of Christ's kingdom must be placed first in our lives. How often do we find ourselves limited in influence and hindered in service because we are unwilling to sacrifice our own convenience and interests for the welfare of others. This gives us a feeling of aloofness from Christ also. For he forgot self in the desire to serve others. He was never too busy with his scheduled duties and never too tired from a hard day's work to give time and energy to the relief of other weary souls. Never do we hear of him being too tired or too busy or too selfish to minister to other needy souls, but we do hear of him walking many a weary mile that he might raise the dead, heal the sick and feed the hungry multitudes. His life was one of continual sacrifice that he might serve others. His purpose was "not to be ministered unto but to minister." And what must he think of us wishing to walk with him and yet seeking to be served rather than to serve; seeking our own pleasure and profit rather than the welfare of others? Soul of mine, how close do you think you may walk to the Master when you seek continually your own rather than another's interests, when you are unwilling to make sacrifices for his sake and for others?

If we are to walk close to Christ, we must surrender our wills and permit him to have his way in our lives. If two persons are to walk together, they must be agreed. Two little girls were walking down the street arm-in-arm; they could not have done so if they had had opposing purposes and aims. They were surrendered each to the other. If we are to walk arm-in-arm with God our wills must be surrendered to him. The Master set us the supreme example in this regard. His will was surrendered completely to the Father's. The prospect was not very bright, but he said, "nevertheless not my will but thine be done." Is the servant greater than his Lord? Jesus surrendered his will, why not we? O, I know, as I look within, that we are too self-willed. We want to walk with the Master, but we want to do it in our own way. We want to do work for him, but we want to do it in our own way. We set our wills over against God's. We ought "to walk even as he walked."

This close walk requires of us obedience. This follows easily when once we have surrendered our wills to him. If our relationship with Christ is to be that of a companion or friend, we must be obedient to his will. Here again Christ set the example. He said, "I do always those things that please him (the Father)." "I must work the works of him that sent me." "My meat and my drink is to do the will of my father which is in heaven and to accomplish his work." And he desires that even as he kept his Father's commandment and was obedient to his will, we should obey him. He says, "If ye love me keep my commandments." And "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say." If we are to walk close to the Master we must obey his will. And when we have brought ourselves to do that, we shall find that it was only for our own welfare and happiness, our own life and enlargement that he makes all his requirements. Obedience will be found the pathway of joy and self-realization.

OUR PRAYER

O Father in heaven, thou knowest how we like to have our own way. We are so selfish, so all rapt up in self, that it is hard for us to see any way but our own or recognize any values but those which concern ourselves. We are prone to seek the bypaths of sin, to wander from thy side away. Gracious Father, forgive us for our wilfulness and waywardness, and help us no longer to be unwilling to sacrifice for thy sake and our brothers' sake, or to deny thee when thou wouldst place thy hand upon us and direct us as thy holy will mayst choose, or to refuse to do what thou in accordance with thy benevolent purpose mayst bid us do. Give us the willingness to sink our own wills into thine own, that we may ever walk close to thee. Then thou wilt lead us in pleasant ways and we shall have peace. Thou wilt make us to know joy and in thee we shall have life for evermore. Hear us we pray, in the name of Jesus Christ our Savior and constant friend. Amen.

one really has to be careful not to catch it.

Probably another factor which would help to make a live wire school and should not be overlooked, is the music. No little care should be taken in the selection of the Sunday school music. And a good "peppy" chorister to lead the singing adds much to the enthusiasm of the school.

Now in conclusion let me say that to have an enthusiastic Sunday school, there must be an enthusiastic superintendent, an enthusiastic corps of workers and a people willing to be led by the workers they have chosen.

Get out of old ruts. Sing new songs. Do something different each Sunday. Put enthusiasm into your songs, prayers and teaching. Pray as though you really knew God would help those who ask him. Read the Scriptures as though you were sure there is a message in it for you, and teachers, teach the word of God as though you really knew it to be the only salvation for a sin sick world. And lastly, laymen, trust your officers, stand by them and all will agree to the lines that run, "We can if we will."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Topic for May 18: The Saving Grace of God. By Dr. J. M. Tombaugh

The mercy of God is free. The procuring cause of man's salvation is to be found, not in deeds of righteousness which men may do, but in the rich, unmerited favor of God. Jesus very distinctly not only taught the doctrine of the insufficiency of human righteousness to secure salvation, but he made it necessary that we should recognize that doctrine. He demanded an admission and confession of it when he said: "So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, we are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do." Our Lord would have us know and feel, and moreover, confess, that we owe all to his mercy.

However devout and holy a man may be, though he may hate iniquity and serve God loyally, yet after all, the salvation he has received has not been merited or earned, but is the gift of God. He may have ten thousand virtues beside, but the only coin which rings true when he would purchase his entrance to the kingdom of heaven, is the pure gold of Christ's righteousness made his by grace through faith.

Salvation cannot be bought with money or penances, or tears, or good deeds, or any other thing that man can offer or give; it comes only to those who, realizing that they have nothing with which to pay for the forgiveness they need, are willing to accept it as the free gift of God.

It is natural that proud, self-sufficient man should wish to salae himself with the reflection that what he has received he has got through his own merit. Paul, reasoning of the insufficiency of "works" to secure the sinners' justification, declares that the "law of faith," that is salvation by grace through faith, excludes boasting.

Perhaps it is this desire for a ground of boasting that prevents so many from accepting salvation on God's terms, and inclines them to persist in the utterly futile effort of winning heaven by righteousness of their own. However that may be, and whatever may be the cause of his lapse from Apostolic doctrine, it is nevertheless true that there are thousands of people today, both in the church and out of it, who believe that men are saved by the lives they live, and not as the Scriptures teach, by the blood of Christ.

And the saddest, the most pathetic feature of it all is, that many who hold this view have never once suspected that they have departed from the "faith of the fathers," or that the doctrine in which they now stand is unscriptural and new. The marrow of the whole matter is revealed and the difference between the Scriptural and the popular doctrine is set forth in these two questions: "Are men saved by what they are, or by what Christ is for them?" and, "Are they saved by what they do, or by what they accept?" These questions go to the root of the matter, and bring to view the two different schemes of salvation. If the answer is that we are saved by what we do and by what we ourselves are, then it is not true that salvation is of grace; it is not the blood of the Cross which saves, and we have found means by which we can "climb up by some other way." It cannot be so. If we rely for salvation upon anything else, even upon copying in our conduct in the world the example of the Lord Jesus himself, the doctrine of the atonement is without meaning or value to us at all. And it is true that this precious doctrine has become meaningless to thousands of persons, many of whom are church members.

The efficacy of the blood has been lost sight of, and emphasis has been given instead to the saving power of good works. Moral reform, church machinery, organization, culture, social service, practical charity and a hundred other things, important, even essential, but not of saving power, have occupied our attention to the exclusion of God's one and only plan of saving a lost world, and that plan is salvation by grace through faith in the cleansing blood of Jesus Christ.

This doctrine of Jesus is set forth by types and symbols and parables, and is repeated and amplified and emphasized over and over again in many positive and unmistakable passages in the Scriptures. So important is this truth that the Holy Spirit employs every possible means of making it clear. Sometimes it is put in a negative form and we read: "By the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight," and that other passage: "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." Sometimes it is stated positively, as in this verse: "Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, but with the precious blood of Christ." Illustration, repetition, everything is employed to make the teaching plain, yet still men will misunderstand, or having once understood, soon forget, and begin again to exalt other things, in the scheme of salvation, to the place where God has set the atonement.

In popular judgment men are supposed to be saved by what they are and by what they do. If a man be regarded as upright in character and blameless in conduct, and if, in addition to that, he builds a seminary or endows a college, or contributes generously to worthy charities, he is popularly supposed to be saved by his good works. These are good works, the very kind of "works which God has ordained that we should walk in them." Their value and importance must not be underestimated. God has owned and honored and blessed the service his children have rendered in these various activities. He richly rewards the generosity which prompts his children to make sacrifice, to relieve the necessities of others. Such living is beautiful and noble and worthy of all praise. But none of these things, nor all of them together, nor any other thing, created or revealed, can take the place of the blood of Christ and the grace freely given, for effecting the salvation of sinners. If there is one truth more plainly revealed in the Bible than any other, it is that only those are saved who have accepted their salvation by a definite act of faith in Jesus Christ." "Saved by grace through faith." The grace whereby we are saved is the kind, tender, forgiving mercy of God, bestowed freely and abundantly without any merit or deserving on our part. And the faith which is the vehicle bringing salvation nigh, is belief in, and acceptance of, that divine arrangement by which the Son of God shed his own blood to redeem us from sin and its consequences.

Paul declared that this plan, God's plan, of saving men, excluded boasting on their part. Being saved without any merit of their own, having contributed nothing but poverty and helplessness and need and sin, coming to him with penitence and confession and hunger for pardon, having no confidence in self or in their own righteousness, but having all confidence in him and his saving grace, the pardoned sinner becomes a child of God. He has become a member of the household of faith, an heir of God, a joint-heir with Jesus to an eternal inheritance. He is forgiven, redeemed, sanctified, saved, and the glory belongs alone to him who gave himself for him. There is in his heart no spirit of boasting, no disposition to recite the meritorious deeds by which his deliverance was effected, but instead he humbly and gratefully exclaims with Paul: "God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross of Christ."

MOTHERHOOD

Motherhood is the crowning glory of womanhood. Naturally the question is asked, why? One reason is because of the wonderful opportunities which come with motherhood. The timeworn expression, "The hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world," is true. Some one has wisely said, "When God wanted a great man, he first made a great mother.—Ex.

May, Tenth Legion Month

Dear Endeavorers:

This is to be a friendly talk through the printed page. I wish we might talk face to face.

As you all no doubt know, May is Tenth Legion Month. You all know what that means. We have had a month for this and a month for that and now is Tenth Legion time.

No need for me to explain what the Tenth Legion is for you all know that it is the enrollment of those who pay at least one tenth of their income to the Lord's work.

No need for me to explain why we should tithe for if you will study your Bibles from beginning to end on the subject of "Giving and Offerings" you will find that tithing is taught all the way through. If you will ask anyone who tithes, they can tell you the joy and the blessings that come from following God's plan.

Among other things the war has taught us how to give. We gave millions for this cause and more millions for that cause. We raised billions for Liberty Bonds time and again. Now we are starting another drive. If our country can raise its millions and billions for war, we as Endeavorers and as a church should raise our thousands for missions.

Our goal is 2,000 Tenth Legioners by 1920. We can reach our goal and we should go over the top as far as possible, even double the number.

Tenth Legion superintendents, what are you going to do?

Christian Endeavor presidents, what are you going to do?

Sunday school superintendents, what are you going to do?

Pastors, what are you going to do?

If our Christian Endeavor presidents will call their committees together and plan for one or more Tenth Legion meetings this month, if our Tenth Legion superintendent will talk Tenth Legion to everybody, if our Sunday school superintendent will ask the Christian Endeavor president or other Endeavorers to present the Tenth Legion before the Sunday school and if our pastors (with nothing else to do) will preach tithing this month, we will be sure and go over the top.

This is our work for this month. This is a part of our Four Year Program. Now over the top and off we go. Our slogan is "Now then do it and do it now."

Yours for success E. A. MYER,

Twenty-four Reasons. By Grant Chambers

Twelve Reasons Why Some Folks Do Not Tithe Their Income

1. Because they are not vitally concerned about the welfare of Christ's Kingdom.
2. Because they have never understood that the law of the tithe is binding upon us in this age.
3. Because they feel that it would be a great sacrifice that the religion of Jesus is hardly worth sacrificing for.
4. Because they do not take the great commission of our Lord (Matt. 28:18-20) seriously and fail to realize that they will be held responsible for what they might have done.
5. Because they do not know that God promises temporal prosperity to the one who tithes, and so fear that they would be impoverished by it.
6. Because their hearts are filled with unbelief and they have not the courage to take God at his word.
7. Because they fail to recognize God as the owner of all things and themselves as merely his stewards.

8. Because they fail to realize that not to tithe is to rob God (Mal. 3:10), and makes them as guilty in his sight as though they had robbed their neighbor or embezzled the funds of a bank.

9. Because they think they will have more if they do not tithe than if they do, and with them policy takes precedence over principle.

10. Because they fail to realize that one cannot fight against God and win, and that God has a thousand ways of punishing disobedience.

11. Because their chief concern is for themselves and the lost and hopeless condition of the unsaved causes them no grief.

12. Because they feel that a Christian should not be required to do as much, under grace, as the Jew was required to do under law.

Twelve Reasons Why We Should Tithe Our Income

1. Because God commands it. Mal. 3:10.
2. Because it is a debt we owe to God (Lev. 27:30-34) and we cannot be honest without paying our debts.
3. Because it is the one and only God-given plan for financing the work of Christ's Kingdom.
4. Because with the present plans and methods the world cannot be evangelized in the next million years.
5. Because under this Bible-plan, every need of the kingdom could be met and the world evangelized in the next generation.
6. Because the one who religiously tithes his income will have increased temporal prosperity. Mal. 3:10-12. Prov. 3:9-10.
7. Because the one who religiously tithes his income will be taking God into partnership in his business affairs.
8. Because the one who religiously tithes his income will experience marked development in spiritual life and power.
9. Because the one who religiously tithes his income will not be open to the charge that religion with him is a mere sham.
10. Because it is a part of God's great Moral Law and could no more be fulfilled in Christ, nor abrogated in this age, than the law concerning theft, murder or adultery.
11. Because Christ recognized it as binding and in full force, practiced it himself and commanded the keeping of it. Matt. 23:23.
12. Because this plan will lift the churches out of their place of mendicancy and weakness and give them their rightful place in the community as institutions of divine power and influence.

Some one has taken occasion to thank God for the old-fashioned mothers. Such are not the women of the period, painted and enameled, with their lives wrapped up in society manners and dress, with hands so jewelled and white that they cannot minister to the needs of the children of her life. The old-fashioned mothers are those whose voices are sweet with lullabies and words of love and cheer, whose eyes shine clear and deep with love, whose hands are worn with toil, whose love gently guides in person the steps of childhood and whose life lavishes its own kindnesses upon the helpless little one and will not wholly give over to another the joy of such service. Blessed is the memory of such mothers, for they were true mothers. And that is all we can mean by the old-fashioned mothers, the mothers whose love causes them to put life above fashion, and motherly care above social position. God bless the mothers who now bless the world by such holy service and make sacred the memories of those who have lived with such aims.—B.

MISSIONS

Kentucky Home Mission Notes. By G. C. Carpenter

Easter at Krypton

Brother Cook writes: "We have had about one hundred out to the Easter service here, and we raised $37 for our Easter foreign missions offering, and are trying to make it even $40 before we send it in. This is our first offering for foreign missions and somehow we think it is fine for Krypton."

We think so too. Some of our churches up north will have to hustle to keep up with Krypton. "Give and it shall be given unto you."

One Hundred Fourteen Years Old

Watch for that story in the near future about the old man of the mountains, perhaps the oldest. He has a tax receipt that shows him to be at least 110 or 112 years of age. He rides a horse everywhere. They say he never used tobacco, coffee or whiskey. But I must not spoil Brother Cook's story which will appear soon in the Evangelist.

A New Station

Miss Elizabeth Haddix is now located at a new and needy place about as far beyond Krypton as Krypton is beyond Lost Creek. She will conduct the Sunday school under the direction of Brother Drushal and Brother Cook. And we have the good news that Brother Thomas Allen is planning to give all of his time to Christian work beginning this fall. Let us pray that the Lord will make him a great blessing. He is a good man and a good preacher.

Training Workers

Some of the young people in College who feel the call to the mountain mission work should present themselves to the home mission board for that work and then make their preparation with that definite end in view. God may be calling some of the Brethren young people who are not yet in college but who at home are reading these lines. Let God have his way.

Enough

"Whooping cough, mumps, measles, 'flu'" and smallpox, all at once. What they do not have in Arkansas we have in the mountains of Kentucky."

Fads

"The fad now is the Holy Rollers as we call them. I have been giving them some hot shots the last few nights," writes Brother Cook.

Self Support

Brethren Drushal and Cook are teaching the mountain people to give systematically and Biblically for the support of their pastors. Both Lost Creek and Krypton promise to do well this year and full reports of their giving toward self support will be given as we approach the end of the year.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina. By C. F. Yoder

Since writing last we have not made any great advances as our meetings have been hindered by the continuous rains. The people here attend very well in bad weather considering that few of them are prepared with umbrellas or overshoes and most of them live where there are no sidewalks or very poor ones. In the nine years of our labors here we have never had to miss more than one meeting on account of not having anyone present.

At our Sunday school last Sunday we had a few over a hundred present including the cradle roll of 14, while the evening meetings fill the house. We now have two branch Sunday schools in town and two in the country. The public schools have begun and the children are busy, with the exception of the college students who are on a strike again. This time they are trying to get rid of several professors whose morality is so scandalous that they feel justified in taking such measures to oust them. The government is very slow to act and we do not know how long the matter may go unsettled.

Since the first of the year the wife of one us, with their two children because their little boy has the asthma and this climate is much better than the climate of the province of Buenos Aires where they have their mission. The Mennonite missionaries has been with sion. A week ago she became ill with typhoid fever and at this writing is quite serious. There is always so much sickness here in spite of the good climate that we feel very thankful that we have escaped so far.

We have a number of new people interested in the Gospel but have not baptized any more recently. A Seventh Day Adventist has been in town for several months causing us some extra work. He follows the customary dishonest method of selling books without revealing their true character and trying to get into the homes of our members in order to mislead the ignorant. Fortunately our people know the scriptures on the Sabbath question sufficiently that none of them have been deceived. This week I visited the work in Cabrera again and spoke several times at an all day meeting. A heavy rain hindered the attendance but the work is growing in stability and everyone has confidence in Brother Atkinson.

OAKVILLE, INDIANA

A word in addition concerning the big revival mentioned by Brother Kern sometime ago. I want to say that it was the greatest meeting we ever held. Yet it was not I but the prayers of the people back of the movement with the help of God, and we give him the glory for it all. Thirty-three souls for God, and twenty-nine baptized for the church is a great victory. Since taking up the pastorate here in January we have grown to love the people and the work. The attendance has increased and is averaging above the record of the past. The interest of the church is being felt among all; even outsiders are quite considerate for the future welfare of the church as filling a community need. The outstanding need is more room.

A movement is already started for a church fund, and ere long we shall have a fine new structure in Oakville that will take into account the needs of a community church and fill a long felt want. We are almost compelled to say we never preached to a more responsive people. We received the largest cash offering for the meetings that we ever have gotten anywhere. Two weeks after the meetings closed the non-church people and Christians of other churches of the town and community made up a purse of $54.00 and presented to us one evening after the close of services. This was indeed a great surprise, and we hardly knew what to say in a response, but it was very gratefully received as a token of appreciation of the folks outside of our own membership.

One of the sad features of my short pastorate was the announcement and death of one of the new members. His death occurred just six weeks after his conversion. But he went away triumphant in the faith, and admonished his friends and associates to come into the church and enjoy the realities of the Christian life. This was the largest funeral service ever held in the Oakville church. His life was harmonious with a moral community spirit, and his uniting with the church made his influence all the more appreciated.

Brother Kern is our efficient superintendent and is adjusting the school to the new Standard and we are hopeful of attaining the goal by fall. Another class has been added, and there is a need of one other class being divided, which has become too large for one,

As soon as warmer weather comes we shall have to occupy a room in the public school building which is near the church.

The Endeavor has been re-organized and Roy Keesling is leading it on to higher ideals. The Junior Endeavor is one of the adjuncts which will count for the church of tomorrow.

At a recent business meeting the church gave us a call to serve them till the close of the church year, September 30th. We are going over once a week while in school, but we hope to abide with them during the summer vacation.

On Easter Sunday we baptized four more and received them into the church. These were a father, mother and two daughters—a whole family in the church. How true the scripture, "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord."

Traveling four hundred miles a week, and caring for a church and keeping up school duties is strenuous indeed, but we are happy in the Lord's work.

PERU, INDIANA

The special revival campaign is past and ten were added to the church. Three others made the confession but were hindered. Brother A. E. Thomas, our evangelist, did his part well, preaching splendid sermons from the beginning to the end. Mrs. Thomas assisted in the singing in a helpful way and Little Dorcas was the center of attraction. Everybody loved Dorcas.

It is more difficult than ever to have a real revival of religion. The war has not sobered this fast world in the least way. The fact is that hearts are harder than before the war. Peru has always had the name of being a self-righteous, personal-liberty-claiming, sin-loving city, and Brother Thomas now believes it, as does Evangelist Newlin who was engaged in a revival at the large Baptist church of Peru at the same time. Thirty men at a special men's meeting were about the limit in that church.

Our church was strengthened and revived and that is a worthwhile blessing in itself. Without a living church there will be no winning of souls. And now we are going forward with a special summer campaign and are not expecting any summer slump. Five were added to the church between the first of January and the opening of the revival, making a total of fifteen added since the beginning of the year.

Delegations from the Brethren churches at Mexico, Loree and Center Chapel each week of the meeting helped us very much with their interest and their prayers. The Peru church appreciates the loyalty of the surrounding Brethren churches. Pastors Ditch, Fisher, Stewart and Ronk gave loyal support. The "Little Brown Church" was filled on the third Sunday afternoon at our "Rally of the Brethren churches of Miami county," at which time Brother Thomas brought an enthusiastic message that must have stirred and aroused every member of the Brethren church who heard it. We thank Brother Thomas for his ministry in Peru and our prayers will be with him in his next campaign which is at Huntington.

FALLS CITY

There is always something taking place, even in the sleepest congregations, if it be nothing more than squabbling. Our activities have not been along that line. Its peculiar how some Brethren think there is nothing doing in the Kingdom, unless there are constantly wranglings, and differences being expressed in an unchristian way. For almost five years we have adjusted our differences here without disruption. Whatever our faults may be it is not factions. We are all one in Christ Jesus. Our advancement has not been as rapid as we had anticipated. It is a gigantic task to gather our forces after being stampeded through the winter. But gradually we are winning. The past month our Sunday school has been normal in attendance. Our preaching services have not been disturbed so greatly. Our own Brethren are still interested in the preaching of the Word.

Following Beachler's visit, some of the Brethren set about to show the preacher that he (Beachler) did not get all the money in town by gathering a very large amount of money together and presenting it to the pastor as a gift at the close of a Sunday evening service. I would not like to tell you the amount for fear some one would want my place among these good people.

We planned largely for Easter Sunday, the day was ideal and we had the greatest time together since our coming here. We had our foreign mission rally in the morning and the communion service in the evening. A large crowd in the morning gave an offering to the Lord for missions of almost five hundred dollars. In the evening the tables were filled for the communion service. We were ably assisted by Elder W. J. H. Bauman of Morrill. Also we enjoyed the presence of A. W. Lichty of Morrill. Some of our isolated Brethren came in on the train for the service. We count it a great day for the Lord. Brother Bauman stayed over and preached on Wednesday evening. Slowly but surely we are planning and moving forward in the way. We solicit the prayers of all like minded.

THE WAYNESBORO REVIVAL

It looked for awhile as though the Waynesboro revival would be postponed indefinitely. The writer was asked to go to Waynesboro and assist the pastor, M. A. Witter, with a meeting last fall but the "flu" stepped in and halted our plans for the time. Then we planned to begin the meeting March 9th, and again Mr. Flu stepped in and laid the entire Witter family on their backs and date of meeting was changed from March 9 to March 16. Just as we were about ready to leave Sergeantsville for Waynesboro death called a halt and we tarried long enough to preach the funeral of Sister Ann Buchannan, a good sister in Israel, who had requested that we grant her this last favor at her death. This was the end of delays, however, and we proceeded to Waynesboro to fill our engagement with the good people there.

We arrived at our destination Thursday evening, March 18 and immediately opened the campaign for the strengthening of the church and the salvation of souls. We preached the old fashioned doctrine of salvation through the finished work of Christ on the cross. We held up Jesus Christ as the only way to the Father. We honored the Holy Spirit and God gave us the victory.

Fifteen signified their intention of allying themselves with the church. Twelve of these confessed Christ for the first time. One young married lady, a member of another church, came forward to join our church. Then on the last night of meeting a young man told us that he and his wife would join the church as soon as their baby, who had been ill with pneumonia, was well enough to be left alone. These confessions together with the general feeling that the church had been strengthened made us feel that the Lord gave us the victory. To him be all the honor and glory.

Some of the special features of the meeting are worthy of mention. One of these was the singing of the men's chorus. In addition to rendering special selections frequently they joined the choir and splendidly assisted the evangelist by singing the gospel to those who needed Christ. It was a great inspiration to have such a fine bunch of men back of us as we preached from night to night and I know that part of the success of the services was due to the efforts of the combined choir who were in their places every night. The solos and duets by Mrs. Sands and the writer seemed to be enjoyed by all. Altogether we received very excellent support from pastor and people and it was a real joy to work with them.

Our home was with Brother and Sister Koontz. And any one who has been there knows what that means. It was a real home and we enjoyed every minute of our stay.

Other homes were opened to us and every effort put forth to make our stay enjoyable in a temporal as well as spiritual way. Our greatest trouble was to keep them from overfeeding us. The Pennsylvania women are great cooks and their hospitality is so gracious that it is hard to say no when the pie and cake and ice cream are passed. If you don't believe me ask Beachler.

We have a nice church building at Waynesboro but we noticed some need for extension work. They are feeling the need for better Sunday school facilities and I would not be surprised to hear that they have added some roofs for this purpose. I heard, too, that the ladies were going to carpet the floor and the men were going to fresco the walls. If they make these improvements they will have one of the neatest and most comfortable churches in Pennsylvania. Brother Witter and his people deserve much credit for the way they have builded from the ground up and made a splendid success in the Lord.

May the Lord bless them and make his face to shine upon them is my prayer.

MORTON L. SANDS.

MANSFIELD, OHIO

Even though the readers of the Evangelist have not heard of the happenings at Mansfield for some time; it affords a heaven-born sense of gratitude to report that the people have been, "Expecting great things of God, and attempting great things for God." It is not the purpose of this article to give a detailed report of the past year's work, but rather to mention some of the outstanding experiences through which the church has passed.

I. A Church Rally

It was suggested by the Moderator of the Ohio Conference, that we should have in the churches over the state, a number of church rallies, for the purpose of planning work for the remainder of this year. Mansfield was one of the fortunate churches selected as a meeting place for such a rally. On Sunday, March 23rd, we enjoyed the blessings that attended such a meeting. The outside representation was small, nevertheless we had a real feast. We hope next time more of our fellow Brethren will feel the importance of making the meeting vital and inspiring by their presence. It seems to me one of the greatest needs of our church, as in many others, is co-operation.

II. A Victorious Revival

The people unanimously say they enjoyed a real spiritual feast during our revival which closed March the 31st. Brother Benjamin F. Owen had charge of the campaign. To say he rendered a magnanimous service is to put it insipid. Brother Owen neither spared time or life; he very energetically poured out both on the altar of service, in order that souls might be strengthened and the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ might be enlarged. The evangelist quietly won his way into the hearts of the Mansfield people and they responded enthusiastically to his earnest appeal. As a result of such effort twenty-one people were added to the church. One young man who had lost his first love, came forward and expressed his desire to render his Christ a bigger and better service in the coming days. Yes, it was a great revival and to him who gave the victory we give the praise.

There is one other aspect that stands out in the minds of every member of the church as a golden star.

III. A Victory Church Fund

During the campaign we launched a budget in order that we might pay the old debt and remodel the church building. We asked the people for $2,000.00 (two thousand), but they saw we were not asking for enough, so they gave us $2,400.00 (Two thousand four hundred). We had a thermometer on the church wall, but it would only register $2,000.00. As the hundreds and five hundreds came in it was an ineffable joy to see the mercury burst out of the top. I never saw an American soldier go "over the top," but if he was thrilled half as much as the writer when the old mercury went over the top and started up the church wall, he was not careful how hard he struck the enemy. For you to enjoy with us our present feelings you will have to draw a mental picture of a church that has for sixteen years been in debt, stand free from all debt, plus the much needed remodeling of her walls. It is needless to say Brother Owen rendered a noble service in helping raise this fund. It was a real pleasure because of the way the members responded, both to the plan and the appeal for money. Let me say for the benefit of some Christian Endeavor society that is anxious to render a real service that our Christian Endeavor society gave $500.00 (five hundred).

At the close of the campaign one man said to me, "Well that's what I call a real revival." I believe he was a good judge, don't you?

The people of Mansfield are jealous for the prayers of the brotherhood. Remember us when you talk with him. It is the desire of this church that we may labor faithfully in his vineyard until the "Prince of Peace" gathers up the refined elements of the church and changes them into the eternal jewels for the kingdom.

E. A. ROWSEY.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Easter Sunday was another great day for Compton Avenue Brethren church and Sunday school.

Two hundred and thirty were present at the regular Sunday school session. After the Sunday school session a most excellent and well prepared program was rendered. I consider it the best program we have ever had. The last number on the program was the Easter offering for foreign missions. Although the offering is not as large as one might wish it is about three times as large as the offering last year and averages practically $1.50 per member. The total offering from the Junior Christian Endeavor, the Sunday school, and the church was $185.00. At 7:00 P. M. the Juniors (forty in number), the Intermediates and the Seniors held their usual Christian Endeavor meetings. They were unusually good meetings. At 8:00 P. M. our pastor, Brother Beal, preached a powerful sermon on the subject, "Did Christ Rise from the Dead?" The usual invitation was given and one more of the Junior boys came forward and gave his heart to Christ. He and another boy from the same class who accepted Christ one week ago, were baptized on Wednesday evening after prayer meeting. After the invitation was given to sinners to accept Christ an invitation was given for those who were willing to lay their lives on the altar for service at any time and in any place the Lord might call them. In response to this invitation fourteen people came forward and thus placed themselves in the Lord's hands to be used as he sees fit. A number of these are at present doing work in the Bible Institute of this city in preparation for this larger service.

We have been having some wonderful demonstrations of the presence of the Holy Spirit in the last few months. This is because the people are praying as never before. We give all the praise to him who is able to do for us more than we are able to ask or think.

A. E. NEHER.

BERLIN, PENNSYLVANIA

The church at Berlin is still on the map even if it has not been heard from through the Evangelist very recently. Four have been baptized since the last report. Like most congregations we have a large percentage of earnest and consecrated workers and we have some who are barely on the list of the living. For these latter we are hoping and praying that the Lord will breathe the breath of life in them so that they will become of more value to both him and the church.

The Sunday school is in a healthy and growing condition. The children and the young people are taking a most commendable interest in the work. We are to a point where we have to choose between two things, viz., let the Sunday school stand still numerically, or build larger so as to be able to accommodate the increasing numbers. Of course we will do the latter just as soon as conditions will permit.

On Wednesday evening of each week we have a mid-week Bible study, which is accomplishing a great amount of good. We take up the most interesting chapters of the Bible. Immediately following the Bible study the teacher training class is conducted. This class is doing very commendable work.

Two things we deplore,—quite a number of deaths have occurred among the members in the past year, and several of our best workers have moved to other places. All of these are missed by us, and with a tinge of sadness, when we assemble, we have to work just a little harder to make up for the loss. We are hoping for recruits to the ranks as time goes on. Some have already stepped in. Others will do so in the near future, we believe. Many other things might be reported, but, to sum up the work from the pastor's standpoint, I will say:

The general outlook is promising. Hindrances and difficulties are by no means things to cause pessimism, but rather to incite one to more earnest and intelligent effort. Obstacles to surmount tend to increase the tact and skill and determination of the workers, without which victory can not be won anywhere. The fact is that very few of us would like to exchange troubles with our fellows. Usually the worst troubles in our lives never happen anyway. We have a lot of fine workers both among the old and the young, and upon these we base our hopes for the final success of Berlin, and we believe it is not misplaced trust. There is always some dead wood, and we must bear with it, for sometimes it does really take on new life.

ASHLAND COLLEGE NOTES

Dr. West of Brooklyn, New York, a former Army Y. M. C. A. worker, spoke in the chapel on the evening of April 29th, to the students. After the meeting the students held a short reception in the Philo Hall, and Dr. West gave some interesting heart-to-heart talks to those who asked for information about over-seas experiences.

Dr. Jacobs and Prof. Garber attended a conference at Columbus on April the 30th. Both came back reporting a splendid time.

The first games of tennis were played on the last day of April. The wet season has retarded outdoor sports considerably.

A baseball team has been organized and the boys are playing as often as they can spare the time.

At the recent field meet, the students showed a great deal of exhilaration and enthusiasm in the games. Wholesome exercise is one of the things that counts for efficiency.

The College Trustees are meeting the first week of May and considering the work of the coming year. Plans are on foot for another good year of work. Some improvements will be made and the general work of the College will be pushed along all lines.

J. A. Garber was with Brother A. L. Lynn at Ankenytown, Sunday, April the 2th and had a great day. They went over the top with their Easter offerings and other offerings were taken care of that puts the church among those of the front.

One of the best Easter offerings the College church ever made was given Sunday, April the 13th. Over $300.00. That is going over the top in great strides. These are days in which you can't keep folks from giving for worthy causes.

The men in the Christian Evidence class are getting quite enthused and full of discus-sional ability. Wherever they meet some phase is mentioned. Even the Hermeneu-tics boy's class are receiving a distinction that will be lasting. Lynn has assumed the name of Scofield; Anspach, Weymouth, and Joe Gingrich, Dummelow. Put your hard question to Anspach! W. R. DEETER.

A PLEASANT SEASON AT DAYTON

It was the writer's happy privilege to enjoy a very pleasant season of fellowship and work with the First Brethren church of Dayton, Ohio, of which Brother Edward M. Cobb is the pastor. The work began on Sunday morn-ing, March 30, and closed Thursday evening, April 17. From Monday to Friday of the first week Brother L. S. Bauman, of Long Beach, California, and Brother W. A. Barnhart, of Pleasant Hill, Ohio, aided in institute work. The work done by these brethren was of a high order, and all those present were greatly benefited.

The revival resulted in a number of bap-tisms and other additions to the flock there. They now number over nine hundred mem-bers. This church is a fine monument to the labors of the pastors who have had charge in the past years. The work tells for itself and needs no words of praise from any one. Brother Cobb is doing a splendid work, and the forces of the church are rallying around him in a most admirable manner. The Sunday school, the S. S. C. E., the Christian Endeavor, the Juniors, and every department of the work of the church are being handled in a way to add strength to the church.

A report of this meeting would not be complete without mention of the splendid work done by the choir, the orchestra, the ladies' quartette, the soloists, the duets, etc. These and many other factors conspired to make the meetings a season of spiritual enjoyment never to be forgotten by those who were fortunate enough to be able to be present. May God bless the Dayton church, its pastor and every one of its workers, until it becomes still more famous for its Christianity, its zeal, its numbers, and in everything that enters into the Master's service.—I. COLLEGE CORNER

The work of the Lord at this place is in good condition. Every department is working to reach the goals. There was the finest spirit shown when we announced that we had the foreign mission envelopes. We do not know how many we had. But we do know that we did not have enough. We cannot tell just what was given. But we know that they were not satisfied; they wanted to take another collection Easter. So College Corner has the spirit. I want to say a word right here. That we are paying more money to keep a few half-hearted Christians in the church, than it would cost to convert all South America. This is a shame, that converted people must be fed the Gospel every Sunday and let a nation starve for the want of it. What we need is more love for one another. This is the new commandment, that Jesus gave to the disciples. At least this is the way we live it. Some claim that feet washing was given only to the apostles and so some of us think that to love one another was given only to the apostles. Yet Jesus said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." We can go to church without the pastor coming and telling us that there is Sunday school next Sunday.

College Corner will hold their love feast May the 26th, we shall report this later. All wishing to commune with us are invited.

A RESIGNATION

We wish to announce that we have resigned the work at Dutchtown, Indiana. And any one wishing to write me will find me at 2013 South Lafayette Street, South Bend, Indiana.

Communion Notices

The Elkhart, Indiana, church will observe communion services Wednesday evening, May 14. A cordial invitation to members of near-by Brethren churches.

H. H. WOLFORD, Pastor.

The Brethren church at Denevr, Indiana, will hold their spring communion on Monday evening, May 12th. All neighboring Brethren are invited to attend.

L. A. MYERS, Pastor.

The New Enterprise church, Indiana, will observe the holy communion on Monday evening, May 12. An invitation to every member and others of like faith.

P. M. FISHER, Pastor.

The First church of Ashland, Ohio, will honor the Lord in the observance of holy communion on the evening of May 18th. There will be preaching services nightly during the week preceding. A cordial invitation is extended to nearby Brethren and others who may find it possible to visit us at that time.

J. A. GARBER, Minister.

If all this is true, then mother is deserving of supreme reward and reverence. We ought not to be reticent about expressing our love for our mothers nor negligent about showing honor to them. There is too frequently manifested on the part of young men a disposition to treat mother with more or less indifference, to be unresponsive to her love and to accept her kindnesses in a matter of fact way, with no expressions of gratitude. Too often mother is allowed to labor for us in our homes with little or no attention except when her services are needed. We do not think of trying to make her happy, though she never ceases to spend herself in efforts to make us happy. We love her but we are unwilling to warm up enough to tell her so. We know she is the most unselfish person on earth, but we seldom take the pains to let her know that we appreciate her unselfishness. We show too little honor and express our gratitude too infrequently to the most deserving persons on earth—our mothers. Lord MacCauley's advice is good for every young man or young woman, whose mother is yet with them: Make much of it while you have that most precious of all good gifts, a loving mother. Read the unfathomable love in those eyes, the kind anxiety of that tone and look, however slight your pain. In after life you may have friends, fond, dear, kind friends; but you will never have the inexpressible love and gentleness lavished upon you which none but a mother bestows. And if mother is no longer with us in the flesh, may we not reverence her memory and try to be the kind of a man or woman that our mothers hoped we would be.

Business Manager's Corner

"O, Ye of Little Faith"

"It can't be done" was the declaration of some pastors when it was suggested that the individual congregations take up the matter of placing the Evangelist in every family of active Brethren in their membership. Especially was this said to be true of the large churches, but some of our pastors had a larger vision of the possibilities of the plan and were willing to make the effort; and that they were largely successful is indicated by the achievements of such churches as Waterloo, Iowa; Lanark, Illinois; Flora, Indiana; Nappanee, Indiana; Conemaugh, Pennsylvania and Johnstown, Pennsylvania. And to prove that the plan is feasible each of these churches named has done it the SECOND TIME. The last one of the number was Johnstown from which we received last week a list of one hundred seventy names, as neatly prepared as any that ever came into this office.

This list places Johnstown away head of any other congregation in the brotherhood, but let me send out a challenge here to other of our larger churches to do what these have done. Come on Dayton, Goshen, North Manchester, South Bend, etc. As we said last week "there is always room at the top," but the last fellow will have to climb a little higher than the others to reach the top. However the success of this achievement is not measured by the NUMBER of subscribers in a congregation, but by the PERCENTAGE. Please keep this in mind as you go forth to conquer.

Other Things

As Business Manager we are interested in other things besides that of bringing the Evangelist subscription list up to FIVE THOUSAND by July thirty-first and one of them is the increased demand for Sunday school literature. At the present time we are completely sold out of all supplies for this quarter with the exception of the Home Department Quarterly; and there are not enough of these on hand to be worth mentioning. This means that our schools have largely recovered from the falling away occasioned by the influenza epidemic and various winter ills and that they are now well on their way to their oldtime vigor, and we rejoice with them.

1719. Two Hundred Years of Brethrenism in America 1919

A New and Up-to-date Brethren Day Program has been prepared for the celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of Brethrenism in America. A letter containing full particulars has been mailed to every pastor in the brotherhood. If not received within a few days write the undersigned for a copy of the letter. Let us make the year 1919 memorable in the history of Brethrenism by an appropriate celebration of this bi-centennial and a great forward movement.

"One Thing More and I am Through"

How often we ministers have prevaricated when we have made that statement when it was time to close a sermon and we couldn't find a quitting place. But when I make the following statement I think my readers will agree with me it is time to be through and that I should quit and I will not disappoint them. The thing is this—on our books we have accounts against our churches and Sunday schools amounting to two thousand five hundred dollars. For companies with large capital this would be a mere pittance, but to a company with no more working capital than that of the Brethren Publishing Company it means a great deal, and we would urge the churches and Sunday schools to meet their bills as promptly as possible, and with them we would include the MANY pastors who have forgotten to remit for the Conference Reports that were sent them some months ago. Our wants are simple—simply this, PAY UP.

Prof. Edwin Elsworth Jacobs, Ph. D.

PRESIDENT-ELECT OF ASHLAND COLLEGE

Dr. Jacobs is eminently fitted by the endowment of a brilliant mind, by thorough training through many years of assiduous study, by intimate knowledge of college requirements and standards, by a demonstrated loyalty to the Brethren church and by high Christian ideals and character to be the leader of our educational institution.

Further word concerning the action of the board of trustees of Ashland College will appear next week, by an authorized committee.

Prof. W. D. Furry, Ph. D.

Who has resigned the presidency of Ashland College to take effect at the close of the school year. Dr. Furry is without peer as a scholar in the Brethren Church. He has preformed a great service for the church during the eight years of his administration. And for a number of years his splendid leadership has been commanded not only by the college but by missionary, philanthropic and patriotic interests. He will be remembered greatly for his service to Ashland College as he labors in his new field.

THE FATHER A MAKER OF MEN

No one occupies such a commanding position as Father. Mother's position is more subtly powerful, but father's is more conspicuous and controlling. He is a great man when he is true to his calling, so great that God uses him and his attitude toward his offspring to illustrate the divine attitude and function with relation to men. He is a noble, inspiring personage; he is the ideal of every youth; he is the defender of every home. God bless and cause to be honored, our fathers, who are true to their calling, their highest God-given responsibilities—the making of men.

The noble father, the one who is true to his calling is not primarily a getter of wealth, notwithstanding the fact that most fathers seem to consider that their highest duty and function. He does rightly consider it his duty to provide for the material needs of his household, but that does not make it his first duty to amass a fortune. It is no small task for the father without a financial boost to feed, clothe and educate a half dozen, more or less, little souls of his own flesh and blood, but even that is not his supreme duty. There are fathers who provide every material need and make it possible for their children to have the very best educational and social advantages and yet they fail in their highest function—the making of men.

The true father does not make the gaining of power his great aim in life. He may legitimately seek places of influence and control over men, he may direct great undertakings and exercise authority over vast numbers of his fellowmen. But he does not lose sight of the fact that that is not his first duty. This is a very hard thing to do, we are told,—to keep ever fresh in mind the fact that more important than any power he may wield and more sacredly obligating than any duty to the public is his primary God-given duty and responsibility—the making of men.

The real father does not allow social position and engagements to take his attention from his great calling. Father may be a most popular man in social circles, he may be a leader among men, he may be the idol of his community but he does not seek such distinction at the expense of being a faithful father. It may be doubted if the average father is thus scrupulous about his primary function. If it is true that a tree is rightly judged by its fruit and that fathers may be judged in the same manner, there are many who care supremely for social position, for the leadership of the gang or crowd and for being rated as a "good fellow" by their associates and as a result they are failures as fathers. For the sake of popularity and position they sacrifice their noblest calling—the making of men.

The quest of learning is a noble pursuit; men may well spend much time, effort and money in getting knowledge, in finding out the secrets that God has so wisely and skillfully hidden away in the earth and in the many creatures of his handiwork, but even that is not worthy to be compared with his first great task. If a father should gain the whole world of knowledge and lose his own boy, what is he profited? Can he exchange learning for a noble son, or wisdom for a virtuous daughter? If he should become able to understand all the mysteries concerning the hosts of heavenly bodies, compute the age of the sun and to divulge the secrets of a single cell of life, would all that knowledge repay him for the consciousness of having neglected his divinest duty of life—the making of men?

Some fathers are thoroughly selfish. Their idea of their position is one of liberty to do just as they please, as may suit their convenience or bring them the greatest pleasure. They look upon themselves as being privileged to seek their own selfish pleasure and enjoyment regardless of the inconvenience or hardship or harm that may thereby be brought upon home and children. If it is an "occasional glass" or a double portion they wish to drink, they drink it. If they wish to spend their evenings and money in a gaming room, who should say them nay? If they find more pleasure in loafing in some public place exchanging filthy stories, while their boys, having stolen away from home after them, are strolling about the streets, than in staying with their families and giving proper example and instruction to their children why should they deny themselves that preferred pleasure? It is the duty of the mother to care for the children. Who is she that she should ask or expect the father's help? Such selfishness, such supreme concern for their own pleasure and dislike to be troubled with the care of their children makes them unworthy of the honored name father, and wantonly indifferent to their highest obligations—the making of men.

There are fathers who look upon their positions as one of absolute authority; they are tyrants, lords of all they survey in their homes. There are no rights but their own; no privileges to be accorded but to themselves; no thoughts worthy of consideration but their own. No explanations of their rulings could be expected; no sharing of their purposes and aims in keeping with their dignity; no confiding with their sons as to the "whys" and "wherefores" of certain prohibitions can be considered. It would lower the majestic father's sense of superiority. There are not a few fathers to be found in our land who in one way or another show themselves tyrants. They greatly concern themselves about their children's obedience, but their iron rule causes rebellion and anarchy rather than submission and conformity. They do not know that he who would be greatest in his own household must be the servant of all and humblest in spirit. While seeking to lord it over their own flesh and blood, they are making impossible their performance of the greatest task God has given them—the making of men.

Blessed is that father who understands the greatness and sacredness of his calling, who understands that no other responsibility in life can compare with that which God has placed upon him in the giving unto him a little child and who by prayer, right example, wise counsel, companionship and loving discipline seeks to be to his boy or girl all that a father may be. He it is who under God is performing the greatest work possible to any man—the making of worthy Christian men. God bless such fathers and may their numbers increase. We praise the living and revere the dead. We honor noble fatherhood everywhere.

Still Comes the Cry of Those in Need

Every day our ears catch the mournful, appealing cry of souls in distress. Christian America has given much and some have sacrificed much, but still the awful conditions or ravaged Armenia and Syria, as well as other innocent sufferers from the terrible war, have not begun to be met. We think we have been very generous to the suffering world because so many millions have been contributed to its relief. But after all we have only given a mite out of our superabundance. America does not know what real need means and she has scarcely learned the first principles of sacrifice. A few individuals have; but as a people we scarcely felt the strain of the war. We are in the main still extravagant and self-satisfied and self-centered. We wish to live our lives of pleasure, culture, prosperity and progress while half the world is torn with wounds and dying for want of food and clothing. There have been many generous responses, but they have not been anywhere near what might be expected as an expression of a great wealthy country's sympathy for a distressed and dying people.

A letter from Major James R. Nicol of Beirut shows that the need of clothing is so great that many people have to borrow garments before they can appear on the street and make their way to headquarters where food is distributed. As Brethren, let us do our part to bring relief to millions of God's suffering little ones. Major Nicol's letter follows:

"When we came into Syria after the occupation, it might really almost be said that there was no clothing in the Lebanon mountains. Some who appeared on the street in a fairly respectable way were found to have no underclothing of any sort and very little bedding in their homes. Cases are reported to me constantly where women have to borrow clothing to come down to the headquarters, and certain pieces of clothing are handed from one person in a village to another; and this is the condition even after we have been working as hard as possible to make and distribute clothing for months past. We should have had at least 500,000 garments to distribute, whereas the best we have been able to do up to the present is to make and distribute about 100,000. This clothing need will go on for some time to come, as very little cloth is coming in and most of the people in the mountains have no means for purchasing what there is here."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We have just received word that Brother J. Wesley Platt has organized a new Sunday school and church at Manteca, California and has ordered some Sunday school supplies. It will be remembered that the recent Northern California conference was held there with a view to launching a Brethren church at that place. At that time $5,000 dollars were raised toward a church building. May the Lord prosper our youngest church, under the efficient leadership of Brother and Sister Platt.

Sister J. L. Kimmel writes that Muncie's foreign mission offering amounted to seventy-five cents per member instead of "25c per member" as reported by Brother Bauman in the Evangelist dated April 16th. That is a big difference and we are pleased to publish the correction, and we know Brother Bauman will be glad to credit Muncie with every cent she gave. Brother Bauman keeps very accurate records, but a slip of the pen or typewriter key may occur occasionally with any of us. We are not surprised however that Muncie wants the correction made; any church would. That offering is certainly a thing to be proud of, especially for a little mission church. How surprisingly our mission churches are coming forward!

We are in receipt of a card announcing the beginning of an evangelistic meeting on May 4th, in the Second Brethren church of Philadelphia, under the leadership of Brother Louis S. Bauman. A list of subjects are printed on the back of the card. With two men of such evangelistic fervor as Brethren Bowman and Bauman in a campaign together, we may expect a very successful meeting. May the Lord bless them and build up the "Whole Gospel Mission church" in that great city.

You will not neglect to look at the program in this issue of the Maryland-Virginia conference. Brother Riddle, the conference secretary, accompanies it with a notice to the members of that district. We notice the schedule of some very interesting subjects which offer splendid opportunities to those assigned to handle them. The program is not overcrowded as programs often are. It only remains for the Brethren of that district to make it a success by prayer, attendance and adherence to the program.

Brother W. C. Teeter comes to us with his "Doings at Dayton," and there certainly have been some "doings" there. Among other things, they sprung a surprise on their pastor, Brother Cobb, just as they were about to begin a revival meeting, and made him a present of a "century check." Perhaps this was in anticipation of the Victory Loan drive. Any way, it is evident, the Dayton folks love their pastor and are concerned about letting him know it. The occasion for this demonstration of affection was Brother Cobb's birthday. The church has recently experienced a revival resulting in a goodly number of confessions (see the report for the number). Brother Trout of Berlin, Pa., did the preaching.

Every reader of the Evangelist has doubtless read the announcement of the new Brethren Day program which has been gotten up under the direction of Brother A. D. Gnagey, Editor of the Sunday School Publications. This program if carried out as planned will make a very successful and profitable service. The addresses to be given by local talent in the various churches, are really valuable and are put up separately from the program proper so that they may be preserved for reference. Every member ought to have a copy of these addresses, as they have a distinct value for every Brethren. Many orders have already been received and filled. Brethren Day is not far off, so get your orders in soon. The profits will go into the Permanent Literature Improvement Fund. Let us delight the heart of Brother Gnagey, as well as the hearts of all associated with him in this undertaking, by buying large numbers of this program. It is something worth while.

A man never climbs so high but what there is always found some one who will climb a little higher. It is also true of churches, especially as regards giving to the College Endowment fund. Brother Beachler went out to Waterloo, Iowa, and instead of meeting his "Waterloo," he saw to it that Brother Stuckman and his Falls City cohorts met theirs. Brother Goughnour had been deliberately planning with his parishioners to take Falls City's pennant from them. And the plans were so well laid and executed that they went beyond all expectations. Well, Brother Stuckman and his faithful followers did a noble work and they are as glad as we are that Waterloo was able to do such a grand thing for dear old Ashland College. Our ministers all seem to be vying with one another to show the greatest loyalty to Ashland. Brother Goughnour is not one whit behind. He prepared the field well and when the veteran money-getter, Beachler, got on the field, there was nothing else to do but go over the top doubly as far as any other church had yet done. It was a great victory. With such a great rallying of the churches to the support of the college, the incoming president, Dr. E. E. Jacobs, will certainly be encouraged. No better man could be found to lead our only educational institution than Dr. Jacobs. He is thoroughly acquainted with the history of the school, has been on its faculty for years, is thoroughly acquainted with college requirements in general and is a scholar of which we may well be proud. He enjoys the unanimous support of the student body and is loved by all the students who have in former years taken work in his classes. All together, let us support our new college president and back our college with our money, students and prayers.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Interchurch World Movement. BY J. A. GARBER

Inter-activity and concerted effort have ceased to be novel terms. In 1906 John B. Sleeman and others issued a clarion call to the laymen of America irrespective of church affiliation to unite in sending the Gospel to the unevangelized nations. In 1910 the record-breaking missionary conference of Edinburg decided that no one church could evangelize the world, that all could not through unseemly competition in foreign lands and that world-wide evangelism is a task calling for co-operative work. In 1911 the Men and Religion Forward Movement sought to mobilize all Christian men and boys for a great advance in the home land. The last four years have demonstrated the necessity and possibility of international co-operation.

The Origin and Progress of the Movement

Together the Allies crushed kaiserism and militarism. But even so notable a victory has not saved the world. Rather it has afforded the church another opportunity to save the world. "Can the church save the day? If not the world is bankrupt. If the church cannot save the world today, society is insolvent. It is without assets in the hour of its heaviest liabilities." Troubled and challenged with these gripping convictions Dr. James I. Vance, Secretary, secured permission of the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Presbyterian church to call a meeting of like boards of other churches to consider the advisability of launching a United Protestant Program. When the invited representatives met last December, they insisted that Home Missions and Education be included. A little later the plan was endorsed by the Home Missions Council and Council of Educational Boards. Since, it has received the hearty endorsement of numerous denominations and allied interdenominational agencies like the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor. About a thousand delegates from these varied organizations shared in the first general national meeting at Cleveland on April 30 and May 1.

At that time policies tentatively formulated by the committees created by the previous conferences were presented for the information and inspection of the assembled representatives. Dr. J. Campbell White thought it surpassed the Edinburg Conference and said the heart of Christ must be cheered to see so many of his friends together in this high hour of human opportunity and destiny." Many shared this feeling. Clarity of vision, scope of purpose and catholicity of spirit combined to make this a most significant gathering. Speaking for himself and associates, Dr. S. Earl Taylor, the chairman, said we have not welcomed this movement in the sense that we have rushed into it lightly. It is going to cost life somewhere. It is going to take life-blood to put this thing through and the men are not going in lightly at all.

I do not find anybody that has apprehensive ideas as to how it ought to be done. We find deep conviction that it ought to be done.

The Movement Defined

The Interchurch World Movement was organized for purposes of co-operation, not union. It is a grouping of missionary, educational and philanthropic organizations within the several communions or denominations and of allied interdenominational agencies. It is not a combination of ecclesiastical bodies, it has not been proposed that any organization shall merge with any other, give up any of its distinctive features or surrender any of its rights. But "if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we shall have fellowship one with another."

It is a work that must be undertaken in no narrow or selfish, sectarian spirit. It cannot be a piece of denominational propaganda. It must be a sincere effort of a united church if it is to make its full contribution to the Christian welfare and happiness of a new world." Urging the necessity and possibility of such united effort, Dr. White said:

The war has brought the church to a new sense of her duties. People who never dreamed of their sons crossing the sea now think about it without so much terror. If our sons who have crossed the sea then could realize that it wouldn't be so serious a thing to cross it again! The geography of all intelligent people of the world has been greatly broadened and their horizon pushed back in these last years and the war has illustrated the necessity and the value of a degree of co-operation among nations that we have never had before. The war would not have been won yet unless we had worked together as nations and we did it without sacrificing our autonomy or our sovereignty. Can nations do more than churches?

There are denominations in this country that are afraid to come into this movement now for fear their autonomy, their sovereignty, their individuality might be sacrificed. It is the last thing that need happen. Unless a denomination is made stronger by these contacts, there would be something the matter with the contacts. Never, while any denomination has any conviction will it be asked to sacrifice that conviction. It ought to maintain its conviction and follow it as long as it has it. It is the only way to maintain any right moral relations with God, but surely contact with other friends of Christ is going to broaden our ideas about Christ's abundant life and his world program and help us, as it has helped us in the past, to much of that which is richest and deepest and best in our own life. War has brought the conviction that God has prepared the whole world for the greatest expansion of Christianity that history has witnessed.

FATHER. By Orman C. Emery

(Selected by Theodore Parker Gnagey)

Father! No language is perfect without the word; no home complete without the relation; no nation safe without its defense. Father! The hope of the race; the safeguard of society; the defense of all things good and pure.

Father is a synonym of love, courage, hope and helpfulness; for strength, intellect and victory. No word formed by human tongue means so much to the world, and none has been so woven into all its history. From the time savage men fashioned crude weapons with which to protect their homes from others more savage, to the present, when a father's wisdom safeguards his loved ones and his foresight provides against a time of need, the place he has held has been unique.

In war and conflict the father has ever been most daring and courageous; in music, art and letters he has been supreme; in statesmanship and diplomacy his prestige has been undisputed; in making the history of the world he has been foremost.

Without attempting to usurp the place that motherhood occupies—a place bought by love, sacrifice, purity and gentleness and made sacred by devotion and sacredness—even a more exalted place must be accorded to fatherhood, which has supplied the incentive and prompted the ambition for the epoch makers of all time.

In prosperity a father's equipoise shields from many unwise and harmful things and in adversity it is a father's wisdom and courage that saves from despair and dissolution.

In times of peace, when problems are to be solved, fathers are chosen for the task and when the clamor of war demands the service of men, they are first to respond.

When God called Abraham from obscurity to become the progenitor of a people which he might call his own, he promised that he should be "the father of many nations." When the psalmist gave expression to his conception of God's love for mankind, he likened it to the pity of a father.

When Christ attempted to portray the deepest and most abiding love of humankind, he spoke to the incomparable parable of a prodigal son's forgiveness by his father, and when he gave the world an ideal prayer which was to be repeated to the end of time, he prefaced it with the words: "Our Father."

EPITAPH ON MY EVER HONORED FATHER

By Robert Burns

O ye whose cheek the tear of pity stains,
Draw near with pious reverence and attend!
Here lie the loving husband's dear remains,
The tender father, and the gen'rous friend;
The pitying heart that felt for human woe,
The dauntless heart that feared no human pride;
The friend of man—to vice alone a foe;
For "ev'n his failings lean'd to virtue's side."

"If So Be That."

"As many as received him (Christ) to them gave he the right to become children of God" (John 1:12 R. V.).

Paul says, "If children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him" (Rom. 8:17). According to this verse, the condition upon which we become joint-heirs with Christ is that we suffer with him.

The apostles in Jerusalem had experience in suffering for Christ. After they were beaten, they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name's sake (Acts 5:40, 41). Others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection (Heb. 11:35). Thousands upon thousands since then have had like experience in suffering, or giving their lives for Christ's sake.

The following scripture texts show the mind of the Spirit in regard to suffering for Christ, and its results. "Unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake" (Phil. 1:29). "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (2 Tim. 3:12). "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him" (2 Tim. 2:12). "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy" (1 Peter 4:12, 13).

The Lord said concerning Saul of Tarsus, "I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake" (Acts 9:16). Paul said, "We must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God" (Acts 14:22). Jesus says, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven" (Matt. 5:11, 12).

By Samuel Kiehl

If we eliminate suffering for Christ's sake, where is the promise for joint-heirship? When we, in our zeal for the welfare of the believer, try to persuade him that he is a joint-heir with Christ by quoting to him Romans 8:17 and leave out the conditional clause, if so be that we suffer with him, are we teaching the whole gospel?

Let us be careful that we do not add to, or take away from the word of God (Revelation 22:18, 19) when teaching others the way of salvation (John 3:16; Mark 16:16; Romans 10:9), and the reward for faithful service (Revelation 2:10).

According to "the word of God," we (believers in Christ) are in the Spirit, if so be that the spirit of God dwell in us (Rom. 8:9). We are joint-heirs with Christ if so be that we suffer with him (Rom. 8:17). God works after the counsel of his own will (Eph. 1:11). "Thus saith the Lord" is final with those who take him at his word. The Lord help us to do so. We ask in his name.

Unwritten Sayings of Jesus. By J. A. McInturff

We do not have in the gospels a full record of "all" that Jesus did or said during the three years of his active ministry. John says "many other signs did Jesus * * * which are not written in this book." He further records that "if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself would not contain the books that should be written." It is very interesting to the student to take long walks in the field of the unwritten sayings of Jesus. Many of the valuable sayings are preserved by the system of making marginal notes. When copyists made a new copy of one of the gospels they would make a note of the unwritten saying in the margin, and sometimes when a copy was made later by another he would take it to be an omission and place it in the text. An example is the account of the woman taken in adultery which stands in John's gospel 7:53 to 8:11. It is not in the most authoritative manuscripts, nor is it a part of the original text. Some manuscripts have this passage inserted in Luke 21:38 following. This is one of the authentic sayings of Jesus and was preserved in this way. Another is found in that valuable treasure of the University of Cambridge, the Codex Bezae manuscript, which was written in the sixth century. In Luke, sixth chapter, we have this unwritten saying inserted: "On the same day he beheld one work on the Sabbath, and said to him: 'Man, if thou knowest what thou art doing blessed art thou; but if thou knowest not, thou art accursed and a transgressor of the law.'" This is no part of Luke's gospel but came into the record from the marginal notes. However, it rings clear as a true unwritten saying of Jesus.

We now turn to Ephesus where St. John held a long ministry. Tradition has it that at the end of his ministry the disciples asked that he commit to writing the "sayings of Jesus" which he had taught them; but this he could not do, and we have preserved by the pen of one of the early writers one of these "sayings." St. Justin, the Apologist and Martyr gives it in his "Dialogue with Trypho." In whatsoever employments I may surprise you, in these also will I judge you. This "saying" refers to the "coming of Christ, and agrees with the gospel "saying." It is the test of the unguarded moment which reveals our true character. Our only security against "surprise" lies in ceaseless vigilance. Again we have another unwritten saying of Jesus in Clement of Alexandria in his "Miscellanies," in which he gives a quotation from a gospel of Matthias the apostle selected in the place of Judas. The gospel has perished, but we learn that it was entitled "Traditions." Here is the saying: "The beginning of knowledge is 'wondering at things before you; laying this down as the first step toward the knowledge which lies beyond.'" It was Plato who said that "wondering" was the beginning of philosophy. Archimedes noticed one day when he was taking a bath that upon entering, the water was displaced and he "wondered" and discovered the law of specific gravity. As Sir Isaac

Newton sat in his garden and saw an apple fall, he "wondered" why it fell and discovered the law of gravitation. James Watt sat watching the tea-kettle boiling and he "wondered at the thing before him" and discovered the wonderful power of steam. So we learn that this unwritten saying is scientifically true. Another was found by Dr. Alexander Duff, as he journeyed up the Ganges river, arriving at the town Futehnur-Sikri, a ruinous place except for a large Mohammedan mosque, and the large arch at the city gate which held in its stony grip this inscription: "Jesus on whom be peace, has said: 'The world is merely a bridge: ye are to pass over it, and not to build your dwellings upon it.'" Traditional history tells of the journey of Thomas and Bartholomew to India, and the Mohammedans hold Jesus as a great prophet, and indeed three chapters of their bible, the Koran, are devoted to him. The word bridge is not in the Bible, but the setting of this "saying" is at Tyre, the city our Lord visited in the beginning of his last year's work. Tyre is three-quarters of a mile out at sea and there was a mole or bridge, or filling of dirt which connected it to the land, and it was here as our Lord looked at the people pass that he uttered this unwritten saying. About 60 miles from Cairo, Egypt, is the ruined city, Oxyrhynchus. Here the British while exploring, found two sets of "Sayings of Jesus." Here is the one: "Jesus saith: 'Where-soever they may be, they are not without God; and where there is one alone, even there I am with him. Raise the stone, and there thou shalt find me; cleave the wood, and I am there.'" In Clementine Homilies 2:51 we have another: "Show yourselves approved bankers." Another historian gives this one: "It was not of grudgingness that our Lord gave the charge in a certain gospel: 'My mystery is for me and the sons of my house.'" What a world of truth which fell from his lips has died with the ruins of the past, and forever fallen into silence.

Making God Real to a Little Child. By Mrs. J. Allen Miller

God created nothing so wonderful as a child. He can rise to the heights of wisdom and power of which we as yet have little conception. At first the child can take in a certain class of impressions only. It is better to think of him as an empty vessel of a certain size and texture. He is made so that he can hold certain things and a certain amount; but the vessel has nothing in it yet. It will never have anything in it that is not put into it. It will be very hard to put into it something that it was not made to hold, or to make it hold more than nature constructed for it. Yet no one in advance can estimate the character capacity of a child.

Imitation, the power which is of so great importance through all the years of parental guidance, appears at a very early age—some writers say that it holds its compelling place on from the fifteenth week until reason has crowded it from its rule. It is the spiritual hand which the child outreaches and with which he takes to himself all within sight and hearing. This is the golden opportunity for the work of the parent or guardian spirit. Imitation and authority have their fullest operation at this time. In this imitative period he is building with the best material that is within his observation a life-castle of his own. He is now forming habits that lie at the deepest foundation of his life, for habit is nothing more than self-imitation. What an opportunity does this activity of imitation and imagination afford the parent to direct in his world-building by supplying ideal and beautiful material out of which a soul-enlarging world may be constructed.

If the church has a mission which can be accomplished only for those who attend its services, the parent must at an early age of the child endeavor to establish a love for and a habit of church attendance. The feeling of need of the church is a childhood growth. I think a child should pray before he can understand the relation of God to man. All the religious activities may precede the comprehension of the reason of them. The church service and communion with God should become familiar to the child before he can comprehend them. The developing of this God-consciousness is of great importance. The child can be taught the habit of prayer. It is a great opportunity to teach him a certain formula of words, the deep meaning of which he cannot understand, but as their meaning grows in his understanding their moral force will be felt.

Mrs. Lamoreaux says, "The nurture of these years is as silent as that of a dewdrop upon the blade of grass, but it is as real. God's voice is the still small voice that ever speaks in quietness. The stillness of the moment at the mother's knee, the prayer repeated in the reverent, low tone of the mother's voice, the earnest prayer offered for him in his presence, the Christlike living in the home, all carry their holy influence to his soul. He feels God without knowing him."

Character is the by-product of actions, and habitual actions thus are of most intense importance. Horace Bushnell said that more could be done to make or mar the eternal destiny of a child before three years of age than could be done afterwards. G. Campbell Morgan said he cannot remember any definite time of his conversion. He believes that the gift of grace may be unconsciously received, especially by children who have been taught from earliest years that they belong to Christ. Phillips Brooks felt the call to preach and went to talk to his pastor. His pastor remarked that it was usual to be converted before beginning to preach. Brooks replied that he knew nothing about conversion. To the soul comes a time when it awakens from vague into distinct consciousness of God, when its spiritual cravings take definite direction. "To make the child a Christian is not our business. Our work is to see that it never ceases to be a Christian." The child is in the kingdom. Did not Christ point to the child as the pattern of what we ought to be.

Thus a child may learn of God through imitation and early impressions. Teach him the personality of God and he will think of him as a great and wonderful being who loves him and cares for him.

A child learns of the Fatherhood of God through the relationship of the earthly father. God may be made real to him through prayer. If he realizes he is talking to someone he is impressed by his personality. And we must teach our children that, though God is kind, he will not give them just what they ask any more than a wise parent would grant any wish, but that God has a wise and good purpose for every child of his and we ought to open our lives to God so that he can do in us what he wants to do.

It is hard for a child and also for an elder person to think of God as caring for each of us wherever we are all the time. This illustration may prove helpful. I once visited the city library in Chicago. As I entered the building I saw only books, rows and rows of books. But when the librarian entered he knew every book, its author; its title, the edition, the value, the contents, the purpose. So God looks at us not as a mass, but as individuals. He gives to our lives the dignity of his individual care. He is the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob.

Increasing Attendance in the Sunday School. By Sylvester Whetstone

A few years ago in one of our western states was a great stretch of desert that was undeveloped, but which today is producing wheat, alfalfa and fruits. All that was needed was some one to believe in the uncultivated field and to give it a chance. This reminds one of the great Sunday school field that is yet undeveloped, and like the desert all that is needed is some one to give it a chance.

With a population of over ninety million people in the United States, the International Sunday School Association reports that the total Sunday school enrollment is only about eighteen and one-half million persons. This includes all officers and teachers, Cradle Roll and Home Department members, as well as active pupils. With this fact before us we are made to believe that something is wrong with our method of running the Sunday schools. We have improved our Sunday schools, but the enrollment has not kept pace with the improvement. This is doubly significant when we realize that family prayers, grace at meals and the Bible bedtime stories are often unknown today. More and more the home is depending upon the Sunday school and the Sunday school is not rising to its opportunity.

Many Sunday schools are no larger today than they were five years ago, while others have doubled and some a great deal better than that. Why? Every Sunday school has within its reach many folks who are not attending any place, many of these are members of the church too, strange as that may seem. The problem is how to reach these folks. There are many methods used in the Sunday schools today to increase attendance. Some of these twentieth-century plans to make a "big Sunday school quick," are like mushrooms; they are good while they last, but they are soon over and forgotten. A contest may be all right in some schools if properly handled, but it often does more harm than good; however, this is not always the fault of the contest, but the fellows who man it.

There is no set plan that will answer the question of increasing attendance that will work successfully at all times and places. The child as well as the adult is, in the long run, permanently attracted toward those things which satisfy a real need in his life. Therefore, we cannot depend upon exhortation, appeal to duty, or artificial incentive to secure Sunday school attendance. These are always second rate and always temporary. I do not mean to say that none of these motives or methods should be used, but I do say that the Sunday school must fill a real place in the pupil's life or he will discard it.

The tendency to recognize the pupil's need in all Sunday school activity strikes at the very root of the problem and this is already reacting very favorably upon the attendance problem. We must realize that the Sunday school exists for the sake of the pupil, when we have done this we have found the key to Sunday school attendance. When the Sunday school fills a real need in the life of the pupil no methods can keep him away. Some one has said, "A great many schools are using up a lot of energy urging every one to come to nothing," and there is a lot of truth in that statement. There is little value in urging folks to come to a school where there is nothing worth while when they do come. This fact is not an excuse for inactivity, but a challenge to individual Christians to make our Sunday schools worth while.

A Sunday school that is interesting, helpful and uplifting will of itself have a strong drawing power. Some of the "clap-trap" methods may enthrall folks for a while, but in the long run, the school which does honest, faithful work, whose sessions are carried on with life and vigor and tremendous earnestness, whose desire is to win souls for Christ and build Christian character, will need very little special effort to increase attendance.

Far too many Sunday schools are seeking numbers for the sake of numbers, instead of numbers for the sake of increasing their usefulness. Make your Sunday school just as good as possible, but remember goodness does not depend on bigness, and many schools are working for bigness rather than goodness. A Sunday school must be ready to take care of the increased attendance if it expects to hold its members; that it is, it must be properly organized and have the best of co-operation, ready to fill a real need in the life of every one it comes in contact with.

When our Sunday schools are put on a basis of service rather than "methods," we will have taken a big step toward solving the attendance problem. The thing we need is not methods, but men; not rules, but hearts set on fire.

The Tithe is the Lord's. By Rev. John R. Weathers

God's cause in the world is languishing for want of financial support. Men of ability, zeal, and devotion to the cause of the "pure and undefiled religion" of which James speaks, hesitate to enter boldly and exclusively into the work of teaching and preaching the gospel, because of the uncertainty of financial support. Men must receive the necessary financial compensation for their work in any vocation. Labor in the Lord's vineyard should not be excepted. The Levites and the tabernacle and the necessities of the poor were specifically and amply provided for in the theocracy of the Jews. Is there any reason why the church should be denied the same benefit? It is practically under the same divine leadership.

The tithe was God's tax-rate throughout the Patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations, and was pleasing to the Lord. It existed centuries before it was incorporated into the Mosaic code. In the twenty-seventh chapter of Leviticus it is divinely stated that "The tithe * * * is the Lord's; it is holy unto the Lord." This language expresses a divine principle that has never been authoritatively revoked. In my humble judgment, derived from searching the scriptures, the tithe is basic and eternal in the economy of God.

Many devout men seem to think that all requirements expressed in the Mosaic law were annulled at the time of the crucifixion of Jesus of Nazareth. But were they? If so, what did that same Jesus mean when he assured the Jewish multitude, in his immortal sermon on the Mount, that he "came not to destroy the law or the prophets, but to fulfill;" and that "till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle should in no way pass from the law till all be fulfilled?" The ceremonial provisions of the law were fulfilled and passed away because they were no longer of practical use in the divine economy. But can we say this of the tithe-requirement? Is a liberal supply of money no longer needed in the proper conduct of the Lord's work in the world? If so, what has been substituted for it? If the things of the law were all typical of things in the new dispensation, what did the law of the tithe typify? It was specific and definite. The faithful Jew contributed to the Lord's treasury at least one-tenth of his increase. This was not determined by his worldly and fallible judgment, but by the Lord's specific requirement.

The tithe pleased the Lord then; will a less amount please him now? Has he stated, even by implication, that men may "chip in" according to their own feelings in the matter? If so, I would like to know where to man's happy and acceptable relationship to God are the slackers and robbers of God? It is a fruitful and vital question.

The Atonement. BY N. W. JENNINGS

(Sermon preached at the Southern California Bible Conference)

TEXT: And the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin. I John 1:7b.

I am blessed, I am privileged above the angels to speak upon the most profound subject in all the Bible. The cleansing blood of the Son of God.

Those words, his blood are the most significant words in our Christian vocabulary. It is the fountain which purifies all truth; it is the king word in the world; it is the master of all that is good and bad; it keeps pure and makes pure the impure.

Thank God there is taking place in these days among the people of God who love his eternal Gospel, a re-discovery of that heavenly fountain filled with blood. O for a new revelation and vision of a blood red Gospel which is the road to the blood red fountain gushing from a blood red cross.

Reject the blood of Jesus and you put out the light of your own soul whether you be a preacher, bishop, priest, Pope or what not. No preacher or teacher has one ray of divine light in which to walk, and to lead others to the Christ who reject his atoning blood.

Midnight darkness overshadows every soul who repudiates the all cleansing blood of Jesus. The man who says in his heart I never shall accept his blood, I do not hesitate to say upon the authority of God's word that the soul is sinking fast beneath the mad dashing waves of the darkest crime of crimes never more to rise, "for there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin," and "there is no REMISSION of sin without the shedding of blood."

The blood of Jesus is the crown of the revelation of the heart of God. It is the white robe covering all the mountains of holy doctrinal truths in the Bible. The atonement is the eternal voice crying Victory for Jesus. The atonement is the blood red stream circling around the king-man—Jesus standing in that circle in a class all alone. There is but one gospel to preach, namely the gospel of the Son of God. All life, light and immortality can be summed up in one word blood.

But some one may say there are other doctrines to be obeyed. True, but the life of them which is Jesus Christ must be accepted first. A mother can write her sweet love-letters to her son or daughter, and they are precious and received with gladness and joy, but mother is a thousand times more precious than her letters. Jesus is our very life. "I am the vine and ye are the branches." In him we are "changed from glory to glory." "Ye are the light of the world." "Ye are the salt of the earth," members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones. What close relationship!

The atonement of Jesus is a new sun which came up over the hill-top of the cross, which brought to all the world light and salvation. O wonders of wonders! He poured out his life's blood for me and for you, that he might wash all our sins away. It is the sweetest music that ever floated down over the eternal shining worlds, that ever fell on the hearing of poor sinners, "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

Faith in the blood of Jesus is the golden key that unlocks his glory, then the soul walks in to see revealed his towering glory and to sound the depths of his love, to experience day by day the saving and the cleansing power of his blood from all sin.

There is but one way to heaven and that is the highway which goes by the old rugged cross. All the silver paths in the Old Testament lead straight through to the cross. Righteous Abel's blood made the path red to the cross on the Law side of life, but on the Grace side of life, the slain Lamb's blood made the path red from the cross to the white throne. "I am the way the truth and the light and no man cometh unto the Father but by me."

You cannot climb up to heaven by your morality. You may be as you think almost there, but your ladder will break and your fall will be great. Your culture, your refinement, your respectability and your achievements along scientific, historic and all other lines will not suffice. Reject the blood of Jesus, God's Son, and you lose your soul in hell and miss heaven.

In these days some little two-by-fours are stabbing at the very heart of the Son of God, and unblushingly walk through his life's blood. If such people only knew the love of God, instead of stabbing his Son with heartless sneers, their hearts would melt in love and they would lift the bloody cross and carry it everywhere shouting, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

When we are saved and cleansed through the blood we will be more than imitators of his life, we will be reproducers of his life. Theology is the science of religion but thank God salvation through the blood of Jesus is the grand experience of religion.

Take the blood out of the Bible and you have a stained Book. Take the blood out of the church and you have a lost church in a lost world. Take away the blood and you carry away redemption and salvation from every soul of man. When I see the precious blood of Jesus running through every avenue of my life I do rejoice with great joy. But even when I cannot see his blood because my faith is so tried, he sees it and passes on saying "Peace, peace." O my soul, there is no danger where the blood is on the door; precious blood, keeping blood, cleansing blood.

Let us as preachers be true to the word of God. A preacher should have the Holy Scriptures surging in his heart and life like the surging sea, then he would be bound to preach the word of God. And he would soon bare the name of a Gospel-preacher. What a title! If the message of the preacher comes from life, it will carry life with it. If the preacher has stored away in his soul God's Word, he will always have a fresh stream to send forth from the mighty moving fountain to his hearers.

Reject the blood of Christ and all is over. The gates of glory and divine grace are closed, the soul stagnated, the heart paralyzed, the conscience dead and the mind blighted.

Hear these immortal testimonies:

Hebrew 9:22,—“Without the shedding of blood is no remission of sin.”

Exodus 12:13,—“When I see the blood I will pass over you.”

I Peter 1:18-19,—“Forasmuch as ye know that ye are not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ as a lamb without blemish and without spot.”

Romans 3:25,—“Whom God has sent forth to be a propitiation through his blood.”

Romans 5:9,—“Much more then being justified through his blood we shall be saved from wrath through him.”

Ephesians 2:13,—“In whom we have redemption through his blood.”

Ephesians 1:7,—“Take heed therefore unto yourselves and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers to feed the church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood.”

Acts 20:28—"Who hath washed us from our sins in his own precious blood."
 Revelation 1:5—"Thou hast redeemed us to God by the blood."

Thank God for these scriptures which drop honey to the soul, sweeter than the honeycomb. The very crown and glory of life is the blood of our Savior. His blood puts the finishing touches of salvation on the soul. May God fully show us as ministers of his, that we are not called to preach to suit the artistic taste of any one, but to preach his word straight out.

We have a great task before us; sin abounds, "but grace much more abounds." Sin is as old as the rebellion in heaven. Thank God the remedy was provided for sin before the world was, for "He was a slain lamb before the foundation of the world to take away the sin of the world." Some presume that sin is unponderable, it was heavy enough to sink a guilty world into a sea of ruin, but blessed be God for his Son, who is strong enough to lift her out of her ruins." Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me." The most presumptuous sin that one could be guilty of is the sin of rejecting the precious blood of Jesus.

I sound a note of warning before I close. There are too many people who see the blood only for their church, their denomination, or their country. Let us not commit such a sin. His blood is not limited to any certain church or country. The foundation of his life's blood is bigger even than the world, and wider than all the seas. "He tasted death for every man." All kinds of sins are inculcated in the rejection of his blood. All are removed though they be piled up like mountains if his precious blood be accepted.

Oh that the world would find its way to the cross where the fountain was opened up for sin and uncleanness.

Let us shoulder the bloody rugged cross and walk with the King up the King's highway to the white throne. And all heaven will shout out loud "Welcome, welcome, welcome! ye overcomers through the blood of the Lamb."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Co-operation in the Master's Work

BY LLOYD E. HANG

OUR SCRIPTURE

I am the vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches: he that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me, ye can do nothing (John 15:1-5). For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal? Who then is Paul and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase. Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one: and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor. For we are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building (1 Cor. 3:4-9).

OUR MEDITATION

Paul, in his first letter to Timothy, after giving him encouragement and admonishment relative to the important as well as the seemingly difficult work which he was about to take up, says, "meditate upon these things (1 Tim. 4:15).

Let us seriously meditate for a short time concerning the importance of earnest and zealous co-operation in the greatest of all work, that of the Master; and also how we can bring the most effective co-operation about.

Co-operation in the Master's work primarily requires that we co-operate with him. We must become a partner with God and continually abide in him. "I am the vine; ye are the branches; as that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me, ye can do nothing" (John 15:5).

First of all, obedience is the paramount requirement. In any undertaking, no matter in what phase of life, for the accomplishment of any purpose, we must obey the creator and director of the plan for doing the work if effective results are to be obtained. God's plan of redemption could never have been realized, had obedience failed. From God's call of Abraham to the obedience of the Son of God, even unto the death of the cross; yes, and to this very moment, we find simple and unfailing obedience to God's will necessary for the full realization of his plan. There must be no doubt but that God will do his part, but we must be just as positive that he will not do our part.

Obedience begets Love. Nothing pleases the parent more than the loving obedience of the child, and our heavenly Parent wants our loving obedience too. If we love God, we must also love our brother in Christ and every fellow man in sin, for this is pleasing to him. Co-operation with God and our brother in rescuing our fellow man who is still in darkness, is nothing less than the expression of divine love within us, and is not looked upon as a mere performance of duty. Let us pray that we may have more of that love which the great and merciful heart of God manifested to the children of men—"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." Would not just a little more of this love in our hearts, the true and genuine love for others, intensify our efforts in the work for our Lord and Master? Would not the mountains of seeming difficulties in our Christian Endeavor sink into molehills of insignificance?

No matter how we endeavor to co-operate in the Master's work through obedience and love, it will still be impossible for us to obtain the spiritual power needed without prayer. Prayer is the power line leading from God—the Christian's powerhouse, through his Son into our lives. What a promise is John 14:13-14, "And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." Prayer however, like faith, must be coupled up with works. We can not pray for those in darkness and not act. It is for us to act; to give and sacrifice of life and substance for the fulfillment of his purpose, for certainly God expects us to help him answer our own prayers, and even also the prayers of others.

While we must abide in Christ and co-operate with him, we must not give little importance to the necessity of brotherly and harmonious co-operation with all of his children in the great work of advancing his kingdom in the hearts of men. In the fundamentals of his great plan, we can and must all be one. God depends upon you and me to carry forward the great work of redemption which he through his Son has begun. He depends upon no one else. We can not stand aloof from others who, though not believing and practicing certain ordinances as we do, yet continue to work righteousness; but our plain duty is to co-operate with them so that in our united strength, together with the power of the Holy Spirit, we may make it easier for God and the right to triumph, and harder for men to attain the things that are evil.

And how are we using the talents which God has given us? He has given them to us and expects us to use them for him. If we have five talents, are we continuing to in-

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Topic for May 25: Repentance. By Dr. J. M. Tombaugh

The gates of the kingdom of God are as wide as God's love, and are ample to admit all; but they are not high enough to permit a single impenitent soul to go through, and every sinner who would enter must enter on his knees. A holy God cannot look upon sin with any degree of allowance. In his sight all sin is so abhorrent that the sinner must forever renounce his sin, and turn away from its allowed practice, as an essential condition to the reception of the Holy Spirit and to the enjoyment of God's favor. This is repentance, and when joined with faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, it is evangelical repentance "unto salvation." This is the thorny path, the way of tears, and in many cases, of struggle too, by which the soul enters into peace and fellowship with God. There is no other way, and though it is pleasanter to preach of love and goodness and mercy, the fact of sin, and the sinner's accountability to God, must be fearlessly preached and pressed home to the individual soul. Until there is a recognition of guilt, and a due sense of the enormity of sin, there will be little appreciation of the office of Jesus as Savior, and no feeling of need on the sinner's part for mercy and help. But when once the Holy Spirit has produced, in the sinner's heart, a profound conviction of his deep sinfulness, then the way has been prepared for "repentance toward God."

While definitions often fail to define, the following definition of repentance given by a writer long ago, is remarkably accurate: "Repentance is a saving grace whereby a sinner, out of a true sense of his sin and apprehension of the mercy of God in Christ, doth with grief and hatred of his sin, turn from it unto God with full purpose of, and endeavor after, new obedience."

When John, the fore-runner of Jesus, was sent to prepare the way for the Lord's coming, the burden of his message was repentance. "Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," was the startling tidings which he brought. Peter, on the day of Pentecost, when he told of the New Kingdom and the conditions of membership in it, emphasized again the necessity of repentance, and said to those who had been "pricked in their heart" by a consciousness of guilt: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Not only on these two occasions, but everywhere and always in apostolic preaching, the necessity of repentance was insisted upon as an essential preliminary to obtaining the grace and favor of God.

If modern preaching fails to give adequate prominence to this important Bible teaching, and if, as Spurgeon once said: "The old fashioned doctrine of repentance is despised in these days," the result cannot be otherwise than that multitudes of unregenerate men and women, whose hearts have never been "broken for sin and from sin," will throng the churches, cherishing the delusive hope that they are on their way to glory.

As long as unsaved men boast of their own righteousness, and depend for salvation upon their moral virtues; as long as they profess their innocence, and pride themselves that they have wronged neither God nor man, the preaching of repentance is, to them, foolishness. Perhaps they will never get a true vision of the sinfulness of sin, nor realize that they are helpless and lost and guilty in the sight of God, so long as their spiritual teachers shun to declare the unwelcome but necessary truth. Perhaps the nearest to an acknowledgement of guilt they ever have heard in a public prayer in church was in words like these: "And now, Oh, Lord, if in our finite limitations we have made mistakes, or have been guilty of any wrong, we pray for pardon."—with the emphasis on the "if."

Sin is a fact; an ugly, hateful, alarming fact, and until there is a recognition of it and an acknowledgement, at least to ourselves, of our own guiltiness, the remedy which God has provided for its cure, is unavailing. It is true that repentance has to do chiefly with the will; the word means a "change of mind" and consequently a change of conduct too, but in order to effect a change of conduct, "it is necessary that the conscience be awakened and the emotions be stirred and aroused. Intensity of conviction is not; in every instance, essential to conversion, but where there is a true perception, by the sinner of his real state, as one of guilt and unworthiness, there will be, of necessity, grief and shame and anguish of heart.

There is no form of sorrow so bitter as that experienced by the sinner when his conscience is under the lash of self-condemnation. Peace of mind is impossible; there is utter dissatisfaction with self, and the soul is humiliated by a sense of guilt. Shame and remorse stab and torture the mind, and no number of good resolutions for the future can heal the wounds the past has made. Physical pain is a high form of suffering compared with the mental anguish inseparably connected with a deep sense of sin. One may bear with some composure the condemnation spoken by others, so long as he has a consciousness of his own innocence to sustain him, but when his own conscience becomes his accuser, and when in his heart he knows and feels his guilt—there is only one way to escape the agony of self-condemnation, and get back again the peace of which his sin has robbed him, and that is to confess and renounce his sin, and then, definitely and consciously accept Jesus as his sin-bearer and Savior. Not every conscience is equally tender even when awakened by the Holy Spirit. One person is disquieted and grieved at the recollection of some, almost unintentional wrong doing; he is rendered unhappy by the memory of having failed in some duty he owed to God, and the consciousness of having wickedly sinned destroys all his peace of mind, while another person may be guilty of the same offenses and feel but little distress of conscience because of it. The explanation of the difference between the two, is, the one has gained a clearer vision of spiritual things than the other; he appreciates the beauty of holiness more, and comprehends more fully the exceeding sinfulness of sin. Every lapse from duty, and every unrighteous act of which he is guilty, means to him failure and loss, and he is overwhelmed with confusion and shame when the Spirit of God reveals to him that he has sinned. The other man's lack of spirituality renders him incapable of appreciating the beauty of holiness and makes him insensible of the enormity of his guilt. Of the two, the man with the tenderer conscience and the deeper conviction is likely to become the happier and more useful Christian. However much or little spiritual agitation each may experience, whether they have much or little distress of mind, whether they shed few or many tears, is a matter of secondary importance. The thing of first importance is that they both, alike, renounce sin and resolve to sin no more.

A consciousness of personal guilt, a recognition of the true nature of sin, and at least some conception of the righteousness and holiness of God, are among the necessary antecedents to repentance. These emotions lead the sinner into a state of self-condemnation and to a mingled feeling of shame, and hatred of sin, but repentance is more than this. In its very nature it is a turning from sin and its allowed practice to God and a life of holiness and service. In the beginning of the new life the holiness and service may exist chiefly in the intention, but at least there must be a firm, deliberate intention and purpose to give up every sin and to spare none. The will must elect to surrender to God unconditionally and to obey him in all things.

This act of the sinner in turning to God from the things he once loved, and which now he hates, is made possible only by believing that God is merciful. No one can repent, in the sense in which the Scriptures exhort men to repentance, unless he has hope of forgiveness. There may be a profound disgust with self and sin, but evangelical repentance means not only that, but it means trust in Jesus as our personal Savior. It is the goodness of God, rather than fear of the consequences of sin, which lead men to repentance.

SECRETARY

Waterloo, Iowa Juniors

I will endeavor to give a very brief report from our Junior society. With a membership of 33, we are moving along nicely. Our meetings, which are held on Sunday afternoon at four o'clock are well attended and the Juniors are all very anxious and willing to do their part in helping to make these meetings what they ought to be. Each Sunday a different Junior takes charge of the meeting and I must say they lead very nicely.

With the assistance of the superintendent, the leader makes out his or her own program. We have hanging on the wall of our society room the Junior Christian Endeavor pledge. This is always read by all of the children at our consecration meetings, the first Sunday of each month.

What a fine opportunity comes right here in these meetings of teaching the Juniors to pray, and we are glad for the way in which they respond when called upon for sentence prayers. We use in our society the song book, Junior Carols, which we all like very much.

The two favorite songs are, "Loyal Juniors" and "Sound the Battle Cry."

Quite often we have special music at our meetings. Sometimes it is furnished by some of the girls, and the boys too are always ready to do their part along this line.

One thing which interests the Juniors very much and which we know is of great benefit to them is the Bible Drill which is a part of the program each Sunday. This is conducted by the superintendent, and about ten minutes is given to it. The books of the Bible have been learned, many verses have been memorized, and we are committing to memory the Beatitudes, the Ten Commandments, etc. Our pastor, Brother Goughnour, comes in occasionally and gives the boys and girls a talk which they appreciate very much.

Making scrap books for sick children and going out singing for shut ins are some of the things our Juniors have enjoyed doing.

Working with the Juniors is a great privilege indeed.

May God abundantly bless every Junior Christian Endeavor society. ETTA LICHTY.

Seven Facts About Tithing

By Dr. Harvey Reeves Calkins

There is a question that sometimes perplexes sincere people. It is this: Is a tenth rigidly required from every man, under every circumstance. Or, will not the all-wise and all-loving Father give special guidance, so that a man can set apart some other proportion, rather than a tenth, as an acknowledgement of the divine ownership? Certainly, we do not affirm that the eternal God has no power to alter the ratio which he himself has ordained. And certainly a child of God should receive personal guidance from the Holy Spirit. But personal desire and personal convenience are very easily mistaken for personal guidance. Before claiming special illumination one would do well to consider the following facts. They are not here listed to coerce a man's free conscience, but certainly the average man will not turn lightly from the uniform practice of good men through all the centuries in order to maintain the right of "private judgment."

1. The setting apart of some proportion of income is the acknowledgement of God's ownership. This is fundamental and beyond the sphere of private judgment. A tenth is the proportion that has been observed since the earliest days of human worship.

2. This proportion was fixed in very ancient times, is known to have been recognized in different nations, and is definitely recorded in the most ancient scriptures.

3. This proportion was paid by Abraham, "God's friend," as an act of personal loyalty, and by other patriarchs, long before the statutes of the Jews were recorded.

4. This proportion, in set terms, was commanded as "the law" for the Jewish people, and was uniformly followed during the entire history of this chosen race.

5. This proportion received promise of God's peculiar blessing when he rebuked a neglectful generation for their presumption in offering shrunken values, and when he commanded them again to "bring the whole tithe into the store house."

6. This proportion was definitely sanctioned, and the paying of tithes recognized and honored by Jesus Christ in the words, "These ought ye to have done."

7. This proportion has been set apart, as a life-habit, by thousands of the most spiritual-minded Christians for many centuries. Multitudes of witnesses in ancient and modern days "have proved him faithful that promised."

Chicago, Illinois, 740 Rush St.

Most people who oppose paying the tithe do so because they are not willing to part with that much money.—From The Tither.

GOD'S MERCY

In 1865 three Scotch Covenanters were stopped by an officer in Glasgow. They were asked if they would pray for King James, but refused on the ground that they knew there was no mercy for him in this world or in the next. Ignorant of God's long suffering love for all sinners, they submitted to be shot by the musketeers rather than pray for the king.

READY FOR ANY SERVICE

Henry Ward Beecher was a great lover of fine horses. A good story is told that once when about to take a ride behind a horse hired at a livery stable, Mr. Beecher regarded the horse admiringly and remarked: "That is a fine looking animal. Is he as good as he looks?" The owner replied: "Mr. Beecher, that horse will work any place you put him, and do all that any horse can do." The preacher eyed the horse still more admiringly, and then humorously remarked: "I wish to goodness he was a member of our church."

OUR NATIONAL FORESTS

The American people have taken from their forests every year 22,000,000 cubic feet of wood, worth $1,375,000,000. That would make a board walk of a mile wide clear around the earth at the equator.

The French use each year twenty-five cubic feet of lumber for each person; the Germans forty cubic feet; and we use 250 cubic feet per capita.

We burn up in preventible forest fires from twenty-five to fifty million dollars' worth of timber every year, the fires causing an average annual loss of seventy lives.

Lumbering employs more persons than any other American manufacturing industry—more than 600,000 men in 48,000 sawmills, and 400,000 men in making derived wood products,

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

DOINGS AT DAYTON

Since our last report things of special interest have been doing at the First Brethren church, Dayton, Ohio. The local Bible Institute referred to before, promoted by the pastor has thus far proven to be a great benefit and success. A number of Juniors and others have won special credits on examinations.

Dr. W. S. Bell, pastor on leave for a year, since on the Pacific coast has set his heart upon doing evangelistic work for several years, and repeatedly requested this church to cancel his obligation. Hence, during the month of March, at a regular business meeting the church considered his urgent request and accepted his resignation, wishing him God-speed in his chosen field of labor. At the same meeting, inasmuch as the present incumbent, Elder Edward M. Cobb, had so greatly endeared himself to this membership during his short period of service, the congregation by unanimous vote extended a call to him to take full charge and continue his pastorate for another year, next ensuing from September 1st, 1919.

In further appreciation of his service an unique birthday surprise was given the pastor in the evening of March 27th, at the church, when about 500 were in attendance upon the occasion. This marked his 52nd birthday anniversary, and he frankly admitted the church had "put one over," under the direction of the Alexander Mack Brotherhood. A fine program was given in which the Hon. J. M. Switzer, Mayor of Dayton, and Mr. Peter Quartel of the Rescue Mission had principal parts. The men of the church presented the pastor with a purse of $100.00 and the women of the Home Builders' Bible class presented to Mrs. Cobb $35.00 to keep peace in the family. In addition, the members of the congregation participated in replenishing the larder, with all kinds of provisions, loading a 9 foot table and pew with things good for a pastor's home, at a probable value of $75.00. In view of this the pastor was completely overwhelmed with gratitude and was unable to make a long impromptu speech on the occasion because of its suddenness. How it was done: The brotherhood was planning a banquet just ahead of the special revival campaign of the 30th, and slipped in 24 hours ahead with the surprise, cancelling the banquet by letter to every family and giving notice of the change, while the pastor was boosting the banquet. The occasion will never be forgotten in pleasant recollections by all in attendance.

On Sunday, March 30th, the Bible institute of the Miami Valley Brethren churches was opened and closed on Friday evening, April fourth. Speakers on the program during the institute were: Elders L. S. Bauman of Long Beach, California; I. B. Trout of Berlin, Pa.; W. J. Barnhart of Pleasant Hill, Ohio, and Edward M. Cobb, pastor, where the conference was conducted. Sessions were held every afternoon and evening. Elder I. B. Trout came especially to conduct our evangelistic services for several weeks and in this conference featured Sunday school work in five addresses on "Sunday School Construction," "Swing," "Growth," "Management," "Success," and these subjects were handled as by an expert with precision and effectiveness, as he was a member of the International Sunday School Lesson Committee for a number of years. Elder Barnhart gave five masterly addresses upon the Gospel of Assurance, based upon the First Epistle of John. The presentation was forceful and convincing and fully evangelical.

Elder Bauman spoke on prophetic subjects in his afternoon lectures as follows: "Has Man's Civilization Failed?" "Modern Socialism under the X-Rays of God's Word," "The Colossal Nonsense of the Colossal Accident in Colossal Collapse," "The Doctrine of Non-Resistance," "The Earmarks of False Prophets." These addresses should have been heard by thousands for warning and great profit. Those who heard them received intrinsic benefit and spiritual vision of present conditions and future prospects.

Elder Cobb gave a strong address on Sunday afternoon to the Valley churches in attendance on "What the Brethren Church Stands For," citing the Bible as its standard, its only creed and stressing the needs of the Brethren churches at home, in the state and general brotherhood. Elder C. E. Beekley of Gratis, Ohio, who was to have appeared on the program during the institute, could not take his place because of temporary illness.

At the evening sessions of two periods, Elder Bauman spoke first and gave his lectures on the Book of Revelation under the following topics: "The Seven Churches," "The Seven Seals," "The Seven Trumpets," "The Seven Personages" and "The Seven Vials, Dooms, and New Things." Thus we had the unveiling of the wonders of this so-called mysterious book in a very helpful and inspiring way, and it was enjoyed by good audiences. Then Elder Trout took the second period by giving a strong, crisp, clinching and effective evangelistic talk and appeal for the salvation of souls. Good gospel hymns by the combined chorus led by the pastor and special numbers featured the inspiring music of the services. At the close of the institute, Elder and Mrs. Bauman left for Philadelphia, Pa., much to our regret.

After the institute closed, the revival campaign took active form and continued for two weeks under the soul-stirring sermons of Elder Trout. He is certainly a preacher-evangelist, who knows how to tell what he knows in a very convincing way. Being an old friend of the pastor, they worked together in a very happy co-operative way, closing the campaign April 19th, with 26 converts, as Brother Trout had to return to his congregation for Easter services. His service was much appreciated by those who heard him, and they were sorry to have him leave, as the interest was growing and larger results possible.

On Friday evening, the 18th, this membership enjoyed the most largely attended Love-Feast and Communion ever held in the congregation, and it was said by many persons to have been the most quiet and impressive service they ever attended. And on Sunday, the 20th, Easter services were observed in a very becoming manner. There were 536 in Sunday school and the offering was $62.10 for missions. The total offering of the Sunday school and church for foreign missions was over $367.00 "Over the Top" at 40c per member. This was the largest offering ever made by the church for foreign missions on one occasion.

The Berean Bible class of young men with Attorney Orion E. Bowman as teacher, have just recently published a fine church directory for the congregation and is considered a great credit to the class. This beautiful souvenir contains not only the roster of about 900 members, but also has histories of the congregation and denomination, with pictures of the officers, Sunday school classes and societies of the congregation which makes it very attractive and valuable.

The interior of the church building is to be nicely decorated this spring. The fund has been provided and the compensation will be a brighter interior and more attractive appeal for Anniversary Day in May.

The front of the church has been recently adorned by a fine bulletin board with adjustable type, a surprise for the use of the pastor. This was designed and made by the Multifirm Sales Co., of Chicago, and furnished by the men of the church at an expense exceeding fifty dollars.

In view of the complex conditions of society in a large city like Dayton, the many attractions that entice young people as well as older ones, and then look at the steady growth of the First Brethren church, under the fostering care of Pastor Cobb, we may consider this membership very fortunate to have as its under-shepherd a minister true to the Word of God—the man of the hour. Praise the Lord for his goodness. Brethren pray for us that we may be kept by his power.

Corresponding Secretary.

A CORRECTION FOR COMPTON AVENUE CHURCH

Dear Brother Baer:

The Evangelist is just here and I find a statement in my article that is somewhat wide of the truth. Instead of 17 of those baptized going to another church it should read two. The seventeen came with us and this added to the two by letter make the 19 additions reported. The doctrine of the Brethren church is made so plain that people don't go to other churches as a rule. The two who did go to another church did so because the mother is a member in another church.

I thank you for this correction.

What They Say About Brethren Day

I am heartily in favor of observing Brethren Day in all our churches. There is no other denomination in the world that has a grander heritage than the Brethren, free from the shackles of ecclesiasticism, with the gospel of the grace of God, standing in defense of the Bible and a whole gospel. The unsettled beliefs of the times, with Bible criticism rampant, challenges the Brethren church to show her colors and stand in the breach. May God help her to be true to her message and in giving it to the world.

W. S. BELL.

I am glad for the special program for Brethren Day which you have prepared. All pastors ought to appreciate this splendid service and use the programs in large numbers to secure the greatest possible results for Brethrenism on this special day. To do so is a privilege in which every wide-awake pastor will rejoice; an opportunity pregnant with possibilities for all forward-looking churches; an imperative duty that confronts every member of the Brethren church.

MILES J. SNYDER.

The Brethren churches have not made as much of the historical side of their church as they should. The world will finally have to come to their position, not only as to war, anti-slavery, anti-booze but WHOLE GOSPEL as well. Why not tell it out now and all the time? If we had been good at propaganda and full of faith there would never have been a Christian Science church. Churches ought to organize right now for a big offering for propaganda. This Brethren Day is the best time to start it with a BIG OFFERING.

CHARLES A. BAME.

By all means give us a day wherein we may emphasize the work of our forefathers. In fact "Forefathers' Day" would be the better term to use. They sacrificed ease and comfort to emphasize the great teachings of the Bible which were ignored by other people. Holsinger, Bashor, Brown, Swihart, and Bauman, with other men of their type, waged a great fight. Like their Master, they came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give their lives a ransom to many.

"Are we true to the trust they left us?"

MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Date—June 3, 4, 5. At Linwood, Maryland.

The program appears in the Evangelist. A letter containing a program, a copy of constitution and credentials has been mailed to every pastor and each member of the Executive committee. If for any reason you did not receive one, notify your secretary by a card.

We have made an attempt at emphasizing the most important phases of the work in this program. We also have given more time and fewer speakers to our various subjects.

Since the secretary is the pastor of the church entertaining, we most earnestly desire that every one, who is to appear on the program will be present, also that a goodly number of delegates shall represent the different auxiliaries of the church.

A notice concerning transportation of delegates will appear in these columns later.

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

Another year has been added to the history of the local congregation. As we look back, a sense of intermingled sadness and joy fills us. We are keenly aware of loss, mistakes and unrealized goals; yet we may rejoice, for we have striven for the attainment of goals; we have realized gain; and we shall endeavor to profit by former mistakes and "rise from our dead selves to higher things."

At our last quarterly business meeting the various reports showed a healthy financial condition. The treasurer's report showed a nice balance which was added to the credit side of the building fund. The finance committee is planning now for the entire liquidation of the church debt in the near future. We do not want any local financial burden to excuse us when Beachler comes to Hagerstown in the interest of our college. Let me state that the church debt has been materially decreased, by the interest and united efforts of a loyal membership.

The various organizations are doing efficient work. The Sunday school with a new corps of officers, is looking forward to greater work. Recently a Junior department of the Elementary division was organized. This was made necessary by the overflowing condition of the Elementary room and in harmony with the proper grading of the department. We are beginning a class in Teacher Training next week. The growth of the school is making a searching demand for teachers. The Christian Endeavor is doing splendid work. This organization is not quite a year old, but promises to be of vital worth in giving to the church, leaders of ability which increased duties and responsibilities demand. The Ladies' Aid Society has paid in full a heavy pledge to the building fund. The Missionary society has studied with profit "Woman Workers of the Orient." With the organization at work, we aim to attain still greater gain in the year before us.

We recently held a two-weeks' meeting at Mapleville. The meetings were well attended from the beginning, and there was good interest, but there were no visible results in conversions. We thought of Brother Bauman; had we "reached our limit?" This was our third meeting there in consecutive years. The field is difficult from the fact that it is closely gleaned among the younger people, "and cares of the world" choke the Word. The pastor was royally entertained in the home of Brother and Sister James Keadle.

We have just closed a two weeks' meeting here with our spring communion service on Easter Sunday. This Lenten season is most appropriate for services of this kind. It, in a special way, carried the mind to the events of Passion Week which means so much to us individually and to the world. This however is a very busy season of the year and in consequence, the attendance was not as large as we had desired. However, we were loyally supported by a goodly number from evening to evening, and the choir stood right by us singing souls into the Kingdom. We received by baptism seven, and one by letter. We give God the glory.

The communion service was the largest attended yet. We were obliged to double up the front tables. Not only was it the largest in numbers, but the service was impressive as many thus expressed themselves.

The pastor was unanimously recalled to serve this people. We pray that God may guide us and the entire church to do his will and that speedily the time shall come when "The Kingdom of the world is become the Kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever."

A. B. COVER.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

Since my last report two congregations have been canvassed; and those two congregations were in the Illiokota district—Waterloo and Hudson. I am reporting this week for Waterloo, and next week the report will be from Hudson.

Technically speaking the Waterloo canvass began on Easter Sunday morning. But in reality the work was begun months before by Brother Goughnour who set his people to thinking in large sums in relation to what the church would do for College endowment; and needless to say, he kept them thinking along those lines until the secretary actually landed on the scene. And thus I want to say in the outset that while many of our pastors have had their congregations in fine shape for the campaign, none of our pastors have done any more work or any more careful work than Brother Goughnour to have everything in perfect readiness. Hence it became possible to do a very large piece of work well in a comparatively short time.

Going to Waterloo was like going home. It was a period of hard work mixed with a lot of pleasure. Latch strings all seemed to be out. And sometimes it seemed to be a question in my mind whether I really came to Waterloo to renew acquaintances and visit, or to put across a big campaign. But at any rate I found that the two features combined very nicely.

Now Watch the Kanemorado District Raise the Mercury

COLLEGE

Easter Sunday was a big day in the Waterloo church. Decision Day was observed in the Sunday school and there was a fine result. Then I tried to preach in the morning service. The audience was large and the music exceptionally inspiring; and ordinarily I believe I could have done my part pretty well. But being almost sick and practically worn out it was a very ordinary effort, and to me it was disappointing. Brother Goughnour went to Hudson and preached on Easter morning, and I am quite sure Hudson got the better end of the deal that day. The service in the evening was musical. The choir rendered in a splendid manner an Easter cantata, and a very large audience was present.

On Monday night the campaign proper began. I preached each night of the week and on the following Sunday morning. The audiences were good notwithstanding bad weather and still worse roads kept many of the country people at home. On Sunday night the communion service was observed. It was a grand meeting. In the afternoon Brother Goughnour baptized 10 or more people who were received into the church and who partook of the communion service for the first time.

"I hope to be pardoned for getting off of my subject. I forgot that primarily I am giving a report of the endowment campaign. I trust Brother Goughnour will also pardon me for making his report for him. To come back therefore to the endowment matter I will say this: Waterloo had her mind made up before I got there that she would hit hard, and she did hit hard. Ashland College has had for many long years many staunch supporters in the Waterloo church. Several men there have carried as much as $1,000 each on Temporary endowment. At least one man in that church had given $1,000 to Permanent endowment several years ago. And in the campaign which just closed there were two men who enlisted in the thousand dollar class. There was also a nice circle of $500 folks, also $400 folks, and $300 folks, and $200 folks, and many $100 folks and very many gifts from that sum on down. The total result from Waterloo was $11,000. That is just twice as much as the biggest result in any one church thus far in the campaign. Falls City went $5,500, and that was fine for Falls City. Waterloo does not have a resident membership twice as large as that of Falls City, but counting both resident and non-resident members she does have a membership twice as great. Hence Waterloo considered that she could not feel entitled to the pennant unless she went twice as strong as Falls City. So Waterloo claims the pennant now, and I believe Stuckman will hand it over to Waterloo with hearty congratulations. Naturally I feel highly gratified over the Waterloo response. I have no doubt I love the Waterloo congregation as much as an ex-pastor can love a former charge, hence I was peculiarly anxious to see Waterloo carry the pennant at least during part of the campaign. Needless to say, Ashland College has more friends in the Waterloo church today than she ever had before. When I look over the long, splendid list of those who enlisted I consider that each and everyone of those persons now considers himself or herself a partner in the work of Ashland College as never before because an investment has been made.

To Goughnour I am greatly indebted for the tireless co-operation he gave me in the execution of the canvass. Splendid as it was, sickness in his home hindered him some. I want also to commend him for the masterly, business-like manner in which he canvassed the non-resident members of the congregation. And it was only because of the royal response from many of the non-resident members that we are able to report as we are from Waterloo. It was well done.

I cannot close without speaking of the jubilee meeting on Wednesday night which marked the official close of the canvass. We had a real, old fashioned picnic supper in the church basement. There were 115 at the tables. If it had not rained there would have been nearly or quite 200. We had a fine supper, a series of strong addresses by local members on various phases of the college and the denomination, we also had a lot of good singing, and a general time of rejoicing. It was a time not soon to be forgotten and a fitting climax to a campaign which is truly a credit to the Waterloo people. Space will forbid my mentioning the subjects discussed in the course of the evening or the speakers, just as space will forbid my mentioning the many good folks who lodged me in their homes and who fed me, and still others who put their automobiles freely and repeatedly at my disposal. I thank everyone who helped put the campaign across, and may the grace and peace of God rest richly upon Brother Goughnour and his many good, loyal people.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

Communion Notices

THE TIE THAT BINDS

BRETZ-BRIGGS—On April 10, 1919, at the home of the writer, Mr. Wesley John Bretz and Mrs. Grace Briggs were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. The groom was for a number of years been a member of the Brethren church. The bride made confession of Christ before leaving the marriage altar and has since received Christian baptism. Our prayers and best wishes go with them in their wedded life.

W. C. BENSHOFF.

PARSONS-HAYNES—Carl Parsons of Marshalltown, Iowa, and Dorothy Haynes of Garwin, Iowa, were united in marriage at the home of the bride near Carlton Brethren church, April 2, 1919. The ceremony took place under an improvised arch made from the bow of the wagon used by her grandfather in coming to the state in 1853. There were present about 60 relatives and friends. The bride is a daughter of Brother John Haynes. Both young people are active members of the Carlton Brethren church and are very popular in the community. May both be richly blessed as they journey through life. Ceremony by the pastor.

FREEMAN ANKRUM.

DEAHL-HEDGECOCK—Earl Deahl and Esther Hedgecock were united in marriage at the home of the writer in Udell, Iowa, on the evening of April 3, 1919. The bride is a member of the Brethren church. The groom is a prosperous young farmer. The best wishes of a host of friends go with these young people for a happy and prosperous journey through life. Ceremony by the undersigned.

AUSTIN R. STALEY.

PEARSON-HENDRIX—Fred Pearson, son of Brother Frank and Sister Cora Pearson of near Flora, and Mary Hendrix, daughter of Brother and Sister O. C. Hendrix, of near Burlington, were united in marriage by the writer at the Hendrix home on the afternoon of Sunday, March 30th. Fred is a young man of fine character and returned soldier from overseas who has had his fill of army routine and willing to settle down to a quiet and calm country life. The bride is a pleasing and home-making companion of the family of patient and endeavoring folks, so the future holds happiness for this union which we hope will be realized.

MAGART-MYER—Daniel B. Magart, a prosperous farmer, of southwest of Burlington and Seneca, Myer of Flora, were united in marriage by the writer on the evening of April 10th at the parsonage in Burlington. Both of these parties had been married before and lost their companions, and this union will afford a fine opportunity for a happy home for them, which we hope they will live many years to enjoy.

W. T. LYTLE.

MCCARTY-ACKLEY—On April 6, 1919, Richard E. McCarty and Blanche Arlco, Ackley both of Fortis, Kansas, were united in marriage by the undersigned at the bride's home, in the presence of the immediate relatives. These estimable young people are members of the Brethren church. They have a host of friends that wish them success and happiness.

IN THE SHADOW

BROWER—Mrs. W. C. Brower was born in Paw Paw township, Wabash county, near Roanoke, Indiana, July 6, 1876 and departed this life July 13, 1918, aged 42 years, 1 month and 9 days. She was always loving, cheerful and happy and tried to make others happy. She was a faithful member of the Brethren church at Roanoke for many years until the Master called her home. May the Lord fill the vacancy caused by death for those that mourn.

ROY BRUMBAUGH.

MILLER—James H. Miller was born in Wayne county, Ohio, July 7, 1845, departed this life at Fortis, Kansas, March 18, 1919, aged 73 years, 8 months and 11 days. In early manhood he moved to Iowa and later to Kansas. He was a member of the Brethren church and although for a number of years being unable to attend on account of suffering and affliction oftentimes expressed a desire to attend. He leaves to mourn their loss a companion, seven children, three sisters and a host of other relatives and friends. May he have a home in an eternal mansion where disease, death, and affliction never enter. May he find that sweet peace that Jesus gives. May the Lord bless and comfort those that mourn.

ROY BRUMBAUGH.

WARD—William G. Ward was born August 27, 1837, in Erie county, Pennsylvania, and departed this life at his home in Udell, Iowa, April 12, 1919, aged 81 years, 7 months and 15 days.

He was a member of the M. E. church but as they have no church in Udell he attended the Brethren church when his health permitted.

The funeral services were conducted at the home by the writer and the body was laid to rest in the Eaton cemetery near Unionville, Iowa. AUSTIN R. STALEY.

JONES—William Vinton Jones was born January the 1st, 1876 and departed this life January the 2nd, 1919, aged 43 years, three months and one day. He answered the roll call just six weeks after making the good confession, and passed triumphantly in the faith. What a blessing to know that he was ready to go, and admonished others to seek the blessings of the Christian life. O, that more might be as happy as he in the way of Truth. Funeral by the writer in Oakville, Indiana. Burial in Mt. Summit cemetery.

W. R. DEETER.

PARRISH—Mrs. Fannie Parrish was born and reared in Augusta county, Virginia, and departed this life at her daughter's home, Mrs. Frank Moore, in Roanoke, Virginia, April 15th, at the age of 68 years. For a number of years she had been a member of the Church of the Brethren. The funeral service was conducted from the home by the writer, assisted by the Rev. W. T. Wingfield of the Baptist church.

L. G. WOOD.

YOUNG—David Young, eldest son of Isaac and Hester Young, was born in Madison county, Indiana, near Anderson, April 30, 1825, and died at his home near Twelve Mile, Cass county, Indiana, April 19, 1919, aged 93 years, 11 months and 3 days. When he was five years old his parents removed to Tippecanoe county, Indiana, where they lived 25 years, then to Cass county, Indiana. Dad had lived on a part of the original farm for 87 years.

He was married to Barbara Moyer, September 14, 1848, and to this union were born six children, three of whom, Mary Ann, Isaac and William with their mother, preceded him to the spirit world. Mrs. William Crook, Mrs. Jacob Crook and Mrs. Robert Kelsey remain to mourn the loss of a father but comforted by the recollection of life well spent. He is also survived by nine grandchildren, and fourteen great-grandchildren and a community of friends.

Brother Young was not only a pioneer of the Brethren church but a charter member of the Corinth church, and was active until it was no longer possible on account of his age. He often expressed his desire to depart and be with the Lord, so when the end came he looked upon it as his coronation day. Funeral services by the writer.

C. A. STEWART.

KREPPS—Mrs. Minnie Krepps was born December 21, 1854, and died at the home of her daughter in Norfolk, Nebraska April 10, 1919, aged 64 years, 3 months and 20 days. She united with the Dallas Center Brethren church in 1915 and showed a faithful interest in the work of the church during her life. Funeral services were held at the Dallas Center Brethren church in charge of her pastor.

R. F. FORTE.

ROBINSON—Dr. Theophilus Calliway Robinson passed away Wednesday afternoon, April 2, after a lingering illness. Dr. Robinson enlisted in the United States Army Medical Corps in July and was commissioned as captain. His assignment was to Fort Riley, Kansas, where he reported for duty August 7.

Becoming seriously ill shortly afterward, when the duties of the military routine proved too arduous, Dr. Robinson underwent several operations. His condition was for some time so critical that it was feared he would not recover.

When he became able, he returned to his home, arriving here November 22. Since that time his health had not improved and of late he had failed quite rapidly.

Dr. Robinson was a native of San Francisco, where he was born August 28, 1867. His parents went to the west in 1853, his father being attracted by the gold discoveries.

The decedent leaves a widow, Mrs. Anna Robinson, two children, Roger T. Robinson and Dorothy Muriel Robinson; two brothers, and one sister.

Brother Robinson was a prominent and active worker in the church and was a great factor in making possible the Second church in Los Angeles. The last 12 years he was located in Long Beach where he was engaged in a large practice. He was a deacon in the Long Beach church and held in high esteem by the church and community. He died the death triumph and has gone to the Christian's reward. The bereaved family have the fullest sympathy.

1719---Two Hundred Years of Brethren History in America---1919

A New and Up-to-date Brethren Day Program has been prepared for the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of Brethren History in America. In this year of our Lord the Brethren Spirit ought to appeal as never before and Brethren Day ought to mean more than it ever did.

Has the reader really given serious thought as to what the program contains which we offer to the churches for use on Brethren Day? Here are some of the outstanding features of the program:

I Three Brief Addresses: Specially prepared by J. Allen Miller, Charles A. Bame, and J. A. Garber. The titles of these addresses are,—

- (1) How the Path Was Found Again. By Dr. Miller.
- (2) Two Hundred Years of Brethren History in America. Dr. Bame.
- (3) The Brethren Spirit in the New Day. J. A. Garber.

II Notable Events in Brethren History: From 25 to 40 outstanding historical facts in our history. Compiled by Dr. Miller.

III A Responsive Reading: In the form of questions with answers in Bible words, every one of which has a special message for Brethren people. There are twenty of these, and they constitute a very important part of the program.

IV A Children's Exercise: Prepared by George S. Baer. It is an acoustic formed with the letters in the word BRETHREN, and requires eight children in its rendition. Appropriate hymns are printed in the book of the program.

The addresses and historical facts are printed separately for distribution at the close of the service. They are neatly and attractively printed on durable paper in convenient form for permanent use.

PRICES

Per dozen copies, including addresses,$.60

Per hundred copies, 4.00

Each additional hundred..... 3.00

The programs are not sold except with an equal number of the addresses and at the prices indicated. But additional copies of the addresses for future use may be ordered at the hundred rates. You will need as many programs (including addresses) as there will be people in your congregation on Brethren Day.

Orders ranging from 100 to 200 copies each are now being filled. Order at once and generously. You will need them.

crease them, and are we using them in concord with those who have less talents, for the purpose of accomplishing his work? While the church has been divinely ordained as the institution through which God's work shall be carried on, yet it can only be as effective as the individuals composing it are powerful through the Holy Spirit, and through their permitting of God to use them as he wishes. Let us look inwardly and pray God to strengthen us through his Spirit, and be willing to be used in the largest measure in carrying forward the Master's work.

PRAYER

Our heavenly Father, our hearts are filled with unspeakable gratitude for thy great love and abundant mercy. We thank thee for the gift of thy Son and the great plan of redemption whereby thou has made it possible for sinful man to turn from the darkness of sin to the marvelous light of an everlasting day.

We thank thee for thy holy word with its many precious promises which we can justly claim, if we but do our part and fulfill the conditions in accordance with thy divine will.

Give us we pray a larger vision of the magnitude of thy work, and help us to realize the necessity of not delaying in thy service during the few days allotted to us, for the time soon cometh when our opportunity will have passed by. Help us to more fully rely on thee for guidance, and strengthen us continually as we endeavor to do thy will. Create in us more of that desire to co-operate and labor in unity with all thy children that we may be one in thee, and that the world may believe that thou didst send Jesus, thy Son, to give life and give it more abundantly. Amen.

The BRETHREN EVANGELIST

- ONE IS YOUR MASTER AND ALL YE ARE BRETHREN -

Two Hundred Years Since the Brethren Church Was Established in America.

Its First Home was Germantown, Philadelphia
The Date was 1719

Every Brethren Church should celebrate this memorable event and seek to inculcate a larger church patriotism, a more intelligent reverence for Brethren achievement, a true devotion to the fundamental principles for which Brethren have always stood and a zeal never before known for the extension of the whole gospel and the strengthening of the whole gospel church. May our ambition be "A Greater Brethren Church for the Greater Service and Glory of Christ." May our celebration of the Bi-Centennial of the Brethren Church on Brethren Day lend itself to the giving of a vision to the whole church of a new era of progress.

What the Observance of Brethren Day Should Mean

Brethren Day should have great significance through the brotherhood. It was with great wisdom that General Conference established this special day. It will serve to meet a need that is being felt today as keenly as ever before, viz., the need of encouraging the denomination to fulfill the function for which it came into being. This is not to be a day of breaking down denominational distinctions and individualities, much as it may seem to some. Fears entertained along this line are groundless, and hopes, if there be any worthy of consideration, to this end must forever be in want of fulfillment. That denominational prejudice and selfishness, unco-operativeness and unbrotherliness will be driven and is being driven from the Christian ranks no one will deny, nor wish to prevent. But that denominational usefulness is a thing of the past will not be accepted by any church of convictions today. And it is because we believe that denominations should, will and must have a place in the religious world today that we believe Brethren Day is freighted with far-reaching significance and worthy possibilities. Denominations must continue to function, to make to the world their distinctive contributions and to be the working units of religious activity. In view of this need, Brethren Day should and will be utilized to magnify the unique service of the Brethren church, to popularize its distinctive plea to challenge a more virile and constant loyalty on the part of our church constituency and to enlist new recruits from among those who need a church home and are become convinced of the worthiness of our function and the correctness of our vision. The wise use of this day will make for a greater church in every way. It should be observed by every congregation throughout the brotherhood.

What will the observance of this day mean? What will be its predominating contributions if rightly observed? There will certainly result a greater intelligence concerning Brethren history and reverence for our Brethren fore-fathers. We have a history of which we may well be proud and there are noble men standing back in the annals of our past to whom we owe more than we can ever know. We as a people are densely ignorant of our past and we think there is nothing fascinating about it because we know so little about it. We look upon the past as dull and uneventful. We imagine that the happenings must have been commonplace and without significance. We suppose there were no great men among our churchmen of the past. But the very opposite is true. There is no history more intensely interesting than early Brethren history; there are many thrilling events and incidents that appeal to the heroic in our natures. Our sympathies and admiration are awakened as we read of the eight originals who came together under God in their quest for an asylum from persecution. However reluctant men are today to trace any lineage back to German soil or parentage, yet intelligent Brethren must ever feel very warmly toward a little spot in that land of recent obloquy, Shwartzzenau village on the river Eider, the birthplace of the Brethren church. Other denominations may trace with pride their history back to the New England colonies, but we trace with equal pride our own history back to old Germantown, which has grown to be the third city of the land and we visit still the old historic Germantown church. It is with no small degree of pride that we recall that the first Bible printed in America was a German Bible printed by a Brethren on his own printing press, that forty years or more before Robert Kaikes started the modern Sunday school in England, Brethren people had already established such schools in America, which were only broken up by the War of the Revolution when at the battle of Brandywine the school house was changed into a hospital and that among our earliest church fathers were men who compared favorably with the best men of their day in education and who bore witness to their appreciation of higher education by the founding of an academy in Philadelphia that commanded respect in educational circles and gave schooling to men who became noted in the public affairs of those days. If we had time to continue our reminiscences we should recall many things that would cause us to be proud that we are Brethren, and if we should uncover certain pages of history, we should doubtless be apprized of certain illustrious men and noble events which make Brethren history shine with equal splendor to that of any other church people.

The observance of Brethren Day ought to result in a more intelligent love for Brethren principles and practices. We cannot think of the Brethren church without there coming immediately into our minds certain great Christian principles which we have lived out for generations but which are so common amongst us that we scarcely appreciate them. The Brethren people have always stood for that freedom of conscience and thought wherewith Christ hath made us free, for simple faith in the word of God and unquestioned acceptance of that word as our only rule of faith and practice, for full obedience to all the ordinances set forth by our Master and his disciples as conveyors of significant spiritual truths and as most blessed means of growth in grace, for separation from the worldliness of the world, from its need of bolstered truth, its vain pride and its warring hatred. And as we freshen our memories concerning these things and think over and seek to live through these various principles and teachings of our Lord, we are made to value them more highly than ever before and to appreciate more fully the perfect wisdom of our Savior in setting these things in his church. We see not only their scriptural foundations but their inherent value both upon the soul who participates and also upon society which they purpose to regenerate. Our allegiance to them is strengthened, our love for the holy Word is heightened and purified and our devotion to our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is intensified by sincerely and intelligently entering into an observance of Brethren Day.

This day will also result in a greater church patriotism. How it fires the heart of every true American to hear a recounting of the deeds of valor of our national heroes; of the wonderful conquests of our armies in battlefields against tyranny, greed and cruelty; of its mighty championing of the great principles of liberty, equality, justice and righteous dealings between men and nations the world around. How we revere the old soldiers and value the service they rendered after a stirring Memorial Day service! How we love our country and cherished the freedom so dearly purchased after sincerely entering into an enthusiastic Independence Day celebration! Just so will we love our church and our souls will be stirred with loyalty and a promise of renewed devotion when we have with honest hearts observed this day of days for our church. Why not use it as a means of bringing about a higher and holier type of church patriotism and enlisting the zealous prayers and active co-operation in the great work of the Kingdom as has not been done before? God give us hearts that beat quick and strong and true for the great church of Christ.

Moreover, such an observance will enlarge our denominational ideals, and in these we need to grow. Who has caught a vision of the church of the future? Who has seen its widely extended borders, its greatly enriched life and its mightily increase of power? He who has been pondering over the Brethren cause, reviewing its course of progress and victory and reevaluating the great principles for which it stands. He whose heart has been set on fire with a great desire for a growing Kingdom and a conquering church. He who has a high and holy patriotism for the church of Christ. He who has not been so stirred, whose mind has not been troubled over these things is quite content with the church of today. The rut that has measured the spiritual bigness of the church for years is still quite sufficient to his view. The monotonous round of religious duties set to the same puny plans has been the "La, la, bye" that sung his soul to sleep. There are churches dying for the want of a vision. There is neither dream nor vision by youth nor age. "Awake, thou that sleepest!" Turn your soul toward the sky; set your affections on things above and beyond. See the mighty possibility of your church as it stands in your vision beside the small reality of the present. Let this day be the means of stirring up within you an ambition for your church and a conviction if its possible attainment that shall make your soul ever anxious to use every power at your command to bring into ever fuller realization the high ideals that God has given you for his church.

Don't fail to notice the call of Brother Drushal for a dormitory matron and a teacher for the work at Riverside. All arrangements should be made before actual need has arrived and the work will have more promise. Will not these answer the call who are fitted?

According to custom there will be two weeks in the year when there will be no Evangelist published. NEXT WEEK IS THE FIRST WEEK WHEN THERE WILL BE NO PAPER. But it is not a vacation that we are taking; the editor will be moving when you are reading this paper, moving from Louisville to Ashland.

Brother Grisso reports an evangelistic meeting recently held by himself at the Teegarden church, Indiana. In spite of weather handicaps, the Lord led the evangelist, pastor and people on to victory. This little congregation recently dedicated a new church and they are doubtless full of enthusiasm. God bless Brother John Clark, their pastor, as he seeks to lead them into still greener pastures.

The work at Burlington and Darwin, Indiana, is reported by the pastor of these churches, Brother W. T. Lytle. Brother Lytle always has some interesting things to report, and this is no exception. Burlington has recently enjoyed an illustrated lecture in the interest of Armenian Relief work, given by two of Brother Henderson's wide-awake parishioners. Their response was a very hearty one, and with it they did not forget the foreign mission offering. The Darwin church is looking into a brighter future also. They not only made their quota in the foreign offering, but made an excellent offering for a new church roof. God is blessing the work of Brother Lytle in these two formerly backward fields; may God's grace continue to abound.

Brother Oxley comes to us with another report and he is optimistic even in the face of some difficulties. His churches are on the advance and are going strong on foreign missions. It seems that Indiana's small churches are becoming unusually alive, they are all commanding recognition by their loyalty and enthusiasm.

The North Liberty, Indiana, church is continuing to do good work under the leadership of Brother Grisso. They have recalled him for another year's work amongst them, with an increase in salary. Such actions on the part of churches serve not only a real need, but also as expressions of confidence and appreciation of the worth of their pastor's services.

Still the White Gifts are being reported, according to Brother Trent's report, and it speaks well for our churches to come across with their gifts when so long delayed by the "flu." But there is a thing that is not so pleasing; churches are falling down on their reports. Come, Brethren, let's not neglect these matters which mean so much annoyance to our chosen servants.

We are pleased to give our readers a report of the dedication of the new church at Teegarden, Indiana. It has been sometime since it was dedicated, and we have been waiting for a good picture of the church that we might give you an idea of what they have at this thriving little congregation, but when the picture came it was too dim to make a good cut. Dr. Furry and Brother Rench co-operated in the dedication. Brother John Clark is the enthusiastic pastor.

Brother A. P. Reed, one of our most careful correspondents, gives us a good report of the work in the First church of Los Angeles, California. Brother Jennings, the pastor, was, at the writing of the letter, engaged in an evangelistic meeting and the prospects were good for a very successful meeting. A number of new members had already been received. The church is getting busy about a new building. That speaks of growth.

Brother Robert Porte, pastor of the Dallas Center, Iowa, church reports a great day on Easter Sunday. The sunrise prayer meeting was a fitting beginning of the day, the dollar-a-member offering a splendid evidence of the thorough appreciation of Easter by the membership and the children's service in the evening an appropriate climax to the day's celebration of the greatest event in all history.

One of the good laymen of the Flora church writes us concerning the work of that place. Flora is going forward in Sunday school efficiency, in missions, in benevolences and in every department of the Lord's work. Brother Russel Barnard pays nice compliments to both their Sunday school superintendent, Brother Whetstone, and pastor, Brother Henderson. With such a team to lead, supported by such loyalty as Flora knows how to give, the Brethren church at that place ought to go forward.

From Nampa, Idaho, comes a very brief report of the work at that place from the pen of the pastor, Brother J. C. Neher. They are few but that did not prevent them from having a blessed communion service. When communicants travel 200 miles to attend a communion service they are certainly hungry for a feast with their Lord. There are Brethren members more favorably located with reference to their church who would not travel one-twentieth that distance to attend communion.

Cerro Gordo, Illinois, is the latest member to our constantly increasing family of honored churches. Look at the Business Manager's Corner and see the name on the Honor Roll. We are sure that the good people of that church will catch a larger vision of the work of the brotherhood through the reading of the Evangelist and their own local church work will go better, too. Every additional subscriber makes the influence of our church paper that much greater and the writers a larger hearing. We are now looking anxiously to see who will carry our subscription list across the 5,000 mark and

Dr. Jacobs to Succeed Dr. Furry

The Action of the Board of Trustees of Ashland College

(The following is the report of a committee appointed by the Board of Trustees at their recent meeting, which was instructed to formulate for publication a partial statement of the principal items of business transacted.)

The Board of College Trustees met in annual session May 5th, and 6th, 1919, at Ashland, Ohio. There were fourteen members of the Board present. After the opening preliminaries, business for the ensuing year was considered. The resignation of President W. D. Furry was first taken up. For some months it had been known that President Furry felt that he would like to be released from the presidency of Ashland College, and in accordance with his expressed desire the Board accepted his resignation.

The choosing of a president for Ashland College has never been an easy task, and the Board soon found itself facing a real problem. The president of the College must be a man of peculiar qualifications. He must possess those qualities which fit him for both intellectual and spiritual leadership. He must also be familiar with the general educational requirements in Ohio and elsewhere. Moreover, he must have had sufficient academic training to qualify under the constantly rising standards set for colleges by the educational world as well as those set by the laws of Ohio. He must further possess those qualities of mind and heart that fit him to understand and to work with young people. By these alone he will be able to arouse their enthusiasm for the better things of life and to lead them up to high and holy ideals of conduct. He must command the confidence of the faculty with whom he works and thus evoke their enthusiastic co-operation. All those who have come into close touch with the affairs of the College recognize the fact that the president must possess great energy and vigor of mind and body in order to meet the varied and countless demands which are made upon him. Since Ashland is a small town and the personnel of the college staff is well known, both teachers and president should enjoy the confidence of the citizens of Ashland City and the surrounding community. Lastly, the president of Ashland College should command the confidence of its Alumni and the membership of the church, for it is difficult for Ashland or any similar institution to succeed if any of these fail in loyalty.

After prayerful and serious consideration the Board unanimously called Dr. Edwin E. Jacobs to succeed Dr. Furry as President of Ashland College. The Board was convinced that Dr. Jacobs embodied in a liberal degree the characteristics demanded. Intellectually Dr. Jacobs has had a long and varied training. He took his A. B. degree at Wooster University, studied at Chicago and Harvard, and acquired his Ph.D. at Clark University in 1917. Dr. Jacobs came to Ashland College as a teacher in 1904, and with the exception of the time spent elsewhere in study, has remained a member of the Faculty ever since, serving at various times in the different capacities of instructor, Acting President, and during the present year as Dean. He has held high rank as a teacher and has always been popular with the students. As an Institute instructor Dr. Jacobs has been during the years in considerable demand, and has met hundreds of teachers in Ohio, Iowa, Indiana, West Virginia, and Kentucky, being frequently called back for re-engagements.

Following his natural bent the training of Dr. Jacobs has been largely scientific. He presents the rare instance of a scientific layman who has had sufficient religious enthusiasm to preach the Gospel. And notwithstanding the fact that his training has been in other institutions, he has remained loyal to the Brethren church. Historically Dr. Jacobs comes from a long line of Dunkard ancestry. His father, Elder H. S. Jacobs, is one of the few men still living who had part in the historic convention in Music Hall at Dayton, Ohio, where the Brethren organization was launched. The son, in his early 'teens joined the Brethren church of which he has always remained a loyal member.

This meeting of the Board of Trustees was unusually significant as respects the future growth and progress of the College. Not in many years had the Board met with so deep a sense of the possible, far reaching results of their work. They realized that the modern world is challenging every institution with the test of a terrible sincerity. They felt the force of the fact that civilization had just witnessed the most tragic demonstration in history of the tremendous power and appalling failures of intellectual efficiency separated from and uncontrolled by the moral and spiritual ideals that grow out of simple, vital religion. They felt too that the merely formal church had failed to grip men and hold them true to the high principles of love and justice incarnated in the Christ and embodied in the gospels. Clear it seemed to them that out of the present disorganization there will arise an insistent demand for an educated and efficient moral leadership such as only the standard, well equipped, Christian college can provide. Hence,

First, Ashland College must be broadly, pervasively, and distinctly Christian. Its activities, its atmosphere, its faculty, its curriculum must rest upon, be shot through and permeated with simple, vital religion and the spirit of Jesus Christ. Without this, knowledge, learning, and efficiency are vain, empty and dangerous. With this, knowledge, learning and efficiency become the agencies by means of which man renders the noblest service to Christ and the church.

Second, Ashland College must meet the demands, for standard equipment and efficiency. If it is to fulfill its largest destiny as a source of great religious leadership, if it is to prepare the church's young people for effective and dominant participation in professional and social life, if it is to forward the gospel and extend the church to the measure of its opportunity, it cannot rest in lifeless traditions and half-measures. It must make good. It must make good to the young men and women who commit their fortunes and success to its keeping. It must make good to the thousands of devoted brethren who have consecrated it with their prayers and gifts. It must make good to the church whose destinies it largely controls, and to the Christ in whose name it was organized and is now maintained.

In his work as president of the College Dr. Jacobs will have the hearty co-operation of a well trained and competent faculty, comprising most of the former well known members. To these will be added other members as rapidly as the constantly growing endowment will permit.

The Trustees completed their work with a feeling of confidence that the measures adopted will result in substantial progress in the enlargement of the work of the College and a constantly growing increase in its influence and power.

R. R. TEETER, Secretary of the Board of Trustees.

The Best Sermon

Daniel Webster, on one occasion, referring to the fact that many ministers took a text from the Bible and preached from the newspapers, remarked: "When they do so I prefer to enjoy my own thoughts. I want my pastor to say to me, 'You are mortal; you have a brief probation, and your work must be done speedily. You are hastening to the bar of God.' When I am thus addressed I have no disposition to muse or to fall asleep."

The Whole Gospel--No More--No Less. By P. H. Beaver

Whithersoever the truth leads the way, there will I follow, and when the truth ceases to lead then will I cease to follow."

"I believe in my church because I believe she is going to make many changes in the near future for her own good and that of her posterity. She will throw off her swaddling clothes of tradition and clothe herself only in the essential garments of salvation. That change will make no longer impossible salvation to those that cannot pronounce our 'Shibboleth.' Yes, I believe the church is the branch God has thrown in the bitter stream of civilization and it will sweeten, purify and sanctify every life and institution through which it is permitted to flow."

The foregoing paragraph I have copied from Brother Burnworth and in further confirmation I now copy from our Master Teacher from Matthew 15:9, 13, 14,—"But in vain do they worship me, teachings as their doctrines the precepts of men." Again, "He answered and said: Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up. Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."

I quote further from the Master Teacher, "Jesus came and spake unto them, saying: 'All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, dipping them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.' To observe! Yes, to observe—no more, no less, as 'One is your Teacher' of doctrine, only 'One' and he is your Master Teacher and all ye are brethren and all ye are equal before the law of Christ. So we sing: "On Christ the solid Rock I stand. All other ground is sinking sand."

I know what it costs to break the shackles of early bias and traditions, the "precepts of men" and the "plantings" of men, as well as the "bondage" which they impose and the slave lashings one incurs in his efforts to purge himself from their power. I appeal to my brethren, let us maintain a broad gauge, Gospel-wide foundation for our Brethren church. For no other foundation will secure to us a world-wide work and denomination.

I have read our "Declaration," but upon close examination find that we still adhere to three or four of those traditional "plantings" which "my heavenly Father planted not," which we should discard.

The fundamental teaching contained in the four gospels are the supreme law of the Brethren church and we must not, dare not, "Teach as our doctrines the precepts of men," nor practice them in our congregational activities nor bind them upon our own members so that, we may prosper as you indicate in your editorial, "A greater Brethren Church," which I admire greatly.

Hence our precious brotherhood must divest herself of those traditional garments and robe herself only with the beautiful garments of salvation and march forth like an army with banners bright, clean and triumphant. Hope springs exultant on triumphant wings.

The dead weights of retarding tradition must be allowed to pass into the innocuous past, back in the slough of despond where they belong.

Each succeeding day sees an increasing number of men released from definite military service and absorbed into the fabric of our civil life. These men, or boys, as they are usually called, have undergone unusual hardships and have had experiences of vital importance for their own future and the future of the society to which they are now returning. Already they are banding themselves together as veterans of the world war, and without a doubt their influence will be keenly felt in the not distant future. The exact extent of this influence can as yet be only dimly discerned. On almost every hand, wild statements concerning it may be heard. There are those however who feel that the real issues have not yet definitely been searched out from among the multitudinous voices clamoring for recognition. Perhaps a glimpse at the soldiers' ideals and feelings may serve as a guide. These remarks cannot be the vital outpourings of one who has had actual experiences with life and death in the heat of battle but of one who had a slight contact with army life in one of the great cantonments in our own country. What are some of the new thoughts coursing through the mind of the late soldier?

In the first place, democracy has a new meaning for him. He may have gone to camp with vague conceptions concerning its real meaning. Very soon, however, its significance began to appear. He was one among a great multitude. If he thought himself better than those in his company, it must be kept in his own mind and not be translated into action, else it might cause a reaction. Whether at work, at play, or at mess, he was just one cog in a great machine. His wealth or former social position was a matter of very little consequence. Here they were practically on one level and he must win a place through his ability. As many of the comforts of home were absent, sharing with one another became the rule. The unselfish democratic spirit soon became the dominating factor in camp life.

Let us next consider the qualities which the average soldier admired in life and character. Courage was one of the prime factors. The man who was game usually came out of a contest with honors even if defeated. Physical strength and prowess was more universally admired than mental, yet the man with convictions was respected. At first the soldier seemed exceedingly rough both in speech and act. Soon, however, one realized that the roughness was largely outward, and that inwardly the average soldier had a warm spot for better things. This leads me to relate the experience of a certain individual who entered army life after the completion of his college course. Having been a college man in a denominational school he entered with high ideals of life and conduct. He had decided before entering the service that his attitude would be that of sympathetic helpfulness rather than that of harping criticism. He decided that whatever influence he had among the boys would be gained by living the principles of Christ among them. Less outward lip profession and more living was his method. At first his influence seemed to be small in the midst of so many contrary influences. But one day an individual, with whom he had become quite well acquainted yet who was very rough outwardly, came to him and said, "I fear that you will soon be taken away from us as you are scheduled for promotion, but before you go I want to tell you that you have been my guiding star. Some of us boys are a little rough on the outside but we have agreed not to use profanity in your presence and would like to request further that you come back and go over with us if you have an opportunity." This is just one illustration of the unconscious life-influence of an individual. No doubt it could be duplicated many times, if true facts were only revealed. The incident leads me to express this conviction that the Christian church to be successful must justify herself by proving to mankind that her faith is a "living faith," issuing in life and works. Her deeds must be commensurate with her profession. A religion which does not work itself out in life and character is going to be an important force in the future. Christianity must be more vitally connected up with daily living to be a virile force. The Christian must be a man of courage who fearlessly proclaims by word and life his supreme message.

Then again the world war soldier is impatient with formalism in religion. Religion to him is closely associated with life. Doctrinal formulas are largely discarded; in fact he does not concern himself with them. The paradoxes in Christianity, when considered from a logical point of view, do not trouble his mind as he believes in the laboratory method in religion and in this field they no longer exist. The sacrificial spirit in Christianity will be easily comprehended and emphasized, especially by those who have made all but the supreme sacrifice in life. The religious prophet today, who demands sacrifice in the Christian life will find a more ready hearing than formerly.

The home ties will be strengthened by the experience of the soldier. Many a lad there was in camp who longed for his home folks. He had not realized what his people meant to him until he was suddenly separated from them and with no opportunity to return. These returning boys will appreciate their homes, a fact which may mean much for the future of the American home.

What challenge do the above facts and the new world conditions bring to us? In the first place, we have a challenge to do bigger things. The world no longer deals in trifles. This great struggle has revealed to us the vast possibilities for good or evil in the world today. Our boasted civilization will either destroy herself or she will develop adequate means of control. For myself, I am forced to believe that the moral and religious principles of Christianity must be that controlling influence. This means that the missionary enterprise must assume proportions which heretofore would have staggered us. But we are becoming accustomed to shocks these days. Other churches have shocked their adherents by their gigantic plans and the Brethren church must do no less. We must expect great things, attempt herculean tasks and we will win them. The spirit of co-operation is necessary to win sacred, as well as secular battles. The allied nations failed in the great world struggle until they were willing to co-operate in their plans. The Christian forces will fail if they do not organize and work in harmony in the field of practical service here in our own country.

The great challenge today is for men. Men of vision, men dominated by high ideals: men who will surrender their lives willingly for some noble and worthy principle. Christianity must appeal to the heroic in life. We must prove to young men that we have something that challenges all the energy and the vitality that they possess. The spirit of Christ must be made a virile and aggressive force which will captivate the hearts and minds of men and send them forth as zealous heralds of a great cause. The poem which concludes this article sets forth the challenge of the new "spiritual statemanship." I cannot name the author who utters this call for men:

"Bring me men to match my mountains,
Bring me men to match my plains—
Men with empires in their purpose,
And new eras in their brains.
Bring me men to match my prairies,
Men to match my inland seas,
Men whose thought shall pave a highway,
Up to ampler destinies;
Pioneers to clear Thought's marsh lands,
And to cleanse old Error's fin;
Bring me men to match my mountains,
Bring me men!

Bring me men to match my forests,
Strong to fight the storm and blast,
Branching toward the skyey future,
Rooted in the fertile past.
Bring me men to match my valleys,
Tolerant of sun and snow,
Men within whose fruitful purpose
Time's consummate blooms shall grow,
Men to tame the tigerish instincts
Of the lair and cave and den,
Cleanse the dragon slime of Nature—
Bring me men!

Bring me men to match my rivers,
Continent cleaners, flowing free,
Drawn by the eternal madness
To be mingled with the sea;
Men of oceanic impulse,
Men whose moral currents sweep ward the wide enfolding ocean
Of an undiscovered deep;
Men who feel the strong pulsation
Of the Central Sea—and then
Time their currents to its earth throb—
Bring me men!

"Breaking in" a Young Preacher from the Ideal to the Practical By a Brethren Preacher

Among the earliest recollections of the writer was a cherished ideal that has been slowly dissipated by the actual experiences of life. That ideal was the mental picture of a church needing a pastor and how he was selected. There was a prayerful consideration of their needs and their field, then a committee was selected to communicate with a godly man whose life and character were his chief recommendations. Fluency of speech was desirable of course. Outside people would come to services more readily if he was a "good talker." Then too he ought to be an active pastor.

But what a rude awakening. The first committee to wait upon the budding pastor consisted of three horny-handed "sons of the soil," who succinctly stated the fact "that they were poor people and few in number, and that out of such conditions they had discovered that they could use the preacher, providing he could come for the munificent salary of three hundred and sixty dollars for the first year. The preceding pastor had been paid five hundred, but an inexperienced man could hardly expect (?) as much as one who had experience." A rather hard bargain counting the fact that the young man had a school debt and a family. But a feature of the "call" was an annual donation of generous proportions. This gave the committee a salve that eased the conscience in "dickering" for a salary that seemed somewhat meagre when the size of the congregation was considered. Like gossip, however, donations always increase the more the imagination is exercised.

A young man full of faith in man and God was not hard to persuade. He became a pastor. Each year saw his salary rise, not rapidly, but steadily. He was getting experience. Some of the most exquisite were the charitable schemes that found birth in the community. If they went through the test of first presentation to the pastor, they were undoubtedly alright. Sometimes he squirmed, but his good wife managed somehow to make both ends meet without debt, but only she could tell the secret of how it was done. No, she never was reputed to be a great financier, but she performed miracles with a dollar. Unfortunately no mention was made of conference expenses. So attendance meant another drain upon the little income. How he dreamed of the glorious privilege of meeting with the deeply spiritual men and women who were the leaders of the church in different parts of the country. The inspiration of such fellowship! Just to think of the deepening of his spiritual life by a week's contact with people who had mastered so many problems that gave him so much trouble. How dazzling was the prospect! But conference was far away. If only some good brother or sister might help out so that he might learn how to stir up the lagging energy; to find the antidote for a poorly attended communion; to discover ways of putting people to work; to use the young people successfully; and to solve a score of other problems. Conference would contain people who had succeeded, who knew how. If only he could go!

What treasures are in the home unappreciated. Wife knew he could go. But she had found the way through self-denial. He could go if she could not. O! yes she could spend the time visiting back home. She was sure to get rested there. The expense would be small, only the fare. Nothing like conference bills and new clothes. Then she was tired. The last few weeks had been a little strenuous. The last big rain storm had deluged Deacon Jones' house and the water had seeped through and loosened the plaster and stained the paper. She had helped Mrs. Jones to repaper the two bed rooms. She was the congregation's "port in a storm." Then old Sister Brown who lived by herself had gone to her reward and the ladies led by the pastor's wife had cleaned house and laid out the poor old soul. She was too poor to hire help and the house did need "going over" before the funeral. Nobody else could chaperon the girls during their social, like their teacher, who happened to be the preacher's wife. What getting ready, and then the dishes were to wash from the beginning until midnight. It was only two days later that Smith's little girl took convulsions. The days and nights that followed were like a nightmare. She had been there so much that things were sadly neglected at home. Then when she was able to come home once more, it was almost like a house cleaning to get things arranged right again. She could be recuperating at "home." The young pastor had just enough to go, no more, it took scraping to collect enough and for awhile it looked impossible. The congregation took a needy fit just that month, it was August, the money to pay the preacher was not all in and he would have to wait until next month to get paid up. But there came a rift in the cloud, Brother Johnson with a kindly thoughtfulness came over one evening and said to the pastor, aside, "maybe a little money might help you to get along until your next pay." The kindness helped wonderfully. It was followed by an invitation to come out and pick their supply of raspberries and blackberries for canning. How they both took advantage of the offer. But how tired both were when they closed up the parsonage and departed upon the long looked for vacation and trip.

What a conference! Such addresses! What marvelous men these men were. How easily they solved their problems! What new friends the young pastor made! Men old in the ministry were kind in their welcome to him. Others younger were not quite so kind. All kinds and types were there. One brother in particular had such an important place on the program, in fact, he was used quite a number of times. He was eloquent. How easy his work seemed to be. It prospered because he just seemed to inspire everybody with his own zeal and confidence. Every one seemed at their best, in looks and in spirits. Writers he admired became real to him with a personal knowledge of their friendship.

His unsophisticated nature was not of the simpleton type, and he used his eyes and ears to advantage. What foibles he was compelled to note, because of their prominence. The great preacher who had held him spellbound by his eloquence, was clothed in four different suits in one day. His attention was called to the fact by the amused remarks of a small group with which he was visiting during an intermission. Personal adornment seemed to be his chief concern outside of his public addresses. He was the occupant of one of the great pulpits in the denomination. "I wonder if Jesus would have dressed like that," mused the young pastor.

Another whose fiery zeal and brilliance had made his name a household word throughout the denomination, formed one of a group which seemed very much excited. His desire to know what excited the splendid speaker was too strong for his innate courtesy, so he stopped. His feelings passed description when he found the good brother so angry over his assignment on the program, that he was voicing his indignation. "The idea of putting HIM on for such a subject and at such a time, when 'So and So' had such an important one and he was the pastor of a dinky little church in a country district." What an inspiring trait of character. A whole field can be seen through a crack in the fence. And such a man had the choice of the biggest churches.

Just that evening, after supper, along a secluded by-street, the young pastor and an older brother sauntered past a pair of promenaders whose lips emitted great clouds of tobacco smoke from two cigars, the pair seemed to be enjoying. The startled eyes of the younger man sought the face of his companion in dumbfounded surprise. The other laughed at the unspoken question. "Yes," he nodded smilingly, "the good brothers cannot give up the weed." "But," challenged the younger, "how can they get any of our good churches when they have such habits?" "Easy," laughed the other, "churches are not particular about the habits of the preacher unless they are too raw."

A short distance further on was a couple seated in a nook in a by-path. They arose as the two men approached and leisurely crossed to a refreshment booth. "Dr. Daise?" questioned the younger, "and his wife?" "No," answered the other shortly, "the lady is not his wife." "O!" involuntarily escaped the younger. Similar incidents during the rest of the conference stirred the young preacher's wrath. That night his entrance into a chatting group made no break in the conversation. They were a group of young preachers. His humiliation was complete when the group arose and re-entered the auditorium. It had only been an hour since supper, but his heartache and burden seemed a thousand years old. Just the old, old story of shattered ideals. The conversation had been general and the information each one possessed seemed to be shared with the others without a dissenting voice. First, there was the fact that the churches grouped readily, according to membership and salary. That certain ones would be splendid places if there was a fair field: But certain churches always depended upon a certain group for successors. Classmates or one of a clique were invariably the choice. Others had a couple of business men who came to conference with the church voice sewed up in their personal preferences. "What can a fellow do?" growled one, "I don't intend to lick their boots to get their church." "No," added another, "a fellow with any self-respect will not try to ingratiate himself with a couple of hard-headed (?) business men. Let the schemer who wants the place go to it. He'll have his hands full when he gets it. They've pocketed that church so long that its spiritual condition shows it." "God calling a pastor?" What a travesty! Another church whose activities had given it a splendid reputation, came up for discussion. "Without a pastor. Are they looking for one?" asked a member of the group. "Yes," replied another, a trifle bitterly, they are culling out the timber that's available. O, don't worry boys, none of us will do, we are not heavy enough calibre for them. They have been without a pastor for some time. We don't have brains enough, we are all second raters. Their cry is that we need more ministers, that we are short of men, when as a matter of fact, they think there are only a few capable men brainy enough for their pulpits and what the denomination needs is more high class men. We have too many men of mediocre ability." "But," objected the young pastor, heartsick at the revelation of sordid worldliness, "I have a splendid consecrated man, in the prime of life, having had good all-around preparation for the ministry, looking for a place. His church became defunct through

The Influence of Perspective. By Martin Shively

TEXT: "His windows being open in his chamber, toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees, three times a day, and prayed and gave thanks before his god, as he did aforetime."—Daniel 6:10.

One of the most exceptional characters among those whose deeds find record on the pages of the Old Testament, or even the New, is this man who gives his name to the book from which the text is taken. Taken as a hostage while yet but a mere child and with a few companions carried far from home to live among strangers and in a corrupt court where it might have been expected that he would soon adopt the customs common to his new environment, we cannot but be surprised, and pleased too, when we find him showing an independent and fearless spirit as he refuses the king's meat and wine, because of its first having been offered before an idol. He was young and most likely possessed of the normal appetite of a boy to whom the rich viands which he refused would, under other circumstances, have been most welcome. For the sake of a principle he chose the simpler vegetable diet rather than stultify his religious convictions. The better showing he and his companions made during the course of study, and at the close, was not entirely due to their diet but, at least partly, to the fact that they were young men who had high ideals and dared to live up to them at any cost.

We find him later confidently standing before the king, both to reveal and to interpret the dream which had so troubled him, and which so completely baffled the other wise men of the court. Most beautifully and devoutly, he declared that only by the help of his God—the God of his fathers—could the thing be done, and he became the agent of the Almighty in spreading before the king and all the world, the meaning of the great image and the rock cut from the mountain without hands. Later again, he stood before his sovereign to tell the meaning of a dream, which was full of dire portent to him whose sleep had been troubled by it. With great kindness and a fearless tactfulness, he told of the awful disaster which awaited the king and why it should come. It was a most courageous act, but he was equal to it.

Still later, when as an old man he was called into court to decipher the strange writing which had been traced upon the wall of the great banquet hall, in which a king and his courtiers were debauching themselves and committing sacrilege by the use of sacred vessels, in the midst of their wine drinking orgies he stood with dignity and with kindly homily rebuked both king and people for their sin, and then read the Divine pronouncement as it was traced before them. The most regal personage in the whole company was the fearless prophet of God.

Then there came that test of his courage, which resulted in his being cast into the den of lions, through the machination of his enemies at court. So far as we know, he went to his apparent doom without a word of protest and with not a tremor of fear. Like his companions in captivity, he felt that the God he served could deliver him if he would and if he would not, his servant would die faithful at least.

The wonder which finds place in our hearts as to the source of all these qualities is completely satisfied when we find the habit of his life described in the text. It was no new impulse which made him open his window toward Jerusalem and pray thrice daily to the God whose temple was there, but a custom to which he had adhered from the beginning of his sojourn in the far away land. It was his perspective, spiritual and physical, which had kept him faithful all these years.

Our mental horizon is as wide as our experience. We may open our windows in any direction but the spirit of prayer does not possess us and give us its uplift unless we persist in fixing our gaze upon the good in men rather than the evil. And he must be blind who does not recognize the fact that evil is in the world. But there is good to see. For even the worst of men have that within them which makes God love them, for it was for the sinful that Jesus came and for them he died.

We may not escape disappointment in this life, and to us all there come bereavements which for the time being crush us to the earth and leave us broken in body and spirit. Physical disaster befalls us and discouragement overwhelms us. But there is still a Jerusalem direction and if our windows are open toward it, we may not fail to see that "all things work together for good, to them that love the Lord." According to any standard we care to employ, our blessings far outnumber the experiences which we call by another name. With our windows open in that direction, the spirit of prayer possesses us and we find the grace to say, "Not my will, but thine be done."

Many of our experiences in and with the church are such as disappoint, and many do even worse. But if we think too much of "Alexander the coppersmith," we are likely to overlook Paul altogether. And if we grieve too much about the defection of Judas, we may overlook the matchless Son of God entirely.

So when we hear the persistent voice of complaint bemoaning the wickedness of men, or when we find ourselves sitting daily at the graves of our blasted hopes, refusing the comfort of our friends and that better comfort which the Spirit would give, or when we find men who persist in belaboring the church for the imperfections of its membership, we know their window is not open toward Jerusalem, but in the opposite direction. If we would be like Daniel in any degree, the way to such an achievement is open, for "God is no respecter of persons."

extraordinary circumstances and he is available. The cry in the Four Year Program and through the church paper is for more men in the ministry. What is wrong? I cannot encourage new recruits when such conditions prevail. "O! you'll cut your eye teeth after awhile," another replied.

The young pastor hastened to his room. He was in the travail of a new birth. The crumbling ruins of old ideals and dreams that had been "castles in the air" had come tumbling down in such woeful confusion that even the foundations were hard to find. Good men in the ministry, of course there were, but they were not all ideal, evidently. Some had worse traits than idiosyncrasies, some were undoubtedly in need of conversion—both pastors and evangelists. How many, was a question.

Good men in the laity, the great majority. But still some who forgot that scheming and business hard-headedness were not exactly what God and his church coveted in her leading lay members. But what is going to be done with conditions that are going to bring us to a critical time? Drift on?

That young pastor spent some crucial hours that night. "What will I do?" was uppermost in his prayers and heartaches. The appeal to be politic was strong. We are conservative in religious things, perhaps the most good can be done by saying nothing. Just quietly working with others to better conditions. Is this the wise thing? I won't be putting

The Forgiving Spirit. By C. A. Stewart

OUR SCRIPTURE

And when ye stand praying, forgive, if we have ought against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive you your trespasses (Mark 11:25, 26). Then came Peter to him and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times, until seventy times seven (Matt. 18:21, 22). Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift (Matt. 5:23, 24). Take heed to yourselves: If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him. And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him (Luke 17:3, 4). Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them for they know not what they do (Luke 23:34).

OUR MEDITATIONS

The scriptures are full of rich promises to the believer, even to becoming "heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ." But those promises can only be received on condition, and those conditions are such that the blessings are within reach of all. Jesus Christ has opened up the path to God and has removed every obstruction that hindered the progress of man. The path of the future is bright with promises if we follow the Master of men, but if we go our own course we shall find the pathway blocked by the Tree of Life and broken tables of the Law.

One of the hindrances to our spiritual progress today is the unforgiving spirit. This clouds our sky and veils the face of God. Jesus made forgiveness essential to salvation. He said, "If ye do not forgive neither will your heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses." "And when ye stand praying, forgive, if we have ought against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses." In other words it is no use for us to pray to our heavenly Father to forgive us while we cherish the spirit of hatred in our hearts; and his forgiveness is necessary before we can drink of the cup of salvation. We cannot put out the fire while we are pouring oil on the flames.

We sometimes rebel against the doctrine of forgiveness, but if Jesus had followed our inclinations, we would yet be in our sins, shut out from the kingdom of heaven. He was without sin; Pilate's wife bore testimony to that fact, and Pilate himself declared that he found nothing in him worthy of death. Yet he went to the cross without hatred in his heart. He could have commanded legions of angels to protect him, but he submitted. "When he was reviled, he reviled not again." It may be hard sometimes to take the insults of the world, but "ye shall not be tempted above that ye are able to bear." And with it all, we have not suffered as he suffered; we have not been spit upon; we have not worn a cross of thorns; we have not gone to the cross to die for others. Christ did. Hear him say, after they had heaped upon him every cruelty possible, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." We often hear men say, "I can't forgive for this or that insult." It may be hard, but we must keep in mind that to be a Christian is not an easy task. It is a warfare, and we are not called upon to stack arms, but to go forward. We are following a leader that never knows defeat and we are sure of victory. He knows the hearts and powers of men and he never gives us an order that we cannot obey, nor a task that we cannot do. He would not have told us to forgive if it were not possible for us to do so. He would not bind us to something that was impossible. If we are to be partakers of his glory we must be partakers of his sufferings. When we suffer with him, the greatest blessings come to us. And then it is that we are made to radiate the spirit of Christ most, and then it is that we become the mightiest power in Christ's hands to carry his gospel to a dying world. There is no better way of revealing the love of God to the world than through the spirit of forgiveness.

I am convinced that all of our suffering and all the insults heaped upon us by the world will sink into nothingness when we enter into the "Joy of our Lord." Then we can say with Peter that we "count it all joy when we fall into divers temptations," and with Paul, "If so be that we suffer with him that we may also be glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. Let us look upon our fellowmen with a forgiving spirit and look forward to a crown of life.

OUR PRAYER

Our heavenly Father, we know how prone we are to cherish hatred in our hearts toward our brethermen and we acknowledge our sin. Help us to cast out every unkind feeling and to cultivate that great spirit that thy Son Jesus didst manifest toward even his bitter persecutors. Forgive us of our sins of malice and unkindness and hatred. We owe all to thy forgiving spirit and yet we have been unwilling to forgive others. Take away this evil from us and make us to share thine own good spirit. This we ask in the name of Jesus Christ our Savior. Amen.

Bunker Hill, Indiana.

myself in a critical attitude if I quietly pay no attention, thinking men are self-controlled. My future will be better if I do not create confusion by public denunciation of conditions. These and a thousand other thoughts flitted through his mind in the slowly passing hours.

Why not denounce conditions in righteous indignation, as you feel? burned through his soul. "But they are not so bad," argued his optimistic other self. The many good also deplore the things that you, a green country parson, so quickly noticed. You are magnifying what are simply little defects, that are better dealt with by ignoring them.

But is it so? Do the Christian people generally practise and accept the attitude of some of the larger churches, that there are only a half-dozen men of fit calibre for big churches in the denomination; that all the others are only second-rate men, who might by some miracle grow into size sufficient to fill their pulpits; that twenty-nine out of thirty are fit only for rural or small churches; that the habits of preachers are not particularly detrimental to church work unless they become too raw or obnoxious; that a man's fondness for cigarettes, cigars, liquor or women, can be indulged in moderately without protest from congregations or detriment to himself, if he is a BIG man, vocally, physically, or intellectually? Spirituality is a secondary matter. O! of course it is grand, if he is any and all of these and chiefly spiritual. But such a man is a phenomenon.

Furthermore, that there are a few women in our congregations, too many indeed, who by reason of their commercial success, are actually, vulgarly bossing the congregation and dominating its choice to compel them to take the one they think fit or do without a pastor?

Brethren think on these things. Is a man a Man of God, or a fool, if finding these things to be so he speaks of them or says nothing and waits for God to begin a reformation. He sometimes begins with destruction.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Topic for June 1: Faith. By Dr. J. M. Tombaugh

Belief in God is a universal faith. Man's mind is so constituted that faith arises spontaneously and intuitively; and for a rational being it is not only easy to believe, but it is practically impossible not to believe, that there is a God. To believe that this great, beautiful world in which we live, to believe that the far-away stars, like diamonds sparkling in the bosom of the night; to believe that the mighty universe, infinite, limitless, stretching on and on forever, to believe that these have a Maker and Ruler is a small tax on the faith of any man. Not only does it not require an effort to believe, it requires effort and prejudice and willful blindness not to believe. "That there is a God, all nature cries aloud through all her works," and that he has revealed himself in every leaf and flower and blade of grass, because in all creation are evidences of design and fitness and purpose, and by the intelligence and perfection of the design, the designer is revealed.

Jesus once said to the disciples: "Ye believe in God." Such is the faith of all rational humanity; only "the fool has said in his heart there is no God." However deep a nation may sink into ignorance and barbarism, it still retains some notion of God. The conception of God which such nations hold may be a very erroneous and unworthy one, but there is no people wholly destitute of some sort of religious faith. The efforts which heathen people make to worship, indicate the universal prevalence of a religious instinct which no condition can quite destroy. It is like the instinct of the lower animals; it is unreasoning and without knowledge, but it is firmly fixed in the very constitution of the soul. Even without the Bible and its teaching, there is a consciousness of God which arises in the human heart and men feel a presence which answers to something in themselves. It is a Presence in which their minds find a satisfaction, a sort of rest and peace, which nothing else can give. It is interesting to note that the nations without a written revelation, even the most benighted nations, are not wholly without faith. The Indians on our western prairies believed in God, the Great Spirit,—and blindly worshiped him, though they had no other revelation than nature and their own hearts. The ancient Greeks and Romans worshiped Zeus and Jupiter. The Egyptians worshiped Osiris and Isis. The Persians, the Hindoos, the Aztecs of Mexico, the Druids of western Europe, the ancient Northmen, the Peruvians of South America, all had a form of religious faith and in obedience to an impulse which arises irresistibly in every man, they all were blindly "feeling after God." With them it was not the revelation of the written Word, but their own inner consciousness and the evidences furnished by the material world about them that prompted them to seek after God.

All this however merely shows the capacity of man for faith, and his natural aptitude for religion. Of itself, a faith like this brings little comfort for hope. In fact a Christless faith is unutterably hopeless. One might, a thousand times rather believe there is no God, that all is chance, that we are the sport of the forces in nature about us which we recognize but cannot control; than to believe that there is a God, a just and holy God whom we have offended, and who shall be our judge in the last day, but that there is no Savior to be our righteousness, no Redeemer to shield us in the day of Judgment. To believe in God through Christ is a very different thing from faith in God independent of Christ; one is revealed religion, the other is natural religion; the one is the faith that "cometh by hearing," the other is a faith which comes from an intelligent observation of the works of God in nature. One brings hope and peace and salvation, the other may excite wonder and admiration, but it can ere-ate no hope for blessedness to come, for it has no message of pardoning grace and redeeming love.

The faith that saves is a faith that is fixed and centered in Jesus Christ. It believes that the babe cradled in the manger long ago was in very truth the Son of God; it believes that Jesus was truly Emmanuel, God with us, and that "in him dwelt all the fulness of the God-head bodily." It accepts and unwaveringly clings to the doctrine, that this same Jesus died for our sins, according to the Scriptures, and that he rose from the dead and ascended on high where he now appears in the presence of God for us." There are other truths taught in the Bible which are highly important; there are revelations concerning the past and the future; there are precepts for holy living; there are teachings concerning the nature and attributes of God, and a thousand other important and necessary doctrines which faith must gladly and loyally accept, but the vital essence of saving faith is, after all, belief in, and a loving acceptance of Jesus Christ as one's own personal Savior.

When Jesus said to his disciples: "Ye believe in God," he added the exhortation: "Believe also in me." Evidently he meant more than that they should believe in his sincerity and goodness, in his gentleness and tenderness; he meant that they, and that we, should believe in him as Lord and Savior, our hope and righteousness, the source of our comfort and joy. Any faith which comes short of believing and trusting and living in the gracious fact of Jesus' atoning death for sinners, is a faith which can neither honor God nor save men.

That which is called faith may exist in men in varying degrees. Belief sometimes may be genuine and yet be too weak to change the life or to bear fruit to God. The puddle by the road side is water just as truly as is the ocean, but one cannot float ships in it. The vapor from the tea kettle is steam, but one cannot drive an engine with it. Just so the faith which says there is a God and Jesus is his Son, is faith, but such a belief, alone, neither comforts the heart; nor saves the soul. To be saving faith it must be intensified; it must be quickened into action and made a living thing. Instead of the man holding the faith, the faith must come to possess and control the man. Much that is called faith is merely a passive acceptance of certain things as true; but faith, in the Scriptural sense, is trust. It is confidence so absolute in the loving kindness and tender mercy of the Lord, that it gladly commits to him the life, the soul the all, both for present keeping and future safety, and then says with St. Paul: "I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him."

Faith to be effective, must be more than intellectual; it must be more than a calm, cold, calculating weighing of evidences and the unemotional forming of judgment therefrom; there must be feeling in our faith. The kind of faith which God requires is the kind which stirs the soul to action. Perhaps the controversy between the relative value of faith and works in effecting a man's justification, can find a solution in distinguishing between an emotional and an intellectual faith. Paul taught that it is faith which justifies without works. James wrote it is by works a man is justified and not by faith alone. Both taught a great truth, and neither contradicted the other. It is faith that saves but not the mere passive acceptance of a truth, or the formal assent of the judgment to it, but a faith so vital that it fires the soul to the performance of righteous deeds. A passive, inactive, dead faith which does not rouse the feelings, is as bad as unbelief. We have, all of us, need to pray as the disciples did: "Lord increase our faith." "Have faith, not in thy faith, but in God."

A Creed for Christian Stewards

By Harris Franklin Rall

What do we need? Not more collections. Not fewer collections. We need a generation of Christian men who will understand the plain truth about the stewardship of money. What is this truth? We might put it into a creed for Christian stewards.

I Believe

1. My money is mine only in trust. It belongs to God, just as I do.

2. This money is not filthy lucre. It is not the devil's coin. It is stored-up human power. It is so much of myself which I can set at work in China or India or Toronto or the Yukon.

3. God is counting upon this money for his work. It is to build his churches and preach his gospel, train his workers and send them out, teach and heal and save his children, and help bring in a new kingdom of righteousness and brotherhood and peace.

4. To spend my income rightly is one of my first tasks as a Christian. Until I settle this my prayers and confessions will be like saying, "Lord, Lord," and not doing the will of my Father.

5. I should set aside a definite proportion of my income for the church and the service of others. I do this in acknowledgment of God's sovereignty over all of my material possessions. I do this to guard against my own selfishness. I do this because it is business-like. Giving by impulse and without system does not accord with the importance of this work.

6. The proportion to be set aside for these purposes should not be less than one-tenth of my income. The Old Testament enjoined the tithe in ancient Israel, and surely I am receiving far more from God than did the men of any former generation. Nevertheless one-tenth is not to be the limit of my giving. I should not begin with less than one-tenth. I ought to give more if I am able.

thereby win the honor that Brother Teeter promises,—the running of the pastors' picture on first page. We shall be glad to give him the space. Now, churches, is the chance to show who your pastor is.

Brother I. D. Bowman, of the Second church of Philadelphia, gives a brief but interesting report of the meeting he recently conducted in the Allentown church of which Brother DeLozier is pastor. A goodly number of conversions are reported as a result of the meeting. Brother Bowman also takes occasion to speak concerning the high esteem in which Brother DeLozier is held in Allentown, and all who know Brother DeLozier will agree that the nice things he says about him are all true. And it is a fine thing for one minister to say the nice things rather than the opposite about his fellow-minister and do what he can to increase his parishioners' love for him when assisting him in a meeting. We are sure Brother Bowman did this.

Well, just as we expected, that mercury has gone out at the top, and Hudson, Iowa, hit the last blow. Before we can report any more college endowment receipts, we'll have to get a new thermometer or re-graduate our old one. But then we don't mind the work, just keep the good work going. It's a great work; there is no greater demanding the attention of the Brethren church. If the church is in any measure to realize its possible future and do the work that God has for us to do, we must first of all make adequate preparation for the instruction and religious training of our young people, both the

7. I should invest this money for God as carefully as in my temporal business and keep strict account of this fund. I should study the church and its work that I may give wisely. I should give systematically. I should play with my giving.

Put Your Giving on a Regular Proportionate Basis

Public Press

For many a year the question of raising church funds has been mulling along, discussed with no very vital enthusiasm and allowed to sink into oblivion except in times of temporary crisis.

Then came 1914 and the Great War. People gave more than they ever dreamed they could; they kept on giving not only money but lives and time and service. And out of the travail that it cost it has emerged a new idea, or rather a revival of a century old theory of Christian stewardship.

On every hand one hears the call to give in some worthy cause. It may be war work, it may be some missionary enterprise, but in any case the motive is unselfish, the object the bettering of some unfortunate state of affairs. More and more people are feeling not, "How much shall I give of my money?" but, "How little of the Lord's money which I have in trust for him need I use for personal wants; and how much can I divert to the Lord's uses?"

That is stewardship. Never was there a time in the world's history when people were more ready to carry it out, with heart softened by war's great calamity, and spirits tuned to the real verities in life.

Today marks the churches' opportunity to reach the hearts of men, but no work is possible without funds to back it. Seeing its opportunity, therefore, the church is faced with the two-fold problem of first inaugurating a general stewardship movement to increase giving, and then of wisely administering those funds.

ministry and laity. The church without an adequately equipped school is a church without a future. We are now realizing this fact. The sad thing is that we did not realize it sooner. But we have only fairly begun. This hundred thousand must be covered by another, and then another, and, yet, it is true, another and still another. We will not stop until we have done the work right, as God would have us to do it. From every section Brother Beachler has received the most hearty co-operation in this work that the churches committed to his charge, and he has presented this worthy cause to you in a way that made you believe the more strongly in it. He has done a great work in a great way. But his work is not finished. He must have at least two hundred thousand before we let him quit. He will get it if we will help him. Hudson and Waterloo have led off splendidly in their district. Others will do no less splendidly.

On top of this wave of financial success you have received the news of the change in the presidency of the college. Dr. Furry has done a noble work, but he has seen fit to relinquish the task. The college trustees have selected as his successor a man who will prove very worthy. We shall remember Dr. Furry gratefully for what he has done for the school during these strenuous times, but we are fully persuaded that he is being followed by a man who will be equal to every occasion and who will lead the school on to greater heights than it has ever attained. A report of the trustees is in this issue. They have made a wise selection and we bespeak the hearty co-operation of all the lovers of Ashland College. Suppose we all pledge him our hearty support; do it today.

FALLING DOWN ON STATISTICS

The report blanks were mailed to the superintendents three weeks ago and only about 55 percent of them have been returned.

We have received reports from farthest west, farthest east, farthest north and farthest south, but about 45 percent of the superintendents at the intermediate points are not on the job.

We spent just five cents of the good money of our Association to put that blank report card into your hand in shape that it would not cost you a cent to return it. What did you do with it? Yes, you received it, for Uncle Sam has returned those that were not lifted. Oh! You forgot all about it. Well, come now and show your loyalty to your church by digging it out and filling it out quickly before we have to spend five cents more to send you another card.

Home Mission Notes

By G. C. Carpenter

Spokane

All are rejoiced that the Spokane brethren under the enthusiastic leadership of Brother Paul Miller have found a way or rather made a way by which they are going forward with the completion of their church building.

Krypton

Brother Cook writes that he preached several evenings up at Buck Fork. There was at least one confession, a Mr. Brown who had taught school several years at that place. The busy season made it necessary to postpone the revival until a later date.

The Right Ring

A good brother in Virginia writes: "Enclosed find fifteen dollars for mission work to be used in Krypton or Riverside or both. We have just recently contributed to the African and South American missions. The Lord is wonderfully blessing us in our Christian giving. We crave no riches except to give to the Lord's work."

A Tither's Testimony

A good Indiana sister and regular contributor writes: "More than a year has passed since I sent you ten dollars for the great mission work in Kentucky, but there are so many places for God's money (that is what I call the one-tenth of my salary) that I couldn't make it reach as far as I wanted to. I now enclose ten dollars, also five dollars from my mother, who I am proud to say is a tither."

The New Station

Miss Elizabeth Haddix and Miss Hattie Cope are conducting a Sunday school at Happy, Kentucky and they report that they had thirty-one present last Sunday and an offering of $1.08. They say too that the people seem to be spiritually hungry and promise to help them toward a building as soon as possible.

DEDICATION AT TEGGARDEN, INDIANA

The great day we had here on February 16, 1919, was made possible by the faithful laboring of a few Brethren people. They were only a handful at first and they met in the homes; then there was built a union chapel, in which three or four denominations worshipped. These faithful few had a vision of a church house all their own some day, but being without a pastor they suffered many disappointments. But there was one among the few who stood among the rest as a leader and with courage held them strong and faithful against the opposition of the three or four other denominations. He was anxious for the day when their hopes would be realized. That was Deacon Malaneth Peters. It is to our great regret that he was called home before he was permitted to see this happy day. But we feel sure that his Christian influence will linger for many days with this good people.

The writer takes no credit for the growth of this congregation, but would like to mention some who have helped wonderfully in its upbuilding. First we would mention Brother A. T. Wirick who came and preached to them on Sunday afternoons. Then Brother George Kinzie held a series of meetings. Next Brother A. E. Thomas was very successful in gathering a goodly number together. Then was called the first pastor in the person of Brother C. A. Stewart, who labored for three years and was blessed of the Lord. During this time Brother Jennings and Brother Ashman held meetings for them, so that when the present pastor was called to be the leader, they had a membership of 60 people. We had all labored and prayed for this day. But when the day arrived, to use the words of Brother Rench, "Things looked pretty bad;" that is, bad weather and bad roads, with a goal set to raise $1700.00. We thought we would later raise enough to do the painting and finish the basement. But when Dr. Furry came on the scene we were more encouraged, and with Dr. Furry and Brother Rench to help us, we were sure to win out.

But before I tell you the results of the Sunday's service, I will tell you a word about the building. It is 28x40 feet on the ground, with a basement under the whole building. The entrance is through a vestibule 14x14 feet. But you are more interested in the success of the big day. The morning service opened at 10 A. M., with a sermon by Brother Furry as only he can preach. After that Brother Rench took charge of the big task of the day, the raising of the money. And to our surprise he succeeded in getting $1810. The S. S. C. E. pledged $500 of this, and I want to say that they cannot be beaten for hustling by any society in the brotherhood. If you want to know how they do it, write to Sister Mary Ronsburger, of Walkerton, Indiana. The S. S. C. E. had prepared a fine dinner for the day so that no one need go home.

At three in the afternoon Brother Furry brought a message on Christian Education, and it was very timely. We have a young man here who is thinking seriously of preparing for the ministry. Then Brother Rench took up his task where he left off before dinner and soon had brought the total amount up to $1975. That with the sixty dollars given by Nappanee (Thank you, Nappanee) made the final total reach $2035. You ought to have witnessed the rejoicing and have heard us sing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

At six-thirty the Christian Endeavor service was held and it was an arousing one, for Brother Rench said so, and he knows. At seven o'clock Brother Rench formally dedicated the house to the Lord's service. Then Brother Furry brought the final message of the day, and thus came to a close a day that will long be remembered by the Brethren in this place. Our brethren wish to thank the good people of North Liberty, Nappanee, South Bend and Lapaz, as well as Dr. Furry and Brother Rench, all of whom so nobly helped to make the day such a grand success. May the Lord send a leader to this people, who is strong and powerful in the Lord. Brethren, we have a mighty Christ, and may we ever be found laboring in his cause.

J. W. CLARK.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH Los Angeles, California

During the last week of March and the first half of April, our pastor, Brother Jennings, was loaned to the Fillmore congregation for a series of meetings which resulted in some thirty conversions. After one week of rest and preparation a series was begun in our church here and we have just entered upon the second week of this campaign. The attendance has not been large but a good interest has been manifested and a number of the members have been very faithful in visiting and in inviting the unsaved to attend the meetings. Many prayers have been offered for those we are trying to reach and these prayers are being answered. Six have come forward; two have united with the church by relation, and four have confessed Christ and will be baptized no doubt very soon. Two of these are young Sunday school pupils, two sisters who have been enrolled in our school ever since they were babies. The other two are a husband and wife, parents of two sweet little boys. As we contemplate the bringing up of these children in a Christian home we see the importance of such conversions as these two last mentioned.

The attendance of our Sunday school is about back to normal since the abating of the influenza epidemic, and the interest of the pupils and the efficiency of the officers and teaching force is the best we have ever had. The program by the Sunday school on Easter morning was one to be proud of.

The regular quarterly business meeting was held on Tuesday evening following the close of the Fillmore campaign and good reports were received from the various officers of the church. Two deacons were elected, Brother I. A. Miller and Brother Joe Shively. The subject of a new church building was introduced and a committee of five appointed to undertake the raising of a building fund and make such other plans as may be possible, looking toward the erection of a church house suitable to our work in this part of the city.

We hope to be able to report some more interesting news at the close of the present series of meetings.

A. P. REED.

4910 Wadsworth St.

TEEGARDEN, INDIANA

It was the writer's good pleasure to spend two weeks in an evangelistic effort with the brethren at Teegarden, Indiana. The first week it rained every night, and the roads were next to impassable, but we were greeted with splendid audiences each evening. We tried to preach the old gospel of the Son of God without fear or favor, making no apology for what the Book teaches. There were seven who came to identify themselves with the church all of whom were adults, and such as will mean much added strength to the little body of believers at that place. One came by relation, two from the United Brethren's and four made confession for the first time.

This work has been supported in part by the State Mission Board in years past and is now bearing very definite fruit as a result of the efforts and help of other years. With their neat, comfortable building recently dedicated, their splendid consecrated membership and with Brother John Clark as their hustling pastor, I see no reason why they should not advance from victory to victory.

We were very ably assisted in this effort by Brother Carroll Whitmer of North Liberty, as song leader. His work was very appreciative. We have a lingering suspicion that he could be used to a very great advantage in the Brethren church and he ought to be kept busy.

Pastors or evangelists wishing a good song leader for their meetings this fall would do well to write him. I am sure he will make good.

DALLAS CENTER, IOWA

We are glad to report a glorious triumph at this place on Easter Sunday. The day began with a sunrise prayer meeting attended by a goodly number of our brethren. The attendance at Sunday school was a record breaker. We set what we considered a high standard for our Easter offering and felt somewhat anxious, we admit, as to the outcome, but when the final count is made we will have one dollar for every member of the church to send in for foreign missions. We are delighted with this great increase over what we have ever done here before and we are looking forward with confidence toward a continual progress in the work of the Lord.

The evening services were in charge of the congregation, consisting of music and recitations by the Sunday school. We have not had a more interesting and helpful service of this nature for a long time and much credit is due the faithful ones who trained the children and also to those who prepared the musical part of the program.

We are living in such a wonderful time that it seems impossible to be contented with present achievements, so we are planning to do more and better in the future. We hope to see the spirit of fraternity increase among our brethren and make greater strides in the extension of the apostolic doctrines. In other words, the pastor of this church would suggest that we employ team work and self-crucifixion in our Great Four Year Program.

May the vision of our people be greater and our efforts doubled for the work of making the Brethren church a power for good.

R. F. PORTE.

FLORA, INDIANA

As a report from the Flora church has not been given for some time such might be in order. We are glad to say that there are instances when silence does not mean inactivity, for, although a report has not been formulated we have been "on the job." Since the "flu" our Sunday school has been continually on the gain. January first, we established the slogan "200 in Sunday School by June First," and we are confident we will reach the goal, as we are already past the 175 mark now. Our plan for work has been a more efficient organization, better prepared and equipped teachers and officers, gaining of the absentees and a closer union of the Sunday school and church efforts.

We must say that it was through the continual effort of our superintendent, Brother Whetstone that the plan was inaugurated and is being carried to a success. I express the sentiment of the whole church when I say there are doubtless superintendents as good but none better than our own Brother Whetstone.

We believe the Flora church is taking on the practical missionary aspect. The Easter offering for foreign missions was $276.40, or an average of $1.25 per member. There is a deep interest in the home mission work since some of our own number have been on the field.

It is especially pleasing for us to say, that this church has responded on several previous occasions to the Armenian and Syrian Relief.

On the evening of March 23rd, the Young Men's Sunday school class gave an illustrated lecture on "The Glory and Suffering of Armenia." An offering of $139.00 was lifted for the sufferers. The lecture has been given at other points in the county. (Anyone wishing to give this lecture can secure the slides from Alouzo E. Wilson, 106 N. La Salle St., Chicago).

Since our last report there has been one accession to the church. On April 6th, all the churches in Flora observed "Go-To-Church Sunday" and reports show that more people were in our churches on that day than ever before on one time.

The local district Sunday school convention was held in our church on March 27, and we are planning for the Carroll County Sunday School convention will convene with us May 19-20. We are looking forward to a great convention.

We find in our pastor, Brother Henderson, a fine man, an excellent speaker, and man of God lending every possible aid for the advancement of the Cause. Brother Henderson's enthusiasm and untiring efforts in behalf of the Sunday school and prayer meeting has caused both to take on new life.

With conditions as they are, with prospects bright and with the Lord's blessing on our services, we can expect great things for his cause. RUSSEL D. BARNARD.

NORTH LIBERTY, INDIANA

We have nothing startling to report from our home field. Things are moving along harmoniously in every way, with good attendance and interest in all our services. The various auxiliaries of the church are busy seeking to reach the various goals assigned them. We have reached every one thus far in the year relating to finances, going over nicely for foreign missions on Easter Sunday. At our April business meeting the pastor was asked to continue his labors another year at a substantial increase in salary. We have decided to continue the work and are trusting for grace to carry it forward in a way that will be pleasing to him. May his kingdom come and his will soon be done on earth as in heaven. C. C. GRISSO.

TIOSA, INDIANA

Again I come with a small message and a report for the work which I have tried to do since we last met at Conference. So far the year has been a good year. We have not held any revival at either place since Conference. But if the Lord be willing, we will begin a series of meetings at the Tiosa church, the 18th of May and at the close of this meeting we will have our communion services. We will have communion services at the New Paris church on May 11. We give an invitation to all of like faith and request your presence at these services if possible. Our churches are growing at both places and we hope that they will do so more in the future than in the past. It is a great pleasure to work with people that love the Lord and his cause, but when you run up against a person that does not, then the tide changes. Don't think it is all sunshine and smiles here for the one that tries you in your faith is among us here. And while we find many that do love Jesus, we find a few that are over the fence. "By their fruits ye shall know them" saith the word. We are having the largest Sunday school at Tiosa, since I have been on the field, but the pastor doesn't claim the praise, but places it on the good superintendent Brother Charles Riddle. I am glad to see our young people get under the church and push her to the front. Then at New Paris, our fine superintendent, Brother Everett Miller is leading the people in the right way. May God bless all these that have his cause at heart.

ORA E. OXLEY, Pastor.

BURLINGTON AND DARWIN CHURCHES

Burlington.—The work here is showing the results of a better co-operation on the part of the membership in attendance at the services. It is also encouraging the way plans are being made for larger work. They will be reported later.

The Sunday school is making a fine record in its attendance under the present conditions and the S. S. C. E. has organized and will try to carry out the work of the organization and fill its place on the Four Year Program.

While the membership is rallying to a larger attendance they are also getting a vision of their opportunities and during the last month have not only done their part in the meeting of all home obligations, but have made a large offering for Armenian Relief and have made good in their foreign mission offering. Brother Barnard and Brother Eaton of the Flora congregation gave an illustrated lecture in the interest of the Armenian Relief work, and the response of our own people amounted to about 125 dollars, and the lecture and pictures were greatly appreciated because of their educational value. On the Sunday following Easter we arranged for our foreign mission offering which will show the disposition of our people by the way of one hundred dollars. Therefore with the various handicaps of the past our brethren are rallying to a larger work so that we will not have to be ashamed, and to God our heavenly Father and Jesus Christ his Son and to the Holy Spirit, we give the praise.

Darwin.—This church has in many ways proved itself in the past and while many a difficulty in days past has befallen this rural work, we are glad to see the way in which old things are passing away and all things are becoming new, brightening up in the activities so that this little band will not need to fear nor be ashamed of the way in which they are responding in various ways to the enlarging of the Master's work.

While our revival effort was not crowned with wonderful success as regards visible results yet we are assured that the Brethren and the community appreciate in a larger way the work that is theirs to do, for the services have been well attended and larger things are being planned in the interests of the church and the community.

On Easter Sunday there were many things to interfere with the plans of putting on a program in the evening, and we planned to use the morning for the program that had been arranged and everything went off in fine shape for the attendance was large considering, and each one was given an opportunity to do something for the Master, if not to make an audible response, there was the opportunity to give of substance and prayer for the work and workers on our foreign field. The response given to the call made up our quota to foreign missions. We also made a subscription to meet the necessary expense of putting a new roof on the church, and we are sure that the brethren will rejoice to know that this little faithful band gave for these two calls the amounts of $31.50 for foreign missions and $150.00 for the new roof.

The Brethren church is made up entirely of farmers living round about Darwin. There are some people living there who never go to church anywhere. But they all believed the Brethren church should be kept up and so responded nobly. We are sure that God in his infinite way will bless their efforts and crown them with victory in his name. To him be all glory and praise.

Now, it might be interesting to know that these two churches are not made up of wealthy members, nor are they large in numbers. A very careful and truthful estimate is 150 active members, and some of these are not over-zealous.

Therefore in proportion to their numerical strength some of our larger churches are put to shame by their endeavors.

Let us as Brethren remember the need of a greater fellowship in Christ's name and see the value of these rural and smaller fields and be men and women of conquering faith. Let us "give honor to whom honor is due." Pray for us and our work, brethren.

W. T. LYTLE.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

The mercury has finally gone beyond the coveted mark of one hundred thousand dollars. This means the birth of a fact which is both inspiring and significant. After the long series of struggles of a financial character through which Ashland College has passed during the years of her history it is certainly inspiring, it is more, it is glorious to know that not only is she absolutely free from debt but that she also has back of her more than one hundred thousand dollars of permanent endowment. I well recall the supreme moment in National Conference when Brother Jacob C. Cassel burned the mortgage and we knew that the debt was paid. I also well recall how that the audience sang "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" with more feeling and emotion than I had ever heard it sung before, or have heard it sung since. It meant that a long, hard, testing struggle was over and that a better day had dawned. And I believe since we sang "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" when the debt was paid, we would sing it again if we were all together, over the fact that the hundred thousand dollar mark has been reached in the campaign for permanent endowment. After all it is indeed an inspiring, a glorious fact, and no one can by any means feel as good over it as the campaign secretary himself. I am sure you will all consent that he knows better how it happened than anyone else. But the secretary desires to say before he goes farther that in considering the achievement there comes vividly before his mind a great list of noble, faithful pastors, and thousands of true, loyal laymen who deserve very, very much of the credit for making possible this splendid result. And nothing could give the secretary more joy than just the privilege of saying to all of those pastors and laymen one by one, "Thank you, and God bless you."

Now Watch the Illiokota District Raise the Mercury

COLLEGE

I said that the fact that we have reached the hundred thousand dollar mark is also significant—I count it as significant as it is inspiring. It is significant in that it shows beyond any possible doubt that the Brethren church has seriously and with real determination set herself to the task of properly endowing her only college. The undertaking is by no means yet completed. There are yet whole states and districts to be canvassed, and in those states and districts there are thousands of good people who will not feel right until they too have had the privilege of showing their loyalty to our school and their faith in our future as a denomination by investing in a substantial manner in the cause of permanent endowment. But it seems to me the greatest significance consists in this that only God himself knows the great good that will be accomplished in the unborn years of the future as this first hundred thousand dollars, and then, let us hope, a second hundred thousand, and ultimately a third hundred thousand, is set to work earning interest year after year which will go to the support of an institution which stands for the raising up of Christian workers and the training of heralds of the Cross. I say only God himself knows how far-reaching is the result of the work we are doing these days, and we may indeed feel that what has been done is significant.

I said last week that Waterloo was the first church in Illiokota to be canvassed and Hudson the second. To Hudson came the privilege of pushing the mercury out over the top. The Hudson church is not one of the larger congregations of the Illiokota district, but it has in it some as loyal and faithful people as are to be found anywhere. This church has been pastorless for several months; but the work of the Sunday school is being kept up under the leadership of Mrs. Web Shank as superintendent and Brother H. R. Hollis as assistant. The work of the Young Peoples' society is also seemingly in a prosperous condition. I preached at Hudson ten times, but exceedingly bad weather part of the time, also bad roads, made impossible a good attendance. However we feel that some good was accomplished even at that. We got busy and found ten people to baptize—mostly splendid boys and girls and young people. It was a joy to baptize this fine group and take them into fellowship with the church. And we had a communion service the last night I was there.

The result at Hudson was not what it would have been under different conditions. But even at that Hudson has always had some warm friends for the college and she will continue to have. We raised approximately $1700 while there, but when the returns are all in Hudson will go beyond $2,000.

I am glad to say that if present pains carry Hudson will soon have a pastor—a young man graduating from the college this spring. And I have no doubt at all the young man in mind will give this people earnest service. Hudson is needing badly just the type of man I believe they are getting and I covet for the Hudson people renewed courage and determination to go forward and claim the rich heritage that belongs to them in their field. For the kind hospitality extended to me in the Shank, Hollis, Waters, Johnson, Strayer, Brandhorst, Mosley, Smith, and Gutnecht homes I shall always be grateful.

Next week there shall appear under Campaign Notes an announcement of our further plans for the campaign, also an announcement from our business manager, Brother A. C. Hendrickson. I trust all may be looking for these announcements.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

IN THE SHADOW

RIDENOUR—Levi Gilbert Ridenour, aged 58 years, 10 months and 20 days, died on March the 14th at the family residence at Burlington, where he had been a barber for many years. He leaves a widow and three step-sons. The deceased was a member of the Christian church, and the funeral was conducted by the writer at the Christian church March 16, and the interment was made Monday in the Burlington cemetery. W. T. LYTLE.

RODKEY—Chalmers N. Rodkey, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Rodkey, died at the family residence on March 23rd, at the early age of 25 years. The funeral was conducted by the writer at the home, northeast of Burlington, and the burial was made in the Bell cemetery, March 25. W. T. LYTLE.

TANSEY—Mrs. Clarence Tansey, wife of Clarence Tansey and the mother of five children died, April 4. The funeral was conducted by the writer at the home on April 6. The deceased was forty years of age and a member of the Methodist church. Burial was made in the Rossville cemetery. W. T. LYTLE.

HUFFORD—David Hufford, an old resident of Carroll county and a life-time resident of the vicinity of near Rossville, died at his home within a very few feet of the place where he was born 81 years ago. He was a member of the old Mt. Pleasant church. The funeral was conducted by the writer (who conducted the wife's funeral a little more than a year ago) on April 8th at the family residence. The interment was made in the family cemetery where at least the two generations are laid away. W. T. LYTLE.

SWIHART—Elias Swihart, son of Elder David and Magdalene Swihart, was born August 8, 1858, and departed this life at his home near Roann, Indiana, April 23, 1919, aged 60 years, 8 months and 15 days. Brother Swihart united with the Roann Brethren church November 8, 1908 in which faith he lived a consistent Christian life until his death. He leaves to mourn their loss a faithful wife, Mrs. Verna Sutters, one son, Charles Swihart and three grandchildren. In the death of Brother Swihart the community in which he lived sustains an inestimable loss. He was a good neighbor, a helpful counselor and a friend to all who knew him. May God bless and comfort the family in their bereavement. Funeral services from the Roann Brethren church by the writer, assisted by the pastor, Brother Willis E. Ronk. H. H. WOLFORD.

MECHLING—Margaret, daughter of Henry and Mirare Ritzius, was born in Miami county, Indiana, October 14, 1854, and departed this life April 30, 1919, at the age of 64 years, 6 months and 16 days. At the age of 10 years she moved with her parents to Marshall county, Indiana, and has been a resident of this part of the state until the enemy death claimed her. On the 12th day of October, 1873, she was united in marriage to Isaac Mechling. To this union were born two daughters, namely, Della, who at the age of one year and four months went to wait for mother over there. The other daughter, Mrs. Nora Leedy who lives near her parents and was at the bedside of mother during her long suffering hours, until death claimed her. Sister Mechning was a member of the Brethren church at Tiosa, Indiana, having united with that church about 24 years ago. She lived in the faith until the last. In February she requested her pastor to anoint her which he did and at that time she said she was at peace with her God and fellow-men. For several years she had been numbered with those that are afflicted and the past six months she had suffered very greatly. During this time she never murmured and was always kind to her family and those she came in contact with. The last few days of her life she was permitted to see the City that John tells about and her only desire was to obtain admission to it. She leaves to mourn their loss, a companion, one daughter, one grandson, one sister, Mrs. Caroline Cody of Logansport, Indiana, and one brother, Noah Ritzius of Dakota and a host of friends. Funeral services conducted by the writer. ORA E. OXLEY.

KENTUCKY CALL

A dormitory matron and a teacher are needed for work at Riverside the coming year. Our prayer is that the Lord may definitely call those qualified for this work, that his work may not lag for want of help. May there please be responses quickly. Write the undersigned.

WHOLE GOSPEL MISSION

We are very busy in a short meeting here. We will report fuller later. We had a splendid meeting in Allentown, though it was very short, only ten days. I suppose Brother DeLozier will give a detailed report. We had about twenty confessions, but some were too young to be baptized. Nearly all of our Brethren children are members of the church. I found the Allentown church in better condition than it has ever been before. Their finances are in good shape and the membership is loyal to the Brethren cause. Brother DeLozier is universally loved and is a clean, straight-forward, loyal Christian. I think this was the best meeting we have ever held in Allentown. It was a great pity that I was limited on account of our own meeting here. Brother Bauman preached his first sermon last night to a good congregation and he was at his best. Hope to have a good report later.

NAMPA, IDAHO

Editor Evangelist, Dear Brother:

It has been some time since you have heard from this part of Idaho, but wish to say that though few in number, we feel that we are progressing slowly. May the fourth we held our semi-annual love-feast which was enjoyed by fourteen members. It surely was a feast to the soul. Two of the communicants traveled two hundred miles to attend the services. Our Easter offering was taken at this meeting and it amounted to $15.00, which was forwarded to Brother Bauman.

J. C. NEHER, Pastor.

Communion Notices

The Fairview Brethren church of Washington C. H., will hold their spring communion service, May twenty-fifth, at four P. M. All of like faith are cordially invited to participate in this service with us.

Business Manager's Corner

SHORT AND SWEET

This will be the nature of our contribution to this corner this week. Last week we said nothing for the simple reason we had nothing to say, and I never did believe in trying to talk when I had nothing to say. That is why, in my early ministry, I was sometimes criticised for preaching such short sermons, but after twenty-five years' experience and practice that criticism has become obsolete; yet there are times when such criticism would really be a compliment.

But first of all this week I want to apologize to Brother P. M. Fisher, for trying to make Brother Ditch wear his shoes a few weeks ago. Not that I think Brother Fisher's feet are so small Brother Ditch couldn't do it; but because both the good Brethren live at Mexico, Indiana, and send in their reports from there, when the subscription list from the New Enterprise church came in, mailed from Mexico, in some manner it was associated with Brother Ditch and he got the credit for it when the glory belongs to Brother Fisher who is pastor of the New Enterprise church. Well, I think I can conscientiously say all the nice things about Brother Fisher that I said about Brother Ditch, so if they will call it even and forgive me I will try not to let it happen again. Of course one can see that I am not an expert at making apologies, but I am sure these Brethren will understand and that it will be all right with them.

SECONDLY

We have another brand new church to add to the Evangelist Honor Roll this week, and we are mighty glad to make mention of it and to welcome to our list the Cerro Gordo, Illinois, church. A little more than fifteen years ago we had the happy privilege of leading these people through a splendid evangelistic campaign, and though we have never been permitted to visit the church since we still remember many of the good families we met there more than fifteen years ago, and we are glad to have them become members of our large and ever increasing Evangelist family.

The Cerro Gordo list was increased a little more than FOUR HUNDRED percent by this effort, and their pastor, D. A. C. Teeter, is greatly elated over the success of his labors. He said they said, "It can't be did," but he did it, and we rejoice with him. Brother Teeter used to call himself some kind of a cousin of ours, but because of that extra supply of letters at the front end of his name we were not sure about it, but now we will consider him any kind of a cousin he pleases to call himself, even though his name might be "HimelSmith" instead of Teeter.

But this achievement only goes to show that "where there is a will, there is a way," and what we need now above everything else is more "wills to do."

This week we are printing a few more than FORTY NINE HUNDRED copies of the Evangelist, and we are so near to the goal of FIVE THOUSAND that I will promise, and I have the consent of Brother Baer, to run the picture of the pastor of the church that makes it necessary for us to print the five thousand copies, on the front page of the Evangelist. Now is your opportunity brethren. Who will do it?

R. R. TEETER,
Business Manager.

THE IDEAL AMBASSADOR

"He held the lamp each Sabbath day,
So low that none could miss the way,
And yet so high to bring in sight
That picture fair of Christ the Light,
That, gazing up, the lamp between,
The hand that held it was not seen.

"He held the pitcher, stooping low,
The lips of little ones below;
Then raised it to the weary saint,
And bade him drink when sick and faint.
Then drank; the pitcher them between,
The hand that held it was not seen

"He blew the trumpet, soft and clear,
That trembling sinners need not fear,
And then with louder notes and bold,
To storm the walls of Satan's hold;
The trumpet coming thus between,
The hand that held it was not seen.

"And when our Captain says, 'Well done!
Thou good and faithful servant, come!
Lay down the pitcher and the lamp;
Lay down the trumpet, leave the camp,'
Thy weary hands will then be seen Clasped in His pierced ones, naught between."

The Abiding Problem of Relative Values

What ought to be done and what ought to be left undone is the most vital and abiding problem of life's everyday. How may one decide rightly what he should do? What principle, if any, will guide him? Every serious-minded, conscientious person is continually faced with that problem. Only the conscientious are thus troubled; the idle fritterers of time, who have no aim and live but for today, are not. But a great host of people are more or less conscientious in their expenditure of time and energy. They are seriously facing the problem, asking, What ought I to do today or in this situation? It is a hopeful attitude, for it may make all the difference between failure and success, between disappointment and realization, or between a life of passing show and one of abiding achievements.

The solution to the problem is not far to seek; in fact, it is easier to discover the principle than to apply it. The principle that will give the solution to the problem as it daily arises, is the proper estimation of the relative values of things. What ought to be done finds its answer in a decision as to which of the things presenting themselves to be done is most important, or most worth-while, or most permanently profitable. Any serious minded person will choose the thing of greater value in preference to that of less value, if the relative values are apparent. But people fail in getting a proper or correct estimation of the relative values of things. Values are estimated too often from the standpoint of temporary needs, or impulse or personal preference. Even when inspired by serious purpose, the things that will most permanently contribute to the desired end are often undervalued, while other things of a more passing value are prized highly and given much attention.

A few practical examples will help to clarify the matter and impress more strongly the point.

There are many home-makers who fret about the many things of the home, its cleanliness, its order and arrangement but have very little, if any, time to sit at the feet of Jesus and to think great thoughts. They are over-anxious about cooking and serving, but their own souls are allowed to go unserved and un nourished. Blessings on the women who look well to the ways of their homes, whose care makes the home attractive and whose culinary skill is able to satisfy the fastidious tastes of men. But she who is so much concerned about the many little details of her household and is so particular even to the point of being finical about having every speck of dust removed, every piece of furniture placed exactly on the proper spot and every piece of linen always spotlessly white, so that there is not a minute for quiet meditation and prayer, for Bible reading and the communion with great souls in literature is neglecting her own soul's welfare and failing to take account of that which is most important. She is failing to value aright the higher things of life who worries and frets over the many incidentals while the really worth-while things are allowed to pass without attention.

There are those who fritter away time on shallow pleasures, parties, receptions, balls, clubs and in all manner of frivolous ways, while the things of abiding worth pass without a thought. "She (or he) that giveth herself to pleasure is dead while she liveth." One need not be out of touch with all forms of pleasure whatsoever. Our Lord was not an ascetic; he enjoyed a reasonable amount of innocent social functions. But these were only means of recreation, only as ballast to keep life in its proper balance, only toning to keep the life heartily human and in sympathy with his fellowmen. But he who finds time only or primarily for movie shows, senseless novels, card parties, joy-rides and banquets has no true sense of the relative values of things. It would be as reasonable for a pastry cook to put only spice in a pie as for a human being whom God has endowed with the power of appreciation for the abiding things of life to seek to nourish his soul only on superficial pleasures. Life cannot maintain its vitality and virility on such things; it will become itself a passing shadow.

Moreover the proper conception of the relative values of things will often aid in deciding rightly whether to indulge at all in this or that pleasure or amusement. Decisions affecting certain indulgences are hard to make until those indulgences are placed in the scales of relative values. Many a decision has been rightly made and many an indulgence has been refused because when weighed in the scales of relative values another course of action appeared far more valuable and worth-while. Life would be more seriously spent and there would be fewer things to regret if such questions as these were often asked: "Is this thing worth while?" "Is it the best way of spending time and energy?" "What is the most important and profitable thing to do under the circumstances?" How worthy and truly noble life would become if such an attitude were adopted.

There are those who surrender themselves to business and money-getting and leave the home and the church with little or no thought or concern. Life and everything that enters into it is measured by the dollar sign. That which has no readily computed commercial value receives no serious attention. Only that which contributes directly to the already accumulated wealth is worthy of consideration. Life is one great business enterprise. How can one attend seriously to anything that does not bring gain without wasting time and talents? That is the attitude of the man engrossed in the money-making business. Money bears the highest value in his estimation of all things else. What if he should get a vision of the eternal values of things! What a change would take place in his conception of relative values! How he would change the emphasis of his life! The home would stand out prominently, far above all business and the church would rise to the place of supreme importance, as deserving of the most serious attention and earnest effort. Money-making would no longer be a worthy end; it would be engaged in only as a means of promoting far nobler and more abiding ends. If all men only had a true conception of relative values, there would be no reference to the "almighty dollar" nor to the proverbial saying that "Money talks."

Then again there are those seeking position and popularity and struggling for leadership and authority for the sake of the glory and power they secure. They forget about love and service and sympathy. Ambition for high station is the over-mastering elements of life for one. To exercise authority over others is another's chief aim. To be the idol of the popular social set is the thing that stands big in another's eye. But if these puny aims could be fairly weighed in the balances of true relative values, how insignificant they would appear beside the things of great price. Then the Savior's words would be understood: "He that would be greatest, let

"You men who preach to us on Sunday do not realize the power you possess nor appreciate the influence you are able to wield. The spirit of church loyalty is tremendous, and the readiness with which a congregation will rally to the support of a brave pastor has been demonstrated over and over again."

No one will doubt that there are things "doing" at Garwin, Iowa, after reading Brother Ankrum's report. And in the midst of the "doings," things are being accomplished too. We will look for an early report of the evangelistic meeting now in progress, under the leadership of Brother Coleman of Leon, Iowa.

Brother S. P. Fogle who lives in Washington, D. C., is pastor of the Hammer church in Franklin, West Virginia. He recently made a pastoral visit to his far distant charge and baptized a number of converts, besides holding communion service for them. The Hammer people are loyal to the foreign mission interests.

Our college correspondent favors us with another edition of "Ashland College Notes" which he says may be the last for awhile. They are always interesting and the brotherhood is always concerned about the happenings on College Hill. Brother J. A. Garber, secretary of the Alumni Association, also gives a schedule of the events of commencement week.

You will not fail to notice the splendid program of the wide-awake Endeavorers and Sunday school workers of Southern Indiana. The convention is to be held in the Denver church. We shall welcome a brief and spicy report of the convention. Brother Myers gives some directions for reaching Denver. Doubtless there will be a large attendance.

Brother Carpenter has a whole basket of news on the "Mission" page this week. There are some important calls in the interest of the Kentucky work. Don't fail to read every word. Next week, we will give you a report from the pen of Brother E. M. Cobb, who, in company with Brethren Bowman of Dayton and Carpenter, recently visited the Kentucky mission field.

A word of introduction may not be out of place. Brother T. Darley Allen who comes to us with his second contribution, recently united with the Ashland Brethren church. He is a "proof-reader" on one of the large daily papers of Cleveland, Ohio. He gives evidence of being a good and worthy spirited writer. In this way he seeks to serve his church. You are welcome, Brother Allen.

The Third Brethren church of Philadelphia, experienced showers of refreshing in an evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Brother L. S. Bauman. A goodly number of confessions were received most of which will be added to the church. Brother Roberts adds that their foreign mission offering amounts to an average of $3.50 per member, a most commendable offering indeed.

Brother Bame is back on the Four Year Program page with a message for Brethren Day. He is doing a splendid service for the church in keeping that page alive and we wish to assure him that the people appreciate his messages and admonitions on the various phases of the Four Year Program. We hope his colleagues will help him to keep the page bristling through the summer as they have through the winter and spring.

Sunday, May 4th, was a big day for our Kentucky mission points. Read Brother Drushal's report and see how vigorously they are carrying the battle against the enemy in those needy mountain districts. Brethren Drushal and Cook are tireless workers, as are also all their co-workers. Lost Creek while being a mission is being given a missionary vision; they are ambitious to be represented in the foreign lands, and under God, we shall look for the day when they shall be.

One of the best little reports we have received for some time comes to us from Brother Leatherman, who is pastor of the Ripon, West Colony and Lathrop, California, churches. The reason we say it is one of the best is because it is written briefly and to the point; every word is news. Brother Leatherman is a very busy man in his three-fold pastorate. He closes with a sentence that should be noted by all: "We have a hard work here, but it is the Lords', and we like it." That is about as fine a thing as we have read for some time.

Brother Ashman, of the Sunnyside, Washington, church gives us an interesting report in this issue. He speaks of the splendid Easter offering, and when you read it you will agree that it was a big one. But just think, they are setting their hearts on first place next year. That is as big an ambition as it is worthy. Long Beach, look out. But all the churches are being awakened to a missionary spirit and to a vision of giving such as they have never before had. Brother Ashman also speaks of having shared the blessings of Brother Paul Miller's ministry both in affliction and in soul-winning. May the Lord bless Brother and Sister Ashman with his comforting presence because of their recent loss of a little one.

We feel sure the entire brotherhood is rejoicing over the success of the endowment campaign thus far and all will endorse the plans of the campaign secretary and his counsellors in deciding to complete the canvass of the brotherhood, though the $100,000 has been raised. Another thing all are agreed upon, and that is that the $100,000 is not enough to adequately endow our college. They are right in placing it at $200,000, and when that is raised it ought to be doubled again. We are glad for a word from the business manager of Ashland College, Brother Hendrickson, who is Brother Beachler's "home-base" man. He is a very faithful and efficient servant and deserves the hearty co-operation and prompt response of all who have business obligations with the college. The future of our college never looked brighter than it does now. With such efficient financial managers at the helm as Beachler and Hendrickson, and such a worthy and wise school manager at its head as President-elect Jacobs is, Ashland College seems certain of performing a greater service for the church and for the larger Kingdom's interests than it has ever performed before.

Children's Exercise for Brethren Day

B stands for BIBLE, our only church creed;
For faith and for life 'tis all that we need.
R means REPENTANCE, the first word we preach;
'Tis the message that's needed by all we may reach.
E means EVANGEL—good news to all men;
Go tell it, said Jesus, the world lies in sin.
T stands for TRIUNE, the immersion we use;
The words taught by Jesus, we do not refuse.
H stands for HANDS of prayer on the head;
For power and for healing as the Word hath said.
R stands for RITES, feetwashing and feast;
Obeying in spirit, our lives are increased.
E means EUCHARIST—the bread and the cup;
We think of Christ's death where'er we sup.
N stands for NAME, far above every name;
'Tis Jesus our Savior, forever the same.

ALL— We are Brethren children true,
Walking where our Master trod.
What it tells us we will do,
And we love the word of God.

If you like our little band
And would Jesus' words obey,
Come, and in his name we'll stand
Staunch and true to him alway.

BRETHREN DAY

"Great events cast their shadows before them," it has been said. This is a shadow. Look for the event. The next big day in our Program is Brethren Day. We may have done well in keeping the history of the church before the people, but this is a day when, if you have given all you know about the church, you can give it over with a good reason because you are asked to do so by the Conference. There are many reasons why we should, and I know of no reason why we should not.

Two Hundred Years of History

Whatever may have been said in mockery and effrontery about the religion of the Dunkers, it remains the fact that they have a history of 200 years. That spells vitality and strength. Nothing can live so long unless it has an appeal; unless it has vigor and vitality; unless it has able advocates and sacrificing defenders. In those 200 years many experiments have been tried and many of them have failed. Some have succeeded. Larger denominations have sprung up in the interim; that they shall live as long or grow as sure and solidly, is to be forecasted by finding whether they have more of the truth. Or, that we shall out-run them in the future depends on the same measure being laid upon us. God does not die; neither the cause that clings close to him.

Two Hundred Thousand Adherents

In two hundred years of history, from a position of poverty and a place of leadership the Dunker Fraternities have but 200,000 members. That is not a rapid growth. But they have not been as good at conserving as they might have been. Quality often is preferred to quantity. I am convinced that it has been so with the Dunkers. They have expelled from their communion a lot of people who still live who have been able and worthy people and whom they would gladly have among them now, under different conditions and with a different outlook. Their policies have not always been perfect and the wonderful growth out of a peculiar past that made them the jest of many a person and even many a preacher has placed them where the growth may be measured only by the amount of energy and money applied.

The Best and Biggest

Today, it can be said in many a place, that the Brethren people have the most active, faithful and permanent church. Today, it can be said in many a place that the Brethren is the fastest growing of all the churches in the town. Once an almost exclusive agricultural people, it can now be said that the city is no drawback to the development of a Brethren church. Some of the world's worst and many of the world's best live in the city. While in the city evil has its most powerful appeal. It is here that the battle makes the greatest heroes.

The Purest and Holiest

While I would not be so bold as to make the claim that the Dunker people are the purest and holiest, I do claim that the man who obeys most nearly all the demands of Jesus Christ will be so. Now, doctrinally, the Dunker program ought to give that opportunity. They claim to obey all; I know that it is an empty claim, for "all come short of the glory of God;" but with a church practice that asks for a more complete surrender of self and offers an opportunity to obey literally every command of the Master, we ought to develop the finest character the world is able to produce. If we do not, it is not the fault of the doctrine or the sacraments of the church but of the practitioners who do not get all there is for them in that obedience, or perhaps who fail to obey as they should.

What Makes It Worth While

I have a great admiration for the Dunker character. I do believe many things about the strength of it that I do not put on paper. I do feel that they have exercised a tremendous influence in the history of our country. I am as sure as I live that their influence for good can never be measured by their numbers nor by the number of their churches. . . . Thousands of Christians of this country have a stronger faith in the Bible and thousands of them have received the correct baptism and a fuller faith in the Lordship of the Christ for what they have seen and heard from the life and pulpit of the Brethren. Great workers in many a church not our own have had their faith rocked in the Dunker cradle. What has been wrought with the world accepting by faith at least—whether it be worked out practically at once or not—the great teachings of the Dunker fraternity against war, rum and slavery, the Brethren may well ask; "while we do not claim all the credit of attaining these things, we may easily claim the leadership in each one of them." Brethren Day will not do its part well unless it lays claim to all that is hers.

The Responsibility

The responsibility then is to "keep it up." If great good has come to ourselves—good that will never be appreciated till we reach the Day of Rewards—if great good has come to the world as a result, how shall we keep it going? Now there is but one answer. Men do not reach different ends traveling the same roads. Neither do men reach the same end traveling different roads. We must go the same way and magnify the same Name and keep to the same faith if we shall continue to develop the same character. But the age is different. The same methods of evangelization-propagation—will not do. In a day when there were no newspapers, no advertisements, no billboards; in a time when the mails were not filled with propaganda of a thousand kinds; in a time when other churches were not making drives for millions for the promulgation of their faith, migration was a method of evangelization. Not so, now. The world is small now. Comparatively poor people can now travel across the continent in a few days. We must preach the same Christ; we must hold up the same "whole Bible"; we must urge with the same earnest, vehement vigilance, obedience to the commands of the Christ; but Brethren Day ought to tell us and teach us that we must use different methods of evangelization or we shall not do as well as did our forefathers.

Our Drive

It seems fashionable now, since we have had so many "drives" for funds for the government, for churches to have "drives" for millions, also. Let us thank God again, that we are ahead. Again, that our drive is not alone for millions of money, but that we are out for just what Brethren Day stands for, for a new sense of what it means to be born and bred a Dunker. Look back at your Four Year Program once more and see what a splendid drive we had organized a year before the "drive" business was the style and then pledge that our generation shall in no wise fail to meet the test of its time than did the men of the last two hundred years. If there is a better program for us than the Four Year one, we may make it as we go on, as we are already doing in college endowment and foreign missions. If we be truly anxious for the Kingdom, we shall do as well with every one of the not fourteen points—SIXTEEN GOALS OF our wonderful PROGRAM OF ADVANCEMENT. BAME.

GENERAL ARTICLES

My Apologia. By Dr. J. L. Gillin

I regret more than I can say that my recent article in the EVANGELIST should have been capable of the misunderstanding which it seems to have inspired. Certainly I had no wish to convey the ideas which Brother Bame finds in the article. I certainly did not wish to indicate that I do not believe in individual salvation, or do not favor the efforts of the church for the salvation of the individual. Nor did I intend to approve all the ideas in Lindsey's article. Surely one may be permitted to select one idea from an article without endorsing thereby everything the writer says. What I was pleading for was a balanced emphasis. Believing the salvation of the individual was being stressed to the neglect of the application of the Gospel to social conditions I emphasized the latter. I supposed, of course, that it would be understood that only through individuals can the Gospel be applied to social conditions.

However, it must be pointed out that the "conversion" of a man to Christianity in order that he may be saved from eternal punishment himself is one thing, and that the "conversion" of a man to Christianity not only for the purpose of providing himself escape from hell and access to heaven, but also that he may give himself devotedly to applying the principles of Jesus to his own relations to other men and to making conditions better in society is quite another thing. The one is essentially selfish, the other is unselfish. I believe in both the salvation of the individual and the salvation of society by faith in Jesus Christ. The faith that can redeem the individual drunkard from his fetters can also redeem a complaisant society from toleration of the saloon. The faith which redeems the Magdalene from the hell of a mis-spent life can and should redeem the social conceptions of our day that now tolerate the double standard of sex morality and still permits public prostitution. Now, Brethren, is it clear what I mean when I say "social salvation"?

One thing I should like to add. Will not my brethren please be charitable enough to believe that what I write for the EVANGELIST is not written for spite or out of perversity of intention. I want to write, when I have time to write at all, things that will edify and that will make my readers think. I may fail to make things as clear as I should, but why should I be suspected of ulterior motives every time I put pen to paper? However, I can scarcely write an article any more without having some of my brethren jump into print in reply. Once my articles did not excite such disturbance. Ever since the publication of my address as moderator of the Conference at Dayton some of the Brethren have taken me on suspicion. Brethren, have I become your enemy because I have spoken the truth as I saw it?

Will you believe me when I say that I am more interested in the Brethren church today than ever? That I want to see her prosper? That I want her to see a little more of the treasures of the riches of life for her in the gospel of Christ? That I am desirous of having her know the fullness of life and thought that is in Christ Jesus? That I revere the Bible which reveals to us our Father in heaven and our Savior as I never did before? So much do I revere it that I cannot bear to see its scriptures torn from their context and historical setting and twisted about to substantiate a man-made theory, which theory may never have been thought of until centuries after the scripture was written.

Some seem to think that I must be straying from the Brethren faith. So far as God gives me to know my own heart, I can say that I never cherished the historic positions of our church as I do today. When I joined the Brethren church, the slogan, "No creed but the Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible" was a shibboleth of liberty from the bonds of man-made creeds and man-made dogmas.

Every member of the church was free to read the Bible and govern his life according to the light God gave to him concerning it. Now, I am disturbed because in other hands than those who fought the fight for freedom in the early days of the church, this slogan is being used, not in the interests of freedom from theological dogmas, but to bind fetters upon the thought of our people and to bring us all into bondage to "private" interpretations of Scripture. 11 Pet. 1:21.

I had supposed that my devotion to the church through good and evil report ought to be given some weight with my brethren on this point of loyalty to the church. Never before have I cited these facts, and should not now, but for the attitude revealed by some of the things I have heard. For six and a half years after graduation from college I was pastor of one of our churches at the salary of $55 a month and for four and a half years of that time I had a wife dependent on me for support. I do not complain of the salary: I was satisfied with it. Certainly, however, it could not be said that I served the church for gain. When I took this pastorate the Y. M. C. A. offered me a position at $900 a year. After four years in graduate study in Union Theological Seminary and Columbia University I turned down a $2300 position in New York that I might accept a position in our college at Ashland at $900 a year. Again, does this suggest lack of loyalty. For three years I served as president of the College on leave without pay, earning my own living by teaching in another institution, in order that I might finish what I had set out to do—pay off the debt on the College and raise the temporary endowment to $100,000. During this time these objects were accomplished and in addition $11,000 was secured as nest-egg for the permanent endowment. So far as my services were concerned it cost the church not a penny for those three years. Probably that means disloyalty, or else "pride of leadership!"

For two of the years before I left Iowa City I supplied a weak, struggling Brethren church for expenses. Does that suggest disloyalty?

Year by year with many other Brethren I have spent my vacation at Winona at the Conference doing the hardest kind of work for the church. I deserve no credit; it was my duty. What bearing does it have on the matter of loyalty? I have spent time writing for the EVANGELIST which had I used in writing for myself might have contributed something to my standing in my own field of professional work and something to my pocket book. Again, I was only too glad to do it. But it does have a bearing upon this question of loyalty to the church.

These things I have done both when I was in high favor with my brethren and also when I have been in such disfavor that they would not have elected me janitor. I have spoken and written the truth as I have seen it without fear or favor of men, with an eye single to the glory of God and to the welfare of the church. I have tried to be true to the vision God has given me even though for my pains some have said that I was moved by "pride of leadership." This, too, in spite of the fact that there is no gift in the hands of the brotherhood which I crave. I have had them all. Like Paul, "I know both how to be exalted and how to be abased." Yet, I am disloyal, and trying to change the faith of the church!

In fact, I would be disloyal to the church, did I not call in question the emphasis on dogmas and interpretations which are new in the history of the Brethren. I would, in fact, be trying to change the faith of the church if I were not trying to preserve to the church the precious heritage of freedom of thought and freedom from forced assent to theological dogma which our fathers sacrificed so much to win.

I covet for the young men and women of the church and those who come to us from dogma ridden churches that same precious heritage I had when I was taken into the old church at Hudson—liberty to take the precious Bible and find in it the message of God to my soul in every stage of my development, rather than the bondage of man-made interpretations and dogmas, which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear.

Is the much prized liberty of speech and thought of the church to be destroyed now after thirty years of growth and prosperity under that regime? No one is committed to my beliefs because they read them. I read some things in the EVANGELIST which do not edify me; yet they may feed the soul of another. Shall I at once protest because of that? I have no objection to my brethren holding and publishing views which I cannot accept. They may suit the needs of someone else. I have no objection to the publication of many of these dogmas and "private" interpretations to which I refer. The only thing I object to is the tendency to intolerance of other views than those with which one man or set of men in the church hold. That is the dangerous tendency in the Brethren church at the present time. We know what that same intolerant attitude did for the Dunker fraternity in 1881. So far as I can see, that spirit of intolerance is growing among us. And saddest of all, it is intolerance on issues which had no place among the fundamentals on which the Brethren church was founded.

So far has this intolerance gone that it is becoming increasingly difficult for a man who does not happen to agree with the Torrey brand of so-called orthodoxy to hold a pastorate in the Brethren church. It is whispered about that he is "unorthodox," that he is "dangerous," or that he is a "socialist." I should be daring twentieth century persecution for saying these things were I in a position in the church where I could be reached. Even on the boards of the church I am a marked man because I am not complaisant with the methods of modern ecclesiastical autocracy.

The results of such intolerance one can easily guess if he will but open his eyes. Men are not going into the Brethren ministry as we think they should. Is it any wonder?

Where is the liberty wherewith Christ makes us free? Men of independent convictions and vision are hesitating right now whether to continue in the ministry of a church which proclaims with one breath that it has no creed, but in which unless he holds to certain theological dogmas and interpretations of Biblical statements he has no chance of continuance. Our teachers in the College are being cowed by browbeating and threats. The only College of the church is threatened and its faithful teachers threatened unless they stultify themselves and deny themselves liberty of thought and teaching—a most cherished prerogative of even the "godless" universities—and teach only one interpretation of certain Biblical statements, and a science which has been exploded for fifty years. Some of our most promising teaching material in the church the trustees dare not employ. Why? Because they are not loyal to the church? Because they are not scholars? Because they are not apt to teach? No! But because—with shame I say it—because they refuse to subscribe to one type of thought in the church. Because they prefer to discuss a problem from both points of view and help the student to think through the problem for himself.

Is this apotheosis of intolerance and bigotry, of ignorance and glorification thereof in the name of our Holy Book and our Christ and his Gospel—is this the "faith of our fathers" or "the faith once for all delivered unto the saints?" Neither the fathers nor the saints would recognize it, if history has anything to teach. Does this intolerance resemble in any degree the freedom which characterized the early days of the church? Is a man to be under suspicion just because he happens to hold opinions which differ from those of some of his brethren?

Brethren, I plead for the freedom of the Gospel which I have had for thirty years in the Brethren church, and which I hope to see handed down to the coming generations. Are we not large enough to cherish as brethren those who differ from us rather than try to put them outside the pale of brethren by consorious epithets which have no bearing upon Christian character or loyalty to a whole Gospel church?

The Devotional Reading of God's Word. By H. M. Oberholtzer

Although the Bible is the greatest and most widely known book in the world, it is claimed that it is the most neglected. This prevalent neglect is much lamented by all thoughtful Christians. Hundreds of thousands of copies of the Bible are published each year and in the most convenient form. Prices are such that the poorest may be supplied with a copy, and it is generally considered a shame for a home to be without a Bible, even if the people are not Christian. Yet the neglect of the reading of the Bible is appalling. This is probably due, in large part, to the many papers, magazines and books that are available today, and which we are expected to read; and to the great rush of modern life. Doubtless it is also due to the decline of the family altar and of the devotional spirit.

No other reading can take the place of the Bible, no matter how good or how important it may be. The Bible is the best and most important book in the world. Its ideals and principles are unexcelled anywhere in literature. It abundantly meets every need of humanity for instruction in righteousness and true holiness. It has sweet comfort for every human ill. It affords the suggestion and the foundation for the good that may be found anywhere in literature. Though it may be read through and through most thoroughly and again and again, it is ever fresh and affords new thought and new joy every time it is read. Its rich treasures of instruction and comfort are inexhaustible. Surely such a book should be most highly treasured and most carefully and constantly read. We cannot over-emphasize the importance of careful and prayerful reading of the Holy Scriptures. The individual or the nation whose ideals and motives are most thoroughly inspired and directed by the Bible is sure to rise to the highest state of moral and intellectual development.

The Bible deserves more than our highest esteem for its excellent literature, its lofty principles or its moral influence. It is the book of God, revealing his divine will to lost humanity, and it deserves our most sincere reverence, and its sacred pages should be read with deepest devotion. To ignore it, to carelessly neglect it, or to read it in a merely formal and reckless manner, is nothing less than an insult to divine love that gave us the precious book. I wish therefore to plead for a more general, and genuinely devotional, reading of God's word. To this end, I would urge the establishment, or the re-establishment, of the family altar in every Christian home, where it is not already found. Let no one be persuaded that he is so busy that he can find no time for family devotions. Some of the very busiest people are finding time for this most important institution of the home. There is scarcely any excuse whatever for not having it. Where there is a will there is a way. It may require the readjustment of some prevailing customs of the home, but I maintain that every Christian home can and ought to have a family altar. The circumstances of one home may differ from the circumstances of another, but where there is earnest desire and willingness family devotions can be made to fit in somewhere. In some very busy homes it has been found most convenient to have the family devotions in the morning, while all are seated around the breakfast table. Even a brief service of this kind will be found a great blessing. More time and attention should be given, if possible. Both morning and evening is not too often for such devotions. However brief the service, a portion of the Word of God should be read very thoughtfully. How beautiful and inspiring the scene, where the father gathers his family about him and carefully reads and expounds a portion of God's word, and then they all kneel in prayer together. How delightful the memory of such a home. Who can measure the influence of such a custom sincerely followed?

Alas! in too many homes the father is not a Christian, and the devotions and the religious training of the family is left entirely to the direction of the mother. Great is the responsibility of such a mother, but let her meet it bravely, and not fail to sow generously and deep the seed of God's word in the hearts of her children, and, in the heart of her husband, if possible. God's grace will be found sufficient for the task.

I wish also to stress the importance of individual private devotion, for which nothing can fully substitute, not even the family devotions. Although the family devotions may be regularly observed, every Christian ought to spend some time each day alone with God and his holy word. It is in the secret of one's own private communion with God that he is nearest. There should be time in every Christian's life for the daily Quiet Hour, or the Morning Watch. Sometimes Jesus arose "a great while before day" for this purpose. He realized the importance of communion with the Father. How much more important for us.

God speaks to man in various ways, but he speaks most expressly and clearly through his word. God wants to speak to us often, and we should hear him. Can we not pause for at least a few moments each day to carefully consider a portion of God's word? What strength it will give us. David said, "Thy word have I laid up in my heart, that I might not sin against thee." One reason why some are so weak and so soon fall a prey to sin is because they have laid up so little of God's word in their hearts. Did you ever notice how Jesus resisted his temptations with the word of God? He was armed with the sword of the Spirit. Just think also what a fund of Bible knowledge one might soon possess if he would only take ten or fifteen minutes each day for a careful consideration of God's word. Some have read the Bible through in this way. Anyone who has been a Christian for more than a year without at least reading the New Testament through ought to be ashamed of himself. Certain books of the Bible might be selected and studied in this manner with much profit. The daily Bible readings of the Sunday school and of the Christian Endeavor also afford splendid scripture portions for both private and family devotions.

Let us not be carried along too much with the tide of these modern times. Let us stop, look and listen. Let us pause and consider our ways, look into God's word and listen to his voice. Thus we will avoid many a wreck. Let us not become so overwhelmed with the cares and labors of life that we do not take time to attend to the interests of the soul. Let us take time to be holy. "They that wait for Jehovah shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; they shall walk, and not faint."

Present Day Revelations. By T. Darley Allen

A Chicago paper recently announced thirty-two public services to be held by Spiritualists in that city on the following Sunday. Everywhere we find people interested in Spiritualism, and among the many books on the subject constantly appearing some are among the world's best sellers. And the reviews given in magazines and newspapers of Sir Oliver Lodge's work purporting to present the experiences of his son Raymond in the spirit world showed that editors and others who are directing the thought of multitudes believed that a new religion had come better capable of meeting the needs of men and women today than is the old gospel.

Of course all well-informed Christians realize that this expression of belief in editorial circles as to the importance of Spiritualism from the standpoint of religion is based upon a misconception. While the doctrine of immortality is essential to religion, the demonstration of life beyond the grave would not be a demonstration of religion. As Bishop Butler well said in his great work on "The Analogy of Religion," "That we are to live hereafter is just as reconcilable with the scheme of atheism and is well to be accounted for by it as that we are now alive is." As Joseph Cook once said, "The mystery of the continuity of life is not so great as that life ever began." We might well suppose that a man who could resist the evidence of God's existence here would find no necessity for a belief in God in a scheme implying existence anywhere.

Religion concerns the highest instincts of the soul and is based upon the idea of the consciousness of God's presence. It is subjective, and by the very nature of things Spiritualism is not a religion in any sane meaning of the word. Its phenomena are external to faith, and to say the very best we could say for such a system would be that if it can place the doctrine of the continuity of life upon a scientific basis it would be a help to weak faith that found difficulty in believing a doctrine essential to a rational religion but not of religious significance in itself. Just as Christ performed miracles to lead men and women to him, so could we regard concrete evidence of immortality as of importance in leading those of weak faith to the acceptance of the truths that are peculiar to religion.

But is Spiritualism all that its advocates declare it to be? Do we really find in its phenomena a demonstration of the continuity of life?

No intelligent person familiar with the subject would deny the reality of many of the phenomena of Spiritualism. The question is, Are we forced to an acceptance of the explanation given by the Spiritualists, or is there some other way of accounting for the phenomena? And while men like Lodge, Doyle, Hysslop and Flammarion are positive that the mysteries of Spiritualism demonstrate the reality of life beyond the grave, there are other scholars who are equally familiar with the evidence yet who do not believe that the spiritualistic hypothesis is demanded to explain the phenomena. Even so zealous a believer in Spiritualism as Sir William Barrett says: "Those who remain in doubt as to the value of the evidence. . . should remember that it is, and probably always will be, impossible to obtain such conclusive logical demonstration of survival after death as will satisfy every agnostic." To the late Professor William James of Harvard University, who was one of the most painstaking of investigators of the question, the whole matter resolved itself into a mere "perhaps."

But should the evidence ever become such as to make it necessary to accept the spiritistic hypothesis to account for the "miracles" of Spiritualism, would we not find the light we required to enable us to arrive at a correct estimate of the matter in the scriptures? In other words, would we not realize that the system of today based upon spirit return is similar to the spiritism of ancient times of which we have a description in the Bible? And indeed there is much in these present day "revelations" to lead us to believe that the spiritism of Bible times and against which the people were warned reaches to the present day and is in conformity to the facts of today's experience.

The student of the Scriptures realizes that the spiritism of ancient times found in its own credentials the evi-

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Place Where Jesus Failed—Why He Failed. By S. C. Henderson

"And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief."—Matt. 13:58. Also its parallel in Mark 6:5,—

"And he could do no mighty work there, save that he laid his hands on a few sick folks and healed them."

Permit me to use the thought contained in both texts in a single statement: "AND HE COULD DO NO MIGHTY WORKS THERE BECAUSE OF THEIR UNBELIEF, EXCEPT THAT HE LAID HIS HANDS ON A FEW SICK PEOPLE AND HEALED THEM." To some these words may seem like attributing weakness to Christ. It places a limitation upon his omnipotence. It was the place where Jesus failed. The text implies it. Yet with a little study, it clears itself of any weakness upon his part. The apparent weakness is but a divinely granted privilege. At the basis of Christ's failure in Nazareth is the fact of the human will. It was theirs to accept or reject him.

He had come to them incidentally in his tour of the cities and villages of Galilee. It had been his boyhood home. He had paid them a visit in his early ministry and had been rejected at the little synagogue in his claims to the Messiahship. Now in the second year of his ministry, the year that has been called, "The Year of Great Popular Favor," he comes to them again. Perhaps he felt that they should have another chance to choose or reject him, as the very name of Nazareth was proverbial of meanness throughout the province of Galilee.

But why was Jesus rejected in Nazareth? Was it because there was more sin there than any other place in Galilee, or in all Palestine? It is very likely that Nazareth had its share of sin, but there have been countless other places that have had far more and greater sins than Nazareth ever dreamed of and were stirred to their depths by the Gospel. Even down in Samaria, a place that was considered so low that no Jewish proselyter even thought worthy of a consideration, Jesus found ready followers. There was a reason that was far deeper than sin. Sin might have called for pardon, but the Nazarenes were not caring for pardon.

Unbelief was the underlying reason for their rejection. "He came unto his own and they that were his own received him not." There is an unbelief that lies so deep that no hand of help can reach it. No eye can penetrate its abiding place with truth. The dungeon's roof is so opaque that no ray from the star of hope can shine in. There is an unbelief that is nurtured by prejudice. No speech, or logic, no love, no pity can turn it aside. It darkens the eye and seals the heart. Such was the unbelief of the wandering hosts of Israel as they stood at the gates of the Promised Land. "They could not enter because of their unbelief." Unbelief was stronger than the walled cities of the Canaanites or the sons of Anak. It was prejudiced unbelief that caused the Jews to put the Christ to death. It is prejudiced unbelief that keeps men and women from great blessings and lofty ideals today. Such unbelief lies so deep that even God cannot reach it. He can not interfere with the freedom of the human will.

Such unbelief assumes several attitudes. For this reason, I shall use the incident of the text to point out the different ways that unbelief demonstrated itself in Nazareth on the day our Lord visited it. Their failure to receive him was the result of attitudes within their hearts towards him. Jesus could not change their attitudes, nor break the bands that bound them, for there are bands that fetter the human soul that no one can break except the soul itself. They hold our age as firm as they held that little Galilean village centuries ago.

"THE FIRST REASON WHY JESUS FAILED IN NAZARETH WAS BECAUSE THE NAZARENES FAILED

TO BE INTERESTER IN HIS WORK." A common interest is the link that binds souls in harmony. It was the common interest in liberty that bound the founders of this republic together and made their union possible. It was a common interest that sent the Pilgrim fathers to the New World. It was a common interest that leagued the Allies together to overcome the German militarism that threatened to extinguish democracy from the world. It is a common interest that binds the church of God together in a league against sin. But the citizens of Nazareth were not interested in the Good News or its Bringer. There is a class of people who can shut their ears and hearts against truth securer than they can lock the doors of their houses. Christ's first rejection at Nazareth showed that his ideal Messianism had no interest for them. It even drove them to fierce hatred and opposition.

There always have been and very likely will be an indifferent class to great ideals. We find folks who are indifferent to the affairs of the state. They have to be urged and dragged to the polls on election day. There are those who are indifferent to the welfare of the community. Its moral, intellectual, and spiritual uplift has no charm for them. There are folks who are indifferent to the education of their own children. This fact is shown by the eight and a half million people in the United States above the age of ten who can neither read nor write in spite of all the educational advantages afforded by our public schools. When you will find people who are indifferent to their own future welfare and who never think of providing for the day ahead. This being true we can well expect to find folks who are not interested in the things of their soul. The worst foe to Christianity is not philosophic atheism. That is a toothless and fangless sort of thing. But there are a great class of people who profess faith in God and Christ and then act as if there were none by having no interest in the things that pertain to them. That is the kind of atheism we need to fear. It is the kind of unbelief that is the hardest to reach. The idle rich, the aristocratic social set and many a ne'er-do-well have no interest in matters pertaining to spiritual things. They are as a rule harder to reach than the bum and the thug because they like the people in Nazareth imagine that these matters are beneath their social dignity.

There were members of these indifferent classes in Nazareth. They knew Jesus and his claims and thought of him as not worthy of any consideration. They would have stopped their ears to any good thing that he might have said. They would have misrepresented any good deed which he might have wrought. They cared not a whit for his signs and parables. It is quite likely that their indifference was of the passive sort. They ignored him. They would freeze him by their indifference. But indifference is stagnation in thought, in progress and in religion. The indifferent church is a dying church and the indifferent apathetic soul is a dead soul. "Life," says Henry Drummond, "is being in correspondence with its environment." Death is being out of correspondence with one's environment. The soul or the church that lacks interest in spiritual matters is dead while it liveth. Some one has told us that faith is an active working interest in any thing. Jesus can do no mighty works where an active faith is absent. The faith that removes mountains is the living, optimistic, working kind of faith. If there had been a class, however small, in Nazareth that had had such a faith the Gospel incident would have ended differently.

THE SECOND ELEMENT GREW OUT OF THE FIRST—THEIR LACK OF INTEREST CAUSED THEM FAIL TO APPRECIATE HIM. There is an old adage which says, "Familiarity breeds contempt." The citizens of Nazareth began to say among themselves, when the news began to come in from Capernaum and other places concerning Jesus, "Why we know this man, Jesus. He is one of us. Where did he get his authority? How did he obtain this knowledge and power which is being boasted of? We never knew him to be a rabbi. He is the carpenter Joseph's son. Here are his mother and his brothers—James, Joseph, Simon and Judas, with his sisters, who live in our town. They are just ordinary folks." They could not believe it. It was preposterous that he should be the long looked for Messianic King. It was farthest from the most liberal imagination. He must have a devil or be mad. There were the boyhood playmates and the neighbors who had brought him their plows and yokes to be mended. He was a good workman before he began to think he was a prophet. But never would they accept him as the Christ.

How often genius has been minimized by neighbors and relatives. A lad grows up in the village and later becomes famous in the outside world, but still back in the little village they will say, "He is one of us." We know his family, his brothers and sisters, they are still with us." An old lead miner who formerly lived at Galena, Illinois, used to attend my services occasionally. One day I asked him about General Grant. Why! Yes my folks knew him. He didn't amount to much. He, with many others at Galena, could never look upon Grant as the great soldier and president, but only as the discouraged worthless young man. Many a man becomes a failure for that very reason, because folks doubt him. It was so with Grant until Lincoln found him. But Jesus in his greater wisdom understood it, and repeated the old proverb, "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country and his own house." So Jesus did no mighty works there because of their failure to appreciate him.

Appreciation gives inspiration. It is a truth that "occasion makes the orator," but many a gifted orator has failed in addressing an unsympathetic audience. A skillful musician seldom succeeds in bringing out all the sweetness of the voice before an unappreciative audience. Every preacher knows that the responsiveness of the congregation brings out the best that is within him. Many a preacher fails because he is not appreciated.

That was the condition that Jesus met in Nazareth. And he did no mighty works there. It was far different down in Capernaum where the multitudes were flocking to him on every side to hear him. There he could restore sight to the blind, but in Nazareth blindness was so deep that it could not be reached. He was far too common for them to trust him, to hear and to believe him. They failed to meet his means of grace.

Too often we fail in Christ's work. We do not appreciate him. He is too commonplace. Yet how often Christ is to be found in some very common places. It was just a plain old fashioned church in the little village of Carslyle in Northern England, far inferior to the great St. Paul's, Canterbury or Notre Dame. Yet the president turned aside and chose it as a place for quiet worship because his grandfather, Dr. Woodrow, served it as a humble pastor years ago. So God's Bethels are never to be despised, because often God has seen fit to bring forth greatness from them.

FINALLY THEY FAILED TO RECEIVE THE BENEFITS THAT JESUS WOULD HAVE GIVEN THEM, BECAUSE THEY WERE OFFENDED IN HIM. In Nazareth there was so much that Jesus could have done. In Nazareth there were bed-ridden invalids. There were cripples and blind and palsied men and women. There were sick babes and mothers. But the sad thing about it was that so few were healed. It is more than likely that those that were healed were special friends of his mother or children on whom he had compassion. But the neighbors noticed the absences of wondrous deeds in their midst. They felt the sting of neglect, and began to taunt him: "What have you done in Capernaum do thou in thine own city." That sounds like folks doesn't it? They lacked interest and appreciation, they felt neglect and hated him. Men are led by unbelief to be indifferent and to lack appreciation, yet they do not hate. Much unbelief, I am glad to say, is passive. But there were those who heard reports and were curious to see, but when they were disappointed they began to feel envious of the other places so favored and the people who were helped. "Why don't you favor your own city?" and when Jesus did not, they hated him.

But it was Nazareth that missed the blessing. He went to others who received him with a ready welcome. There is a very old legend that tells that an old saint passed through a mediaeval town. He stopped to rap at each door but the people gave him no heed. At nightfall they realized what they had lost, for it was the Christ that had visited them on that day. So God often comes to us. Are we interested in him and his work? Do we appreciate him? Will we lose the blessing? The church fails and the individual fails to get the blessings when they do not appreciate the great value of their opportunities.

OUR SCRIPTURE

And moreover a most excellent way I show unto you. If I speak with the tongues of men and angels, but have not love, I am become sounding brass or a clanging cymbal. And if I have the gift of prophecy and know all mysteries and all knowledge, and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing. And if I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and if I give my body to be burned, but have not love, it profiteth me nothing. Love suffereth long and is kind, love envieth not, love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not its own, is not provoked, taketh no account of evil, rejoiceth not in unrighteousness, but rejoiceth with the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth.

OUR MEDITATIONS

Jesus once remarked to a few of his choice friends, that men would know they were his disciples by the attitude they assumed toward each other. When he left the earth he commissioned these friends to go and make disciples of all mankind. Just a short time after this the first Christian church of Corinth was founded by a man named Paul, then the only man who realized the scope and extent of that commission. But it had not been long organized until some of the deacons and lay members began to detect their self-importance. To the ears of the founder were carried reports of quarrelings and dissensions. "My office and my function is the most important," exclaimed some of these Corinthian Christians. Quickly the pen of the great Paul spelled out timely advice and forceful exhortation to these, his fruits in the Lord. After setting aside some of their claims to pre-eminence, he wrote, "Give heed! I'll show you a more excellent way." And then he pointed out in his masterful manner, that which puts the stamp of genuineness upon a Christian, distinguishing him from all that are merely so-called, even as the fine silken threads unmistakably mark the real, from the counterfeited, gold-certificate.

John must have been thinking of the words of his Master, when he wrote, "We know that we have passed out of death into life, because we love the brethren." Must we then believe, that we are only truly Christian, when characterized by this spirit of love? Are we,—am I living a life full of love for my brethren? Am I patient with others and always kind? Do I shun even the appearance of jealousy? Has self been crucified and pride buried in the tomb of the past? Does it pain me when others go wrong? Am I al-

Topic for June 8: Obedience. By Dr. J. M. Tombaugh

Obedience, in a Scriptural sense, has been defined as: "A voluntary, free and cheerful conformity of our affections and actions to the will of God as revealed in his Word." The spirit of true obedience is submission to the divine will. The actual performance, on man's part, of the things commanded, is doubtless of less value in the sight of God, than the possession of a spirit of entire surrender which enables him to will to do God's will. Actions are but the outward expression of obedience; that is to say, the motive which prompts the action is of greater moral consequence than the act itself. Obedience is first of all, in the heart. There must be not only a recognition of God's authority, of his right to direct and control our conduct because of the relation in which he stands to us as God and Father, but in order that our obedience may be acceptable to him, that it may be a sweet-smelling savor in which God is pleased, it must be prompted by feelings of gratitude and reverence and love.

We may do what God has commanded, or we may refrain from doing that which he has forbidden, and our conduct may yet lack the elements of true obedience. It is conceivable that a man may render an obedience which outwardly is flawless, and yet utterly fail to please God. If his conduct is prompted by some inferior consideration, and is not the expression of genuine reverence, of real surrender of heart to God, his obedience is only empty and formal, and can win nothing more than the praise of men.

A mere accidental conformity, in some particular, to the will of God as it is revealed in the Bible, is not the obedience which wins favor with God, because it lacks the essential element which makes such conformity praiseworthy, that is, the loving submission of the heart. An unbeliever may do many things which God requires, but his doing them does not make him an obedient child of God.

A regard for public opinion and respect for one's self are inferior motives, and when outward compliance with God's law is prompted by such considerations, it may readily be seen that the obedience which God requires has not been rendered, though his law has been kept. It is equally true, though it may not always be so readily apparent, that the obedience given through fear of punishment or by hope of reward, is also wanting in the essential element which makes obedience a saving grace. In the one case the obedience is servile; it is prompted by a dread of the consequences of incurring God's displeasure. In the other case, it is mercenary; it springs not from love or gratitude, but from a desire to win a reward. While no man can say that God rejects the service we offer him when the motive which prompts it, is no higher than hope or fear, yet we ourselves lose the joy, the supreme satisfaction and comfort, which might have been ours if our obedience had been rendered from worthier motives. God may not wholly reject the imperfect offering if it is the best the worshipper can bring; he may not wholly reject the obedience which springs from selfish hope or fear, but if he accepts it, it is because it may pave the way to a more unselfish service, and a true recognition, by and bye, of God's worthiness to receive our heart's full treasure of love and service.

While it is doubtless true that a surrendered will is more pleasing to God than the actual deeds of obedience by which we prove that our will has been surrendered, yet our obedience is not complete, and we cannot be quite sure that we possess a spirit of entire obedience, till we have actually performed the duty required of us.

It is utterly useless and foolish to say, as some men do: "God knows all things; he knows my heart; he knows how willing I am to render obedience in this thing he has commanded, why then should I be at pains to prove what God already knows? Why should I submit to baptism as a test of obedience if God already knows that I possess the spirit of obedience? Why should I practice the ordinance of the washing of the saints' feet to show myself possessed of a spirit of humility or to prove, what God already knows, that I am willing to obey every one of the least of his commandments? Is not the state of the heart more than the conduct by which the state of the heart is revealed?" Yes, the state of the heart is most important than the conduct,—because the moral quality of the conduct, the good or the evil that is in it, is determined by the motive which is behind the act, more than by the act itself. But God's law is not fulfilled by good resolutions or dutiful purposes or mere assent of the mind, but by an actual compliance with the duty required, whenever such compliance is possible. Under the old law of Moses it was so; the intent alone was not sufficient. Under the new law of Jesus, where the spirit counts for more than the letter, it is still the same, and a specific performance of the thing commanded is necessary to full obedience.

Our characteristic of obedience is, that it must be constant. This follows from the fact that love, which is the principle of obedience, is constant. The love of God in the heart is not a passion to flame up with intense fervor today only to die down in dead ashes tomorrow, but it is a constant fire, fed each day by fresh manifestations of God's goodness and mercy; so our obedience must be. It must be, not fitful and uncertain, but regular and constant.

Another characteristic of obedience is that it must be unconditional. The surrender which the soul makes to God is absolute and complete. No condition which may arise can absolve the soul from the necessity of rendering to God the exact obedience which he requires. One ease or convenience, the success of his secular affairs, the customs of the times in which he lives, nor anything else, may come between him and his obedience to God. Daniel kept his window open toward Jerusalem "as aforetime," though every consideration of personal prosperity and safety prompted him to obey man rather than God, but the sequel proved that obeying God is best under all circumstances.

Another characteristic of obedience is, that it must be immediate. To delay, even though the delay is accompanied by a firm determination to render obedience later, is to disobey. When a man is under conviction of sin, and is struggling with himself undecided whether to yield to God or not, it is unwise for the minister, or other spiritual teacher, to advise him "to take the matter home and think about it and decide it later." In such a case, or in any case, to hesitate is to disobey.

Obedience, full, hearty, unquestioning, constant obedience, we owe to him who is at once our Father and Lawgiver, our Savior and our King. The humiliating confession however must be made, that no mere mortal man ever has, or can, render perfect obedience, because only sinless, perfect beings could render perfect obedience. We are unable to render it, and we know we cannot please him by an imperfect obedience, because he will not accept it. We are of necessity driven from reliance upon self and self-righteousness, to a trustful dependence upon Jesus who has already rendered for us a perfect obedience.

If our obedience could be life-long and perfect,—full and complete, lacking in nothing, then indeed it might be that eternal life would come, not as the gift of God, but by human achievement. As it is however, we rejoice in Jesus who, in place of our disobedience, has rendered unto God for us an obedience that is perfect,—"having become obedient unto death even the death of the cross."

Let us then, by desire and prayer and aim and effort and struggle, seek freedom from sin so that the obedience we render, though it is not perfect, may be acceptable in the sight of him whose we are and whom we serve.

Convention Notice

The Christian Endeavor convention of Southern Indiana will meet at the Denver Brethren church, June 17. Let every pastor and Christian Endeavor president bring this convention before their Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor societies and begin making arrangements now to be represented. Come with a large delegation and help to make this the best convention we have had.

Denver has good railroad accommodations and can be reached by rail from all directions, the Vandalia running east and west and the Lake Erie and Western running north and south.

The trains east and west arrive and leave Denver at the following hours:

- Going west, 11:20 A. M. and 3:30 P. M. over the Vandalia.
Going east, 7:36 A. M. and 4:08 P. M.
Going north over the L. E. and W., 10:04 A. M., 3:12 P. M. and 8:07 P. M.
Going south, 7:04 A. M., 1:20 P. M., and 6:21 P. M.

Let every Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society be a booster for a better convention and better Sunday schools and societies.

L. A. MYERS, Pastor Denver Brethren Church.

"The very fact that so much in politics is done in the dark, behind closed doors, promotes suspicion. Everybody knows that corruption thrives in secret places, and we believe it a fair presumption that secrecy means impropriety. * * * You know there is temptation in loneliness and secrecy. We are never so proper in our conduct as when everybody can look and see exactly what we are doing. * * * The best thing that you can do with anything that is crooked is to lift it up where people can see that it is crooked, and then it will either straighten itself out or disappear."—From "The New Freedom," by President Woodrow Wilson.

As even now we call thee Father, O God, grant us the grace to act as thy children. In our walk among the sons of men, may we, who bare the name of the Christ, so live and labor in love, that our fellows shall irresistibly be drawn unto thee. Way we be fully resigned to thy will, even growing more into the image of the perfect Man, even thy Son. We pray unceasingly, our Father, for more of that love, which compelled thee to give him, the most precious of the precious, to redeem a lost humanity, thy creation,

MISSIONS

Home Mission Notes. By G. C. Carpenter

Annual Kentucky Visit

Orion E. Bowman and the writer represented the Home Mission Board on the annual visit to the Kentucky mission field. We were accompanied by Brother E. M. Cobb, pastor of the Dayton Brethren church. We found that the work of the past year had been well done and the best news was that the future holds wonderful opportunities to enlarge the Lord's work in that mountain district. Watch for Brother Cobb's report and read every word of it.

The Need of Workers

The open doors call for consecrated teachers and preachers and Sunday school workers. Teachers will be needed for the coming school year which begins the middle of July. Write at once if a position as teacher is desired. A dormitory manager and matron are needed. A husband and wife are preferred. Brother and Sister Humbert of Flora, Indiana, rendered splendid service the past season in that position. Brother Humbert assisted also as a teacher. It meant much for them to leave their farm in the care of others during that time and give themselves to the Lord's work. However they report that the Lord blessed them and prospered them while they were away. They would return, but are planning to be in school for further preparation for the Lord's work. May the Lord call another husband and wife who will be equally faithful.

A Home for Somebody

Brother Drushal desires to provide a home for some woman who would assist in caring for the children and thus enable Sister Drushal to take a more active part in the school work.

A Business Opportunity

There is an opportunity for the right man to buy a grocery and general store, and the right man can doubtless build up a splendid paying business. It is already a paying business but we mean that there is the opportunity to enlarge the business. Anyone who is interested should write Brother Drushal for further information. A good Brethren business man would find almost unlimited opportunities to do Christian work.

An Electric Light Plant

One of the most pressing needs is that of an electric light plant for Riverside. To light the four buildings and provide for further possible needs a hundred light plant would be necessary. Here is an opportunity for some loyal brethren to let their light shine in more ways than one. It is needed as a protection to the property. The oil lamps now in use are quite dangerous especially in dormitories where there are so many young people. An estimate of the cost is being prepared and further information will soon be given. Write us if you are interested in meeting this pressing need and thus shining for the Lord in Riverside for years to come.

A Piano

Another pressing need is a piano. The present instrument in the chapel at Riverside is quite worn out, although it has rendered good service for a number of years, having been donated by a good sister in Ohio. There are many Brethren homes throughout the brotherhood in which there are good pianos that are scarcely ever used but that could bring glory to the Lord if they were in places like the one above named. Will our readers please think on this matter and may the Lord persuade someone to meet this need in the next few weeks. The piano will be needed by the middle of July when school is announced to open. And the same piano is used for the Sunday school and church services during the whole year. Write us at once if you can supply the need or if you know of someone who might become interested.

Happy

"Happy" is the name of the postoffice where Sister Elizabeth Haddix and Sister Hattie Cope are located. They are conducting two Sunday schools and the outlook is good. Brother Drushal and the writer visited the field and the workers one day during our stay in Kentucky. We walked twelve miles that day and the writer decided that he was about the "walkingdead" man in that country, at least from Indiana. That is the term applied to Brethren Drushal and Cook. After walking some twenty miles in two days and over those rough mountain roads we were fortunate to be able to spend most of the next day on the train on our return trip, for we must confess that walking very far would have been next to impossible.

Coal! Coal! Coal!

A mining camp is being opened up at Happy and soon the population will be doubled and trebled. A railroad is being built up Car's Fork, extending forty miles and connecting with Virginia. All along this line are almost unlimited quantities of coal, and the road is being built substantially, indicating that the promoters are expecting a permanent growth and an enlarging business for many years. All along this line will spring up new towns and some of them will be of considerable size. The church that is there with faithful workers will be given the right-of way, for there is but little overlapping by the denominations that are working in the mountains. There should not be when the field is so large and the workers so few.

Happy Girls

Sisters Haddix and Cope are happy girls. We were unexpected guests for dinner but they prepared a splendid meal and we need not say that we did our part at the table after that long walk. Happy is four and one-half miles from Hamden, the nearest station at present. The girls can now sympathize with the newly-wed who has her first unexpected company for dinner. The girls had the promise of a room for light housekeeping before they had arrived on the field, but when they arrived tired and hungry the party would not let them in, saying that they were afraid of the oil stove, and also that they lived in a new house and they did not want the girls to wear out the floor by keeping it scrubbed, and anyhow they did not want their new house wet. But another man close by gave the girls a room and favors them in many ways. May the Lord bless and lead the girls and keep them happy in "Happy."

The Sheriff and a Wise Man

A good brother in Nappanee enclosed $25 on Kentucky pledges and then added: "These pledges were given at National Conference and should have been paid long ago but were neglected. We thought that perhaps the sheriff would soon be after us, so we better pay it before he gets here and save time and confusion." He was right and may there be many others who will take the hint and prove themselves as wise as he. Every pledge should be met before the first of July. Pay in June.

Strikes Do not Stop Sunday School Meetings

Rev. George P. Howard, Field Secretary for South America, representing the World's Sunday School Association is always a busy man. He has the Sunday school activities of a continent under his care. Most of his work is done in Argentina, where he lives. He makes frequent trips to Chile, Brazil and Uruguay. He just wrote about two successful Sunday school rallies in Montevideo and Buenos Aires. The Central Methodist church of the first named city has an average Sunday school attendance of 250 but more than 400 were present at the rally. Howard writes, as follows: "A serious car strike was on and the few cars that were circulating had a couple of armed soldiers on the front platform and two on the rear platform. It looked as if this abnormal situation would spoil the projected rally. A little before the hour people began to stream in from all directions. Soon every chair in the large Sunday school room was filled. Two hundred little children were crowded up on the platform where they found a comfortable sitting—on the floor! Rows of fine young men were lined up along the wall, like a guard. And still they continued to stream in. Where they all came from I do not know. Soon the hall was packed, and every one thought 'What a blessing there is a street car strike. Otherwise what would we have done with the crowd?' The singing was magnificent: the atmosphere was tense with excitement; everybody was happy. The Buenos Aires rally also brought out a record breaking attendance.

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

The Lord has been blessing us abundantly here. Although deprived of our usual evangelistic campaign, which always deepens and stabilizes the spiritual life of the church, yet the faith is strong among the Brethren. Aside from a few who have gone into the prevailing apostasy, you will find as pure faith abiding here as in any church in the brotherhood. It is a delight to preach the genuine Gospel to them.

We reached a mountain top experience on Easter. Our offering exceeded $600.00. No, there were no large gifts, in fact $25 was the largest gift. But everybody gave and gave well. Without even a missionary sermon or urging, just presenting the opportunity, this offering was secured. Next year, the Lord delaying his coming, we will make for first place.

Our church here and the church at Spokane are being drawn into a closer fellowship. It was a joy to lead the Spokane Brethren in their campaign for souls during February. No one need to hesitate a moment in making liberal gifts to the Spokane work, for a bright present and a most promising future is the heritage of this church. Brother Miller, pastor of Spokane church, was called to administer instruction and sympathy to us in our recent sorrow of bidding farewell to one of our twins as she departed to paradise to await the first resurrection. Then immediately following Easter, he led us in one week of preparatory services preceding our blessed communion. It was not an evangelistic campaign, yet within the short period of eight days, eleven made the confession, nine being re-consecrations and two coming by baptism. Brother Miller gave most excellent sermons, full of deep truths of God's word. He endeared himself in the hearts of the people. Before General Conference convenes, we expect to form a Washington conference of the Spokane and Sunnyside churches.

C. H. ASHMAN.

RIPON, WEST COLONY, AND LATHROP

We are pleased to make a report of our work at this time. You noticed a few weeks ago in Brother Bell's report of the Northern California District, that we are now serving three churches instead of Ripon alone. On Sunday we teach a Sunday school class and preach at Ripon in the morning; teach a Sunday school class and preach at West Colony in the afternoon, and preach at Lathrop in the evening. We have a prayer meeting at each of the three places during the week.

We are now beginning to reap a small harvest in Ripon. Our Sunday school has increased from twenty to seventy-five. Two were baptized here recently. We begin an evangelistic campaign June 1. Brother A. V. Kimmel, from Whittier, California, will be our evangelist. We are praying for results. Brethren, pray with us.

The West Colony people are not an organized Brethren church. But we are hoping to make it so soon. They are a splendid people and are interested in things religious. On the same day I am writing this two will be baptized at this place.

The Lathrop congregation is well organized and doing fine work. A number of young people have recently been added to that church. We have re-organized a Y. P. S. C. E. here, and the young Christians are taking hold of their work in fine shape.

These churches owe a vast deal more to the faithful efforts of our Brother J. Wesley Platt than they can ever hope to pay. He stood by them under very adverse circumstances. He is now the pastor of the Manteca church.

We have a hard work here, but it is the Lord's, and we like it.

N. V. LEATHERMAN.

FRANKLIN, WEST VIRGINIA

While I have a little time, I will write a letter to the Evangelist from the home of Brother J. C. Hammer whose home has been the welcome abiding place for nearly every minister who has preached at the Hammer church. The writer has tried to be as faithful to this church as it is possible for one who lives so far away from his parish. It is nearly 150 miles from here to Washington, D. C., yet I try to come to them four or five times a year. I have never found any friction in this little band numbering 31. Though some have gone from us in the five years of our pastorate, we have added 19 of that number to the membership, three by relation and the rest by baptism. It is with deep regret that we must report the death of our dear Uncle Ruben Dornier and wife; both have gone to their blessed reward. We also lost two valuable sisters through their marriage to men of other faiths. Besides we are not free from persecution. No church will be which is willing to accept the whole Gospel which is just as unpopular today as it was in our Lord's time.

While there are many who will not follow the lowly and meek ways of Christ, there are some who will give us credit for our obedience. When in conversation with a high official a short time ago, he said to me, "We could not but have high regard for your young men when we saw their sincerity of heart and strength of conviction, and we had to excuse them from the bearing of arms." Then he added, "If the Kaiser had been a Dunkard, we would not have had a world war." I was glad that some of our dear young men had enough of Paul's courage to stand by the marvelous Gospel light when clouds of sinful darkness overshadowed the teachings of Jesus.

Because of the "flu," I have only been here since the 16th of last October, when I held the last communion service with all present who lived near the church. At that trip we baptized Sister Gatha Teeter, and two of Brother Lloyd Hammer's sons. On this trip we received five into the fold, one mother by relation and a man and his three nieces by baptism. The man, Brother Minor Smith, is critically ill with tuberculosis. He said that he had been a member of a church that used sprinkling for baptism, but that he had read the Bible and felt sure that our baptism and feet washing were right. We took him down to a cold stream and there baptized him, and when he came up he said, "Praise the Lord, that's what I have wanted to do for a long time." After reading scripture, laying hands on them and praying, we took our leave.

Our Easter offering amounted to -19.35, and since the taking of the offering, Brother Hammer gave me $20.00 for Brother Gribble. Pray for these dear people.

Yours in his service,

S. P. FOGLE,

Washington, D. C., 22 Third st., S. E.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

Sunday, May 4th, was the biggest day that Brethrenism has yet enjoyed in its mission work in the Cumberlands. The work of this day is the visible evidence of the growth and reaching out of our cause in these regions. Altogether, there were eleven different services made possible by Brethren activity, counting Sunday school and preaching services as only one service.

Five of these services were in and about Riverside, three in and about Krypton, and the others at new points. Besides the forenoon services here, there were two different services in the afternoon, one the regular Christian Endeavor meeting, and the other a special service for the boys and girls too young to attend the regular Christian Endeavor service, this being held or conducted by Mrs. Drushal. This last named service started by Mrs. Drushal entertaining the boys and girls who were boarding scholars during the school year, and who were too small to attend the regular meeting, and did not know how to best use the Sunday afternoons, which are rather lonesome for the little folks when in school. After school closed the children of the community kept coming, until now it is quite largely attended, and seemingly a very profitable service. The program consists of telling the children Bible stories, much singing, etc.

On the Sunday mentioned above Brother Cook was preaching at a point about thirty miles from Krypton, toward the Brethren church in East Tennessee, and Brother Allen, preached at Krypton. Then also on Carri's Fork of the Kentucky River, about twenty-two miles on further up along the railroad line from Krypton, two of Riverside's pupils, Sisters Elizabeth Haddix and Hattie Cope, were conducting services at two new points where they have been located by Brother Cook and the writer, and which will be more fully described later after the location has had the final approval of the representatives of the Mission Board whom we are expecting very soon now. Brother Thomas Allen begins regular preaching services at this latter place, Sunday, May 11th.

While not having heard from all the services, most of them we know were very well attended. The services at Riverside now seem to have possibly the best prospect and attendance that we have ever yet enjoyed. This activity and reaching out is one of the goals toward which we have been working, and no one is as much pleased to see it as we who have labored on the field. In calling the attention of the audience at Riverside last Sunday to what we have stated above, we further told them that we could not consider ourselves really alive until we had some of our number on the foreign field, and others of them working for Christ and the church in the homeland. Some of this program we now see in operation, and by his power and might, we shall see more of it, as we keep in his will, and walk humbly before him. Pray for us that it may be so.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

ASHLAND COLLEGE NOTES

Conceal your troubles in your hip pocket, but pin your joys to your breast.

Now that school days are so near over this will be the last "Notes" for a time at least.

If you are going prospecting for happiness take your pick of Good-will and dig in the hills of Helping-others. You can strike it rich.

Plans are being laid for a big school year for 1919-20. Many valuable improvements will be made this summer both in the college building and in the dormitory.

The College Y. M. C. A. has raised in cash and pledges $250.00 for special features next year. Some noted men will be brought in to deliver messages to the student body and furnish inspiration for all.

Any student desiring to be in school next year and wishing to find employment for afternoons for partial support may notify the College "Y" of the kind of work you can do or the kind you would like, and you will be assisted in finding just that place. And when you get to Ashland the place will be ready for you, if it is to be found.

Mr. Beachler, one of the big men of the Brethren Church, was home for a two weeks' rest and in the meantime made his gardens. The Ashland folks are always glad to have Beachler among them. Perhaps no one church feels prouder of him than the Ashland church, and none are happier than the college folks in that the Endowment Fund has already gone "over the top." It means so much for the school. The men who have stood by it all these years hoping and longing to see the day when permanent endowment would be realized, are now rejoicing to see that day. God bless all those who have made this possible. Another hundred thousand would only make it a better place for your boy or girl to obtain a Christian education. We feel like singing now "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Really, I think Ashland ought to have a real Jubilee celebration for victory. Come on, Brethren, what do you say?

The last Theological meeting of the year was held on Monday evening, June 2nd, with a splendid attendance.

The May Supper held on the campus was a great success. Many of the town people participated. It was not possible to estimate the number present. But here's our guess—

In a few days more the students will be departing for their respective homes, to spend the summer. Several of the boys will be engaged traveling through Ohio and Indiana.

Mr. Lynn will hold a meeting at one of his churches, while his wife visits home folks in Virginia.

The Deeter family will visit a while in Miami county, Ohio, and then go to Oakville, Indiana, where he will be with his church people for the summer.

Mrs. Owen and children will visit in Canada, while Brother Owen travels over a portion of Ohio, and keeps charge of his two churches.

Vern Flora and Cashman will travel through portions of Indiana.

Mrs. Lichty and daughter, Ruth, will visit in Pennsylvania among relatives.

Prof. Garber and E. A. Rowsey each made addresses at the recent Ashland County Christian Endeavor Convention held at Loudonville.

The Junior Annuals will soon be ready for delivery to the ones who have ordered them. There's only a limited number and the late applicants will likely be deprived of them. They are "plum full" of actual photographs taken around the campus, of classes, societies, faculty and students, over a hundred different scenes.

ALUMNI NOTICE

While every reader of the Evangelist is interested in Ashland College, the college enjoys a peculiar interest among graduates and former students. With this thought in mind we are calling attention to the interesting events of commencement week—Sunday to Thursday, June 8-12, 1919.

Sunday 3:00 P. M. Baccalaureate Sermon by President Furry.

Monday 8:00 P. M. Class Address by Hon. Frank B. Willis.

Tuesday 8:00 P. M. Pageant staged by the Senior Class, entitled "The Spirit of the Age."

Wednesday 1:00 P. M. Junior-Senior Luncheon. Open to all the Alumni.

Those expecting to be present should notify J. L. Gingrich.

Wednesday 8:00 P. M. Recital by the Advanced Music Students in Piano and Voice under the direction of Miss Lichty and Miss Putterbaugh.

Thursday 9:30 A. M. Class Day Program when thirteen persons will be graduated from the several courses.

J. A. GARBER, Secretary.

BRETHREN DAY

Brethren Day this year should be made the one big day of our church year. The Brethren church, in company with many others, is passing through a critical period. We must go forward or the other alternative must obtain. The world must learn that the Brethren church is more than a "family" church. A gospel church is big enough for the whole world. Let's make the day a big day.

J. D. KEMPER.

Brethren Day should be observed by every congregation. It is important that we should review the history of our beloved church. We need to know something of the cost of our present heritage. An intelligent and thoughtful review of the history of our denomination, will tend to stimulate activity and to make us more MISSIONARY. The Brethren church can have, if she will, a great future, in home and foreign lands. But this can be realized only by the present generation making sacrifice similar to that which characterized the labors of our forefathers.

W. C. BENSHOFF.

THIRD CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA

I have been waiting for some one to report the glorious meeting we have enjoyed at the little Third, but as no one has done so, I feel led to do it.

Brother Banman came to us on April 5th, and stayed a little more than three weeks and the results were even more than we expected. That is God's way of doing. There were over 40 came forward, about 30 of which have or will be added to the church. Some came from the Tabernacle and as they practice trine immersion they were not re-baptized.

Quite a few came from the Sunday school and are young, hence no great immediate help to the church. Others who had been friends of the church, through the forcible presentation of our doctrine, were brought in. Several came from the Tabernacle, with which I labored for a time and hence they were old friends.

Brother Banman has certainly endeared himself to the members of the Third church and he or the meetings will never be forgotten. The only thing that I caught him doing wrong was reporting the missionary offering of $110, as being $150 per member, when it is about $35.00 each. Not that it makes any difference to me personally but I am a little jealous of the good works of the little band to whom I am permitted to minister. As we are all poor in this world's goods, not a single member that does not labor for their daily food, it shows that God has touched their hearts. I doubt if any church in the brotherhood can make a better showing.

E. E. ROBERTS.

MORE NEWS FROM GARWIN

We are sending a few lines in order that the brotherhood may know that all the "Doings" are not at one place.

We held our quarterly business meeting the 13th of this month. It was my privilege to strike the match to the note that has been carried on the parsonage for several years. More encouraging, is the fact that the amount set to raise for the parsonage was $1800.00 and the amount subscribed was $1907.00. Brother Charley Dobson of the trustees did the soliciting. Plans have been completed for a well at the parsonage. This is something that has been needed for a long time. Brother Frank Lewis is securing some fine collection plates as a present to the church.

May 11, our foreign mission offering was taken. Our membership is 150 (all active) and the offering amounted to $67.50, thus we are $7.50 over the top. We are very appreciative of the spirit in which this was given.

Brother F. G. Coleman arrived on the job Saturday evening and preached the next day to two large and appreciative audiences. As the interest increases we predict that we will not be able to accommodate the crowds that will come. You may look for good reports from the meetings. May we have the interest of the brotherhood.

FREEMAN ANDRUM.

FREMONT, OHIO

We would be glad to make a more glowing report of the work at this place, but we are happy to state that we have reason to be encouraged and press on in the work. We had a splendid revival during the latter part of the winter which was particularly fruitful in the deepening of the spiritual lives of the members. Five were added to the church by baptism and one by statement, or relation. The meetings closed with a delightful communion service, although the attendance was not as large as usual on account of sickness and bad weather.

Our Easter offering was a pleasant surprise to many. We more than reached our goal, with an offering of $75.08, which is about double that of any previous Easter offering.

On April 13, we held our Rally, in which the Brethren of Fostoria joined us. Brother J. A. Garber, of Ashland, Ohio, was with us and preached for us both morning and evening to the joy and edification of all who heard him. A conference on the Four Year Program was held in the afternoon, the principal address being given by Brother Garber. Brother R. Alger Hazen, of Fostoria, Brother S. M. Loose and the writer also participated. All were greatly benefitted by the discussions and addresses. A delightful feature of the morning service was the graduation of four ladies of the Fremont church that had completed the teacher training course.

Woman's Day and Parents' Day have also been appropriately observed. We are pressing on in the battle as best we can. The struggle seems hard sometimes, but we are bound to triumph through our Lord Jesus Christ. We are planning and hoping for better things.

H. M. OBERHOLTZER.

IN THE SHADOW

HORNE—Fred Horne, born in Medway, Clark county, Ohio, October 26, 1860, died near Silver Lake, Indiana, April 7, 1919, aged 58 years, 5 months and 11 days. He was married to Martha Leckrone, December 24, 1885. Cancer caused his death. Horne had a faithful wife and was devoted to her. She prayed for him many years when he seemed very indifferent to the claims of the church. He was a devoted member of several lodges and of a jovial nature; won and had many friends. A few months before his death, he accepted Christ as Savior and was anointed and prayed earnestly for recovery but was resigned to the will of his new-found Christ which it seemed was not for his recovery. His only regret was that he could not live to serve Christ as faithfully as he had the lodge. Though he had said the funeral ceremony at many a Masonic and K. of P. funeral, he had neither for his own. He was a patient sufferer and we hope has gone to a reward in heaven. Funeral services by the writer from "Life More Abundant."

CHARLES A. BAME.

CONRAD—Vera Conrad was born May 10, 1903, died February 8, 1919, aged 10 years, 8 months and 28 days. She was a lovable child and leaves a mother, father and two brothers. The parents having before been members of different denominations, some weeks after the funeral united their home by being received into our church. Thus we feel that her going has been a blessing in disguise. May the Lord ever rule.

CHARLES A. BAME.

LAUTZENHEIZER—John Henry, two year old babe of Elora and Sister Fay Lautzenheiser of Andrews, Indiana, born December 22, 1916. Funeral services by the writer.

CHARLES A. BAME.

DYER—Sister Susan Leedy Dyer was born at Ankenytown, Ohio, July 7th, 1836, and departed this life at Ashland, Ohio, March 20th, 1919. She was aged 88 years, 9 months and 13 days.

She was first married to David Leedy Garber, 1857. Five sons and two daughters were born to them. The father died in April 1865. Five years after she married Stephen Prescott Dyer and to them were born a son and a daughter.

Sister Dyer was one of the sixteen members and the last one to survive of those who began the church known as the Leedy Brethren. At the organization of the Brethren church, these Brethren became members.

Sister Dyer was a woman of strong religious convictions. She lived a beautiful Christian life. Quiet and unassuming and yet of sterling character. She sought to do her Master's will. She was a liberal supporter of the interests of the church and her family have been large contributors to Ashland College.

She leaves seven children, 25 grandchildren and 26 great-grandchildren.

Brief services were held at the home of Brother A. L. Garber in Ashland, Ohio, by the undersigned and Brother J. A. Garber. Public services were conducted by the writer at the Brethren church at Ankenytown, where her body was laid to rest.

J. ALLEN MILLER.

PITMAN—Mrs. Eliza Jane Pitman, one of the oldest pioneer residents of Grandview, Washington, passed on to her reward on April 14, 1919. She was born in the state of Indiana, on April 8, 1821, making her just past her 98th birthday. Her mother died when she was but six months old, when her father was moving the family to the raw prairie of Illinois, where Galesburg is now situated. At the age of twenty-one she was married to George Pitman, a farmer of Henderson in Knox county, Illinois. To this union were born six sons and two daughters.

She was left a widow in 1865. After the death of her husband she was called upon to endure many sacrifices and hardships, because designing persons took advantage of her inexperience and appropriated most of the earthly store left her by her husband. She suffered a great many sorrows, but they only developed in her a great sympathy which was constantly going out to all in trouble. She was a member of the Christian church and was a consistent follower of her Master to the very end. She is survived by four children, Alexander of Conway, Iowa; Mrs. Ann E. Sykes and Frederick L., both of Grandview, Washington, and Mrs. Mary Susan Redd, Richmond, Missouri. The services were conducted by Rev. S. J. Harrison of Sunny-side, Washington, Rev. J. P. Anderson and Rev. F. L. Cook of Grandview, and interment was made in the Grandview cemetery.

S. J. HARRISON.

WITAMYRE—Nancy Younce Witamyre was born in Miami county, Ohio, July 28, 1838, died at Lima, Ohio, April 14, 1919, aged 80 years, 8 months and 16 days. She united with the Church of the Brethren when about 15 years of age. When the Brethren church at Maple Grove was organized, she became a charter member and lived a faithful Christian life until the end came.

She leaves to mourn her departure, one son and two daughters, one sister, seven grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren. Her husband preceded her to the spirit world.

Funeral services were held in the Maple Grove church by the writer, and the remains were laid to rest in the Eaton cemetery.

J. L. KIMMEL.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

In our report of last week we said that in our Notes of this week we would say something of the further plans of the campaign. Since we have reached the hundred thousand dollar mark some are wondering if the campaign is now to close. By no means. To say the very least it would be neither fair nor just to that part of the brotherhood which has already responded so nobly, if the campaign would stop short of a canvass of the entire brotherhood. The churches which have given this first hundred thousand dollars gave with the understanding that all of our churches would be given an opportunity to enlist in this movement as they have done. Hence from that standpoint alone the campaign must go on.

Since it is the plan therefore to go forward to completion with the work others are doubtless wondering why the goal was not set higher from the very beginning. A lack of faith on the part of those responsible for setting the goal might be one answer to such a question. However, that is hardly fair. As a matter of fact this campaign was launched at the time of unprecedented pressure in our country as we all know. And no one could forecast just what the conditions would be when we got on the field. And in our desire not to appear extravagant or unreasonable we chose to be conservative in the goal set. However, the campaign was less than two him become the servant of all." Sympathy would take high place and would show itself in bearing the burdens of the weak. Love would stand on the pinnacle of all values and by its genuine manifestation toward the brethren would win for its possessor recognition as a disciple of Christ. The more abiding and more truly worthwhile things are the more attention they would receive.

Finally, there are those who exalt the miniaut of life and religion to the exclusion of the great problems and principles. This tendency is glaringly illustrated by the action of the Pharisees in the days of Jesus. They had multiplied tradition and rulings on the most insignificant affairs of life until it became a burden for any one to try to be religious. Life had become completely enmeshed with a network of petty rules. The old doctors of the law would spend hours in discussing and would write pages on how to light the candles on the eve of the Jewish Sabbath with as profound interest as if it were a question of a burdened duty to a neighbor. Pharisaism grew more and more hollow and superficial until the weightier matters of the law were lost sight of. This same tendency persists today,—to exalt the importance of the insignificant details to the detriment of the great and vital principles of life and religion. If a true conception of relative values were universally had, how the petty opinions and prejudices would drop out of sight to give place to the fundamental truths and abiding principles! How much more genuine and vital would religion be! How much less of hollowness and superficiality Christians would possess and how much more fullness of life.

months old when we were sure our mark had been set too low.

But we are going on. We are going to trade our hundred thousand dollar thermometer for a two hundred thousand dollar one. Two hundred thousand dollars of permanent endowment is twice as good as one hundred thousand. I have met a few of our lay brethren who expressed the wish that a half million of endowment might be back of our school instead of a quarter of a million. These brethren have vision and they are right. At all events it is the plan to keep right on and push the mercury up just as far toward the two hundred thousand mark as is possible—to push it beyond that mark would be far better.

Our next move will be back in Pennsylvania for a few weeks to do some finishing up work. We want to be able to say that Pennsylvania is finished just as we were anxious to be able to say that Indiana was finished. After that we shall return to Illiokota and canvass all of the churches there that can be canvassed until a later time. This will take us well on toward National Conference. After Conference the campaign will likely be carried into Maryland and Virginia, and after that perhaps Ohio. These plans are subject to change however, depending on weather conditions and other considerations. It is to be hoped that there may not be as many interruptions in the rest of the campaign as there have been up to this time. The extremely cold winter of a year ago, and the fuel shortage, the "flu" epidemic, smallpox in some places, Liberty Loan drives, Red Cross drives, Y. M. C. A. drives, War Stamp drives, Armenian Relief drives and all the other things I have missed—these were some of the things we had to contend with as we covered the first lap of the endowment drive. Maybe it will be better from now on.

In connection with this report, Brother A. C. Hendrickson, our Business Manager desires to bring a message of importance as pertains to his part of the work in the present campaign.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

COLLEGE BUSINESS MANAGER

Thus far in the Endowment Campaign we have been in touch with the friends of the College who have contributed toward the endowment only through the mails. I want to express an appreciation of the splendid response to the notices sent to those who have helped to make the campaign a success. I am grateful too for the assistance given by the pastor or representative in the local churches in keeping the Endowment and other interests of the College before their people.

As the Endowment continues to grow toward the new goal of $200,000 it is naturally going to mean an additional amount of work in caring for the business in the office here. At the present time we have about $50,000 in Endowment Notes which for the most part are payable in five annual installments. To keep a record of these notes and the payments made thereon takes considerable time and work aside from the other duties that require time and attention. This work may be made very much lighter if we can have the same generous response to our notices as was manifest in the making of the gift. The largest success of the campaign will only be realized when all the funds contributed have been converted into permanent investments yielding an income for the maintenance of the work of the College.

Frequently there are times when it may not be convenient to make payment at the time indicated on the note. It has ever been the policy of the College to grant extensions in such instances. In such cases if the giver will drop us a request to the effect it will save us the time and expense of sending out the second notice.

While the Endowment notes are made payable at a definite time they may be paid at any time. During the past year about one-fifth of the notes have been paid out in full rather than allowing them to continue for the full period. This stops interest and saves the trouble of sending the payments each year for the period of the note. If there are those who desire to pay their notes either in full or in part this may be done at any time to meet the convenience and desire of the giver and receipt will be mailed for the payment, if paid in full the note will be returned promptly.

A great many inquiries come to us asking if Liberty Bonds are acceptable in payment of Endowment Notes. Yes, you can pay your note either in full or in part with Liberty Bonds. During the past year more than $20,000 in Liberty Bonds have been assigned to Ashland College in this way. As these bonds come to us they are converted and registered in larger denominations so as to make the investment safe against loss. Owing to the ruling of the Government against trafficking in War Savings Stamps we can not well receive these unless the same are converted or registered in the name of Ashland College.

A. C. HENDRICKSON,
Business Manager of Ashland College.

Present Day Revelations

dence not of its truth but of its being the counterfeit of true religion. For while it was capable of doing that which might seem miraculous, these "miracles" were within carefully defined limits. They were far from being of the nature of the stupendous miracles by which the prophets proved themselves to be messengers of God but were exactly what those prophets declared would be done by an evil system. One evidence of the gulf between the two systems is furnished by the prophecies of Scripture and the attempts of Spiritualists to prove they can foretell events. The predictions of the Bible reach down the ages and can only be explained as being the utterances of Omniscience. The continued existence of the Jews as a distinct people through more than eighteen centuries, the present state of many countries and cities, and the life of Christ, all the subject of prophecy, are among the evidences by which the religion of the Bible is supported. When Spiritualists today can present evidence of prophetic insight, when, for example, they can describe in advance of their occurrence historical events similar to those of the Bible by predicting which the Jewish prophets proved their inspiration, we shall be in a better state of mind to listen patiently to their claim that the prophets of old were like the spirit mediums of today.

Abundant evidence exists that Spiritualism is not a means of benefiting humanity. Dr. B. P. Randolph, a prominent Spiritualist of some years ago, said: "For seven years I held daily intercourse with what purported to be my mother's spirit. I am now firmly persuaded that it was nothing but an evil spirit. . . Five of my friends destroyed themselves and I attempted it by direct spirit influences."

The late Dr. Isaac B. Funk, who spent many years in an endeavor to learn the meaning of spiritistic phenomena, said he found no sufficient reason to believe that "the communicating intelligences (from the spirit world) are the personalities they claim to be."

C. F. Gordon Cumming once wrote in "Blackwood's," "From what I can gather I infer that the whole question of Spiritualism is full of difficulty; that those who start on the endeavor to follow it out soon find themselves plunged into an intricate labyrinth, from which escape becomes more and more hopeless the further they advance—a labyrinth in which light becomes darkness and in which they who once enter are beguiled ever onward, in the vain hope of grasping something tangible, which forever eludes their quest."

The late H. L. Hastings once said, "China, India and Africa are full of spiritual manifestations and they can be traced through the darkness of the heathen world—a darkness which they have done nothing to dispel. . . China, where every house has its ancestral tablets which are worshipped, and where for years neither railways nor telegraphs could be permitted for fear of interfering with their grandfathers' graves or their grandmothers' ghosts, has lain stagnant for ages under the brooding wings of these ill-omened birds of night, notwithstanding spirits and spirit mediums were found on every hand. . . The barbarism and degradation of . . . heathen lands is largely the consequence of believing this 'new' gospel of Spiritualism, which is older than Pharaoh's mummy."

The BRETHREN EVANGELIST

- ONE - IS - YOUR - MASTER - AND - ALL - YE - ARE - BRETHREN -

MY MASTER

I had walked life's paths with easy tread,
Had followed where comfort and pleasure led;
And then by chance in a quiet place
I met my Master, face to face.

With station and rank and wealth for a goal,
Much thought for the body, but none for the soul,
I had entered to win in life's mad race,
When I met my Master, face to face.

I had built my castles, and reared them high,
Till their towers had pierced the blue of the sky;
I had sworn to rule with iron mace,
When I met my Master, face to face.

I met Him and knew Him and blushed to see
That his eyes, full of sorrow, were fixed on me;
And I faltered and fell at His feet that day,
While my castles melted and vanished away;

Melted and vanished, and in their place
I saw naught else but my Master's face;
And I cried aloud: "O make me meet
To follow the marks of thy wounded feet!"

My thought is now for the souls of men.
I have lost my life to find it again,
E'er since alone in that holy place
My Master and I stood, face to face.

One Small Fruit of the World War

One of the shrewdest pieces of propaganda accompanying the late war that was carried on in the interest of the sale of tobaccos and cigarettes. It is needless to speculate upon what interests were back of the propaganda. The surprise of it all is that such a great host of well-meaning people and benevolent institutions could be brought to serve so faithfully, even though possibly unwittingly, the interests of those who profited so enormously by the sale of cigarettes. But those things are history now and it is without profit to lament them. What is written on the pages of history must forever remain written. Our concern is about the abiding effects and the vicious habits that remain with us.

Cigarette smoking was never so prevalent as now. Everywhere it is indulged in and everywhere it is encouraged. He who cannot smoke is looked upon with pity or is the object of considerable ridicule in some quarters. Cigarettes are the supremely popular thing, but cigars and pipes also are by no means unpopular. Every man is supposed to know how to smoke. A fancy for a cigar instead of a cigarette may be endured, but he is hardly genuinely masculine who will not or cannot enjoy the "fragrant weed" in some form or other. Smoking was not such a rage before the war as it is now. Cigarettes, especially were being put under the ban. But they secured a new lease of life on the plea of a war comfort and necessity. It was remarkable what intellectual somersaults popular sentiment and even much medical opinion took in order to approve in the name of tobacco interests' vaunted patriotism what they had formerly opposed. And those same concerns are keeping up their advertising schemes. The prominent figures in the fashion plates are of well-dressed young men with cigar or cigarette held jauntily between dainty fingers. The hero of magazine article or popular novel is shown carelessly inhaling the incense of the popular weed. He who has never indulged finds it almost impossible to win a place in the coveted social circles without learning the "art." He finds that nearly all the gatherings for men are known as "smokers"; the obviously expected thing of those who go is to smoke. He finds powerful commercial interests ready to supply pipes and tobacco free of cost for young men's gatherings. He finds the most attractive advertisements and the most costly prizes adroitly designed to increase the use of tobacco. In every conceivable way there is subtle and designing influence to make it more and more difficult for young men to refrain from smoking.

But why should it concern us so much if the smoking habit does increase? One thing that makes it so serious is the fact that the habit once formed is altogether likely to become permanent. The real question is not, Shall I smoke or not smoke now? but Shall I smoke or not smoke through life with all that it means to me and my family? The effects of tobacco and especially cigarettes are acknowledged by unprejudiced physiological authorities to be greatly injurious. But the effects of tobacco and cigarettes are not confined to the user. The offspring of the inveterate cigarette smoker is weakened by the poison in the father's system. The babe in arms whose father smokes in its face is taking early lessons in the tobacco habit. It is little wonder that many a woman frankly admits that she enjoys the smell of a good cigar, she is brought up to it; and the young man thus brought up can hardly escape the habit. Tobacco smoke is exceedingly offensive to most people not addicted to the habit, especially is this true of cigarette smoke. Yet they must frequently endure the nuisance without complaint. In hotel lobbies and dining rooms the habit is not only permitted but encouraged by making every convenience possible for the sale and lighting of cigars and cigarettes. Everywhere the smoking habit tends powerfully to the selfish overriding of the rights of others. Moreover smoking is an expensive habit, and a waste of money that might be very profitably spent for the comfort and welfare of the family. To the wealthy or well-to-do, this item may be of little consequence, yet most men have more or less difficulty in "making both ends meet." And if an expense account is kept or a fair estimate is made by the average smoker, he will find that he could buy a good library, or clothing for himself and family or even a Ford with the amount he spends in smoke. Most smokers of middle age will confess that it is an expensive habit and will advise young men not to begin it. The common advice is, "Leave the weed alone while you can." Usually those who encourage smoking and induce others to begin the habit are young, dashing, natty fellows, who by ridicule, counsel or example appeal to their young fellow-devotees struggling by every conceivable device to imitate, often absurdly, their conception of the ideal man of the world.

But the revival of the smoking habit is not confined to men and boys alone. Dr. Eugene Davenport, Dean of the College of Agriculture of the University of Illinois, who is taking a prominent part in the fight against the spread of this vicious habit, says, "A half century ago women smoked as freely as men, and I am bound to say that they threaten now to resume the habit." If men continue to increase their indulgence, the growth of the habit among women is bound to follow; and what smoking man can object? Dr. Davenport continues:

If smoking is good for men, and altogether desirable for them, then it is equally good and desirable for women. There is, and can be, no good argument against it; yet I never heard a man admit that he desired a smoking woman for a wife. Why not? Is smoking a privilege to be denied to women? Not so, in these piping days of liberty. Men can not go on indulging in any form of male intolerance without having it speedily initiated, first by their sons and afterward by their daughters.

Do we want the smoking habit fastened upon our women? If so we are in a fair way to have it. If not, we shall need to do some steady thinking, and that speedily. Are the women so much more refined than we, and will their refinement protect them against a habit that we do not approve—for them? At this point even the smoker is in danger of being driven into an admission that the habit is unworthy of thoughtful men.

Here then are some of the considerations that the young man must weigh in the balance over against the seductions of a social habit: Its characteristic drug effect; its probable permanence as a personal habit; its cost as compared with the necessities of life; the fact that in general smokers do not advise it; the fact that it is a habit the effects of which reach all who are in the vicinity; its real offensiveness to many, likely a full three-fourths of all the people; its effects upon little children; its undoubted influence upon the finer sensibilities as to courtesy; the condition in which it leaves one in old age, with impaired physical powers and dependence upon others; its inevitable extension to women if the habit continues and is brought into general practise through enforced tolerance; the spectacle of a woman addicted to the use of tobacco as a wife and mother of little ones—all these will be considered by the thoughtful man who has a fair opportunity to think it out before beginning to smoke.

If, after due consideration of all the facts, the man decides to smoke, he must be conceded the right to do so; but this right implies corresponding duties, and his plain obligation is so to practise his habit as not to offend others in any way. If he is certain that he can and will do this, not only now but during all his life let him smoke; and may God bless him.

Don't forget to send your church news to the editor, there are nearly five thousand subscribers anxious to get word from your church. Be sure to address all matter for publication to George S. Baer, Editor of The Brethren Evangelist, 145 College Avenue, Ashland, Ohio, and he will get it promptly. Send all business to R. R. Teeter, Business Manager, Brethren Publishing Co.

Note: Some months ago, we requested through the kind offices of Brother L. S. Bauman, an article from Prof. B. P. Stout of California on "Music as a Factor in Evangelism." Prof. Stout stated that writing articles was not in his line, but he requested a very dear friend of his to write the article.

Sister Detwiler has an interesting letter of appeal in this issue in behalf of the Spokane, Washington, mission. Her heart is certainly in that work as well as in the Baltimore mission. If there were many hearts yearning just as much for the success of the Spokane building project as is Sister Detwiler's, the remaining $2000.00 would be supplied as quickly as Uncle Sam could carry the money to Brother Miller. Read her letter and do what God would have you do.

Dr. Jacobs was in attendance at the Maryland-Virginia conference held at Linwood, Maryland, June 3-6. He speaks very warmly of his reception there and is greatly enthused as to the support the college will receive from that district. This will make Brother Beachler itch to get out there after college endowment. Well, we feel sure that some of the staunchest supporters of Brethrenism in the brotherhood are among the good people of the extreme southeastern district. We shall look forward to a report of this successful conference.

Brother Brower gives us an interesting report of certain special features of his work at Huntington, Indiana. The revival meeting led by Brother A. E. Thomas stands out most prominently. It was a great success and was closed with a communion service and a reception to the new members and a farewell to the Thomases. He also tells of a very happy "surprise" prayer meeting and some accompaniments, also of being retained as pastor for another year at an increase in salary. If our churches will keep up this salary raising proposition for a while it will not be so hard to keep pastors, or to induce young men to enter the ministry. Finances never should be a dominating influence in the decisions of the minister or the prospective minister, but provisions for one's own both in the present and the future must ever be taken into consideration.

Another interesting letter from the careful pen of Brother A. P. Reed comes to us concerning the work of the First church of Los Angeles, California. Their revival conducted by their pastor, Brother N. W. Jennings was a grand success. The new members were welcomed by a public reception. There are still rumors about a new building. It seems to be becoming more of a certainty with each report. May it be so.

Brother DeLozier reports for the church at Allentown, Pa. He speaks of a church federation in that city, a simultaneous evangelistic campaign and of the successful meeting conducted for him and his people by Brother I. D. Bowman. Brother DeLozier is doing a noble work in that eastern city and his people are catching an enthusiasm for missions and a zeal for giving that proves that the spirit that pervades their pastor is contagious and that his teaching is bearing fruit.

Our little African missionary, Marguerite Gribble, by the hand of her mother gives us another interesting account of experiences that should make the Brethren children in America more appreciative of the protection and security of the homeland and be more willing to sacrifice to help those who are sacrificing so much to carry the Gospel story to the ignorant black brothers of Africa. It may be that they are even now permitted to go on their way to their appointed place of work.

Brother Homer Anderson is now giving his full time to the Lord's work at Poplar Grove and College Corner. He speaks highly of his new church, Poplar Grove, and we hope both pastor and people shall be able to work together a long time for the glory of God and the salvation of many souls. He is still a loyal supporter of the Evangelist and we are looking forward to the pleasure of sending the church paper to every member of the Poplar Grove church in the near future. If the Honor Roll can be gained for Poplar Grove, we believe Brother Anderson can put it across.

Our many readers will be pleased to learn that we are planning to print Dr. J. M. Tombaugh's splendid articles written during the past quarter on the Sunday school topics in booklet form. They are of such value that our people will be glad to have them in a little binding convenient for preservation. They deal with the fundamentals of the Christian religion and are something that will be permanently valuable to all. We will be able to announce in the near future more definitely as to price and possible date of readiness for sale. Those who may be interested in securing copies for themselves or for their churches may write the editor what they think about the proposition.

We promised our readers at the beginning of the present quarter that we would have further announcement to make concerning the Sunday school topics of the third quarter. We have arranged for twelve representative men of the brotherhood to write on the topics for the coming quarter, as they deal with topics that are to be made more or less distinctly denominational. It is our hope to publish them later in booklet form. Then we have in mind another booklet to be published from Evangelist contributions still later. These we are hoping to bring out as BI-CENTENNIAL EDITIONS OF THE BRETHREN LIBRARY. It is time we were building up a Brethren literature. What do you say about the project?

Brother E. M. Cobb of Dayton, recently visited the mission work in Kentucky in conjunction with Brother Carpenter, president of the Home Board and Brother Bowman, secretary-treasurer, and in this issue gives the report we promised our readers last week. The report discloses one who is able to grasp readily the larger possibilities of the field. Such reports give us a just pride in our work there and at the same time cause us to feel the greatness of the responsibility for further development, as the possibilities reveal themselves to us. If all the needs and possibilities Brother Cobb mentions, and many of which our faithful president, Brother Carpenter, has frequently mentioned, could be realized, what a wonderful power Lost Creek and Krypton would become.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Crucified Christ, Our Example. By H. L. Goughnour

It seems that there is something unheroic, soft and unconvincing in the type of Christianity that prevails today. There was a time when the name "Christian" called up images of the dungeon and the stake. Even in the decadent Middle Ages that name reminded men of poverty, chastity and obedience. Today Christianity means nothing to millions of persons except a certificate of baptism and the hope of miraculous salvation at the hour of death.

Insufficient emphasis upon the ethical character of Christian life certainly is in part responsible for this. When men have come to us asking, "What shall we do to be saved?" we have answered, "Believe in Jesus Christ, be baptized, join the church and observe the ordinances." Of course, we have tried to preach that man shall be ethical. But we have demanded that men shall be baptized and join the church. Quite naturally the conclusion has arisen that belief and obedience to ordinances constitute the essential element in the making of a Christian while life, morals and service are of secondary importance.

This article is not an attempt to denounce any type of individual or any class. It is a humble effort to proclaim that there is a note in the teachings of Jesus that has not been sounded sufficiently.

Is it possible that when Jesus died upon the cross in behalf of others, he intended to give an example that all his followers should in spirit emulate? Are we to serve others at the cost of sacrifice? Is it essential to a genuinely Christian life that we do so?

In the 16th chapter of Matthew's gospel, it is recorded that Jesus said, "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me. For whosoever would save his life shall lose it: and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it."

This is rigorous teaching. Further still, it is glorious teaching. It has within it the challenge that would make Christian life possesses mighty and heroic meaning. No insignificant thing is the Christian life if the Christian life is in essence a crucified life.

"If any man would come after me." How inclusive the language! Think what tremendous emphasis would be placed upon the expression of the Master's, "any man," were back of any ordinance practiced by any denomination.

"Let him deny himself." This means, let him say "No" to self, slay selfishness in his own heart and life.

"Take up his cross." This means, consent to his own crucifixion and start on the way to Golgotha.

"And follow me." He was a Man of prayer and of holy life, a Friend to all, a great Physician, a suffering Servant, the Man of sorrows, the Crucified. He said "follow me!"

It becomes apparent, in the light of this scripture, that Jesus considered his life of service and his crucifixion as constituting a mighty example in heroic sacrifice which is to be followed by all his disciples. This is a phase of the Master's teaching that has been cruelly ignored.

Is there anything the world needs today so much as a powerful group of persons who will really sacrifice in behalf of humanity's salvation from sin, spiritual development and general welfare? It seems not. The regeneration of men must be purchased by sacrifice on the part of some. Christians might adopt this sacrificial attitude, and spend themselves for the spiritual regeneration of mankind. Doing so would simply be following in the Master's steps. Also, it would contribute significance to the matter of being a Christian.

Would Christians lose anything by adopting this sacrificial attitude? Yes. They would lose much of ease, wealth and pleasure—the very things that constitute life for many, perhaps most persons. But Jesus said, "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

During the recent war thousands of persons learned that in sacrifice life's supreme glory is found. A graduate student of Columbia University wrote, "I am sitting in a dugout, 10 feet under ground with a telephone on a box before me. I am waiting for a call for reserves. At any moment a shell may crash upon our position. When we are called, we may never return. But I for one—and many other fellows say the same—know that I am really living for the first time in my life." Yes, in heroism life's supreme joy is hidden, and the indispensable element in heroism is sacrifice.

In some manner the element of sacrifice, that has dignified life and revealed its glory and joy to millions during the past four years, must be built into modern Christian experience. Without it the so-called Christian character will develop more and more trashiness of fibre. The name "Christian" will become more and more insignificant and meaningless. The name will become an insignia of disgrace.

The remedy is not hard to find. Loyalty to Christ and his teachings will work the miracle. It alone will do so. It, therefore, becomes important to us to remember that the divine life, no matter by whom lived, is a life of sacrificial service, and that the crucifixion of Christ was an example in exalted heroism for all of his followers.

The New Subject for Evangelism. By H. H. Wolford

The subject as above stated presents a paradox in that there are no new subjects for evangelism. All subjects for evangelism since the days of Jesus have been the same; but the emphasis needs to be put in a new place. Much of the evangelism of the Christian church has had to do with adults and vast sums of money have been spent in reaching men and women who have gone far away from God and have been hard to win back. The children, with whom this subject has to do, have been woefully neglected. In fact, the church has overlooked the evangelization of those easy to reach and who should have been saved from drifting into sin and neglect of their spiritual life. We ought to be, indeed must be, interested in saving the child before they need to be rescued. The place of the child was given to it by the Master himself when he said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of heaven." It has only been in recent years that many in the church have been willing even to suffer the little children to come into the kingdom, let alone making any effort to bring them in. One of the emphases of religious education today is to save the child before he becomes a sinner and needs to be rescued. We are thinking today about the child as growing up in the kingdom rather than thinking of him as outside the kingdom and then putting forth efforts, many of which are wrong, to bring him into the kingdom. In the light of the teaching of Jesus, we believe that the little child is a member of the kingdom of God, without sin and pure in the sight of God. If this be true, then why not put forth every effort to keep him in the kingdom? Indeed, many children believe that they are members of the church, although they have not been formally received. A certain mother asked her boy if he did not want to unite with the church. With a surprised look upon his face the boy looked up at his mother and said,

"Mother, I have always believed that I was a member of the church." Our children all speak of "our church" as if they were a part of it. If they in their innocence are members of the kingdom, why are they not members of the church? Is it not therefore our business to see to it that they are so taught and directed as to come into the church formally without ever having been considered sinners and non-members of the kingdom. This in no way belittles the atonement of Jesus Christ nor does it exclude what we call conversion. That a child thus brought into the church may never pass through a conversion experience like that of a hardened sinner in no way makes it less real. The child may not understand all the great questions of theological dogma, but if rightly taught he will understand that he is taking Jesus as his example and pattern of life and may be led to do and be what Jesus wants him to be. All students of the problems of childhood and youth are agreed that the period of adolescence is the great period of conversion and the hosts of the church today are made up of those who came into the church during this period. While this is the fruitful age, most of the churches of Protestantism have been woefully neglectful of their opportunity. Indeed we have been more neglectful than savage and ancient pagan religions were.

The attempt to do something for children and youth at the period of adolescence is almost as old as the race. Among savage tribes every boy was initiated into the tribal life during this period. Lectures were given him by the leaders of the tribe. Tribal secrets were revealed to him and after certain tests he was accepted as a full member of the tribe and took his place alongside his forebears. Whatever of religion was practiced in the tribe was taught him at this time.

The two countries most careful of their youth in classical antiquity were Greece and Rome. In Greece the youth was taken under tutorage and trained for the state. At eighteen a majority was attained and upon taking an oath was given some task for his fatherland. Part of the oath was as follows, "I will never bring disgrace to these arms, nor desert the man next me in the ranks, but will fight for the sanctities and for the common good, both alone and with others. I will listen always to those who have the power of decision, and obey existing laws and all others which the people shall agree in ordaining. I will honor the religion of my native land, witness the gods, Ares, Zeus, Thallo, Auxo and Hegemone, etc." Here religion was a significant part of the instruction of youth. Similar instruction was given to the youth of Rome.

But among the Jews religious instruction reached its highest perfection among the nations of antiquity. Here instruction is all dominated by the religious motive. The Jewish father was responsible for his son's acts during his earlier years. Early in adolescence by a confirmation service he attained his religious majority. The Jews were persistent in the training of their children in their homes in their religious beliefs and traditions. After the confirmation ceremony the Jewish boy took his place in certain religious ceremonies and could wear his own phylacteries.

In the first century or more of the Christian church, teachers and leaders gave most of their attention to adults but it was not long until the child and youth began to have some consideration. Catechumens were carefully instructed before being received into the church, and after reception into the church. Confirmation was made one of the seven sacraments of the Catholic church. The preparation for this confirmation was learning the catechism. Similar confirmation is regarded in the Greek Russian church as well as the Episcopal church in England and America. The same is also true of the Lutheran church.

But when we come to the Protestant Evangelical churches, no special provision was made for the instruction of youth in things religious. Especially has this been true until comparatively recent times. The fact that many children received no instruction at all led Robert Raikes to establish the Sunday school. This modern institution has verily been the teaching service of the church, and in many churches exclusively so.

Before the days of the Sunday school, the children were for the most part neglected and it was even thought that children under twelve years of age could not be received into the church. Those older than twelve were many times scared into the church by the presentation of the ideas of an angry God and the torments of an awful hell. As the Sunday school movement advanced, the leaders began to see the importance of teaching the children concerning the fatherhood of God and the love and compassion of Christ in order that they might be led to a definite decision to follow him and become members of the church. Today in our own and in many other denominations, the only serious effort to win and keep the children within the kingdom is done by the Sunday school. But even here the effort has often been spasmodic and without any definite plan in view. Decision day introduced into the Sunday school a few years ago has until quite recently, if not wholly so until now, been only an effort to bring children into the church by a concerted effort covering a period of a few days, or at most one or two weeks. Many times during a revival service the evangelist has called upon the teachers to prepare their pupils for a certain Sunday when by a dramatic appeal the children are gathered in. This many times becomes a "follow the leader method." While this is a method that needs criticism, the writer is not saying that good results have not been obtained. Certainly it is not the most sane and practical method of bringing the children into the church. Decision day should be observed but let it be the culmination of a year or of years of instruction.

The curriculum of the school should be so built as to present to the child such instruction from year to year and from period to period, as will lead him to the acceptance of Christ as his Savior and Guide. Instead of evangelism being thought of by the school for a few days previous to decision day, let it be the thought, aim and prayer of the teachers from the kindergarten through all the grades until the pupils have decided for Christ. This plan it seems to me is both rational and practical and will prove effective for us as it has for others. Of course our teaching should not simply be in precept but in service also. The pupil who not only knows but has had the joy of service, will want to identify himself with his Lord and will want to be a member of the church which will give him the larger opportunity for such service.

If this be the method of instruction what shall be the material of instruction? The Bible of course must and always will be the text book for instruction. The word of God can never be displaced as The Book containing the material for the religious instruction of youth. We will need to meet the questions of human life as we now live in the world but the Bible, though an old book, contains the teaching material for every age and condition of men. The application of the truths of the Word will necessarily have to be in the language of the world in which we live. Illustrations used to bring home the truth must be taken from the surrounding life. The Master Teacher has given us the example by drawing his parables and illustrations from nature and the common life of the world in which he lived. A Bible text for the child containing a truth which he can comprehend illustrated by stories and incidents of his own surrounding is only using the method of the Master.

Granted the Bible is the text book, the best material for the instruction of our Sunday school pupils that they may be led to Christ and his service is, to the writer's mind, the closely graded lessons. No other system so perfectly considers the child and his need as these. No system so wisely provides for the teaching that will lead the pupil to the acceptance of Christ as the closely graded. We will admit that they are not perfect, nor are they claimed to be, but they are the best that have as yet been produced. For our own church, our Sunday School board is recommending the use of the closely graded lessons published by the Methodist Book Concern. Having none of our own, these lessons after careful investigation are recommended as being the best on the market for our needs. Where our own particular doctrines are to be taught the opportunity is presented the teacher to supplement the lesson. Indeed the day must soon come when we will put these or other closely graded lessons in our own binding with our imprimatur and supplemented by lessons for our own particular needs. These lessons in the hands of consecrated teachers, though not trained, are bound to bring better results in the saving of our children.

But the new evangelism must not be left to the Sunday school alone. The church must do her part. Heretofore the church has looked upon the Sunday school as an auxiliary and not a vital part of the church. "The Church school" is a better name but it must be a church school in which the church is vitally interested. We are very careful to build our churches so that the adult membership is rightly and comfortably cared for. Carpeted floors, cushioned pews, artglass windows, pipe organs, vested choirs and many other conveniences and helpful adjuncts conducive to worship have been prepared for adults, but the dark basement or back rooms have been good enough for our children. House plants must be put in the sun and rain during the summer and placed in a warm room by the big window in winter, but the growing, budding child created in the image of God has been neglected by the church. Thank God that some churches are waking up to the fact that children need some consideration, if we are to keep them for the kingdom of God. A furniture dealer puts his most beautiful pieces in the front room and front windows. His repair shop is in the rear, usually surrounded by dust and litter. What would we think of him if he placed his repair shop in the front room and displayed his broken furniture in the front window, while his beautiful and untarnished mahogany and bird's eye maple were kept in the dusty dark room in the rear? Yet this is what the church has been doing, the beautiful auditorium is for the old, and those sadly needing repair and coddling, while the untarnished and pure, the future hope of the church have been kept in the rear. Is it any wonder we have not led our children to love the church and give allegiance to Christ?

The new evangelism calls for a recognition of the child in its desire for the beautiful and in the demand of the age that we care for him. If children are given more attention now it will not require the thousands of dollars spent in evangelistic campaigns and the shedding of blood by thousands of workers to rescue the fallen. "Train up the child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it," is an old proverb but is now coming into its full meaning in the new evangelism through education and service. "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me" was never truer than now. The Christ rightly presented to the child will lead him to unchanging allegiance to him through all life.

Our Great Objective. By L. G. Wood

The great objective of an institution is certainly of supreme importance to the individuals composing it. Nothing so emphasizes the place and power of an institution in the world as its objective. The questions first in the minds of thinking people concerning any institution are, "What has it set out to accomplish? What does it stand for? What does it hope to achieve?" Have we as a denomination such an objective? Has not Brethrenism a great objective of which we may be justly proud? Is not every worker in the church looking, from his own viewpoint, toward the one great objective?

In this great objective we must find a common center of united purpose and endeavor for the challenging needs of a lost world, unto which the Gospel of grace must be presented. The writer is not an enthusiast for the federation of churches to the extent of the centralization of control, but highly in favor of it to the extent of a more hearty and fraternal co-operation, in order to meet the great issues of our present time. But certainly the present as never before is calling for denominational UNITY in order to Christian loyalty. If we can seriously consider the issues to be met, and then become absorbed in the one great objective of Brethrenism, our diversities will diminish and charity will increase. Does not each goal of the Four Year Program point toward the great objective? Should not these give unity to all of our efforts and charity in all diversity?

Jesus Christ gave the church a very condensed statement of his program as found in Matthew 28:19-20,—"Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations." Several years afterward Paul in his letter to the Ephesians (4:13), gave the interpretation of that program in a grand summary,—"Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." These words of the great apostle are held up before each of us, whether apostle, prophet, evangelist, pastor or teacher, for they are all addressed in verse eleven.

One of the old time slogans of the Brethren church is "Unity in essentials and charity in all things," and in these reconstructive days it is timely and necessary that we emphasize these essentials rather than the way we have come up to them. There are diversities of experiences and view points; who would have it otherwise? Is not this the fruit of the element out of which we have come? Our whole Bible position requires each of us to think for himself, in order to appreciate and live worthy of such position. Charity should blend those diversities as the colors of the rainbow are blended.

If the writer understands anything about the spirit of the present day, it is demanding of us a solid and united front. With our hearts and hands fixed upon the great objective, and with such a drive as outlined by the Four Year Program, we have superlative opportunities for great achievements. There need be no disadvantage in our being a small denomination, for even that fact should promote unity and be capable of quicker action. Many of the large denominations of America are now launching their drives for reconstruction, while ours began in 1917.

Brethren, what we need is to keep our hearts and our minds charged with the spirit of the living God, who is love, and march forward in the line of battle, "keeping step with the Master" and with each other, having our ambition centered upon the one great task—achieving "perfect manhood" through the redeeming blood of Jesus Christ. Let us again hear the great apostle, "For brethren ye have been called unto liberty, only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another." Is not this the "measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ?"

Don't think of your differences
But think of your aim,
Your differences will vanish;
Your aim will be won
No man sees his shadow,
Who faces the sun.

Report of the Sunday School Contest. By H. L. Goughnour

The final reports of the Four-month Contest of Brethren Sunday schools have been drifting in slowly. Some of the reports which I knew were due have just arrived, and I have decided to wait no longer for the others, although there are some from which I wish I might have heard before sending this final report.

Far more important than the prizes offered, or that certain schools have outdistanced others is the fact that all the competing schools report that they were greatly benefited by the contest. This is, of course, the supreme end for which the contest was planned. That it was definitely attained the letters which accompany practically all the reports leave no doubt.

It happens not infrequently that those who start some altruistic project ultimately get it in the neck. The direction of a rebound is always hard to determine. The Waterloo school, that issued the challenge, did not win one of the prizes. Of course we don't care. In a way it would have been kind of nice to win a prize; but really we don't care. We would have been sort of glad to beat the Ashland school, because Brother Beachler boasted so much what Ashland was going to do to us. Now that the contest is over, however, we don't care at all! If we had not been so busy getting ready to beat to a frazzle every other congregation that has yet been canvassed on College Endowment, we might have been able to win one of these little Sunday school prizes! But, for a fact, we don't care. (The reader need not say, "Sour grapes," either!).

Milledgeville wins the $100.00 prize by taking first place. Ashland takes the $50.00 prize and Muncie, Indiana, takes the $25.00 prize. We feel that these schools need the money, so we congratulate them most heartily. Out here in Black Hawk county, Iowa, we haven't spent all our money in building good roads, so we had to suffer in this contest; but we did have some money for Ashland College endowment. Well, "La, la, la, Cest le guerre!"

Following is the list of schools that have made a final report. They are arranged in the order of their standing:

School	Points Gained
Milledgeville, Illinois,	80
Ashland, Ohio,	79
Muncie, Indiana,	78
Elkhart, Indiana,	74
Waterloo, Iowa,	72
Spokane, Washington,	72
La Verne, California,	60
Leon, Iowa,	52
Johnstown, Pennsylvania,	47

The number of points it was possible to gain is 85. In view of this the winning schools and Elkhart did marvelously well. Several of the other competing schools faced peculiar difficulties at certain periods during the four months. I am sure that all the schools that have lost rejoice in the fine showing that the winning schools have made. All of us have profited and have gained greater interest in each other's work because of the contest. Sometime we shall try it again. Love to all.

Music as a Factor in Evangelism. By Edwin MacMinn

Evangelism is a complex method of securing the adoption of ideas and the conformity of life to that ideal which the Master himself has asked of the world. No one feature will do all the work and yet the various features of the work like that of the face are essential to present that perfect beauty that attracts and wins the beholder. One of these parts of course is prayer; another is the preaching of the Word; another is exhortation; another is personal affection; another is persistent solicitation; yet there is among them still another. And that must not be overlooked, for it is often the very soul of the movement, is music. If we were all trained in quiet meditation without the need of outside inspiration, we might not need music, but we have been trained otherwise. We naturally express our emotions in some way of using the voice and according to the physical nature God has given us, diversify that use. A little child will express itself by variation of tones before it can speak words.

In all conditions of thought a person will seek expression in this way. Such as the crooning of the old Mamie over the fireplace. The rugged wood chopper out in the woods alone hewing down the giant tree, will shout and sing at it as he conquers the task before him. In the army while going over the top our American Dough boys shouted and sang as they steadily forced the enemy back. In moments of deep distress there will be a sad wail, and even the animal creation shows the power of expression when out of the darkness comes the long protracted howling, that if from a wolf frightens the lonely farmers' household and if from a dog may signify deep grief at the loss of a master or of a friend. Now in a meeting for evangelism there are minds in all conditions that have been wrought upon partly by one thing and partly by another. It may be they are moved by fervent prayer, or by the fierce onslaught of a preacher predicting the flames of judgment, or it may be there is a sweet calm that has come upon the meeting from a consciousness of the immediate presence of the Holy Spirit. But in all of these there is expression, and song renders it better than in any other way.

If the heart is joyful then how it is lifted into a higher realm by songs of joy and sunshine. If there is a calm waiting on God and a subdued state of the soul how a sweet song of submission and tender faith soothes and blesses. If it is a charge against the enemy of the soul, then what power there is in the outrushing of tones of triumph that nothing can resist. There are times in every meeting when a song of the proper kind at the right moment will turn the tide and carry the day for the soul and the Master.

Perhaps one trouble is that many people are not discriminating and will give out anything that is a song entirely irrespective of its adaptability to the specific occasion. As for example, a man once, when a song of great force and triumph was needed, gave out, "I would be a Sunbeam." When it should have been "Wake all the trumpets of the Heavenly Hosts."

People in general need to be instructed in this matter of sacred song. Many people who claim to be leaders of song, are utterly out of harmony with true song. For instance, a man while leading a service of song will ramble from soprano to tenor and back again until the most of the people get utterly confused as to the rich effects of the beautiful melody and its power over the soul. Again there are people who cut verses from a hymn entirely irrespective of the development of the theme in the hymn. Usually they will say, "Omit the third verse." Why? Simply to shorten the hymn. Now that often ruins the thought conveyed by the hymn. It may be that a hymn for special purposes, can be shortened by cutting out a verse that does not harmonize with the sentiment to be conveyed, or there is one verse that contains a complete thought in itself, then it would be proper to cut out verses. But when the writer of the hymn has placed before us a completed appeal and it is symmetrical and instructive and at the same time soul stirring, to cut such a hymn is a serious offense against not only propriety but against the spirit of the meeting, and the hymn has failed to do its part in the stirring of the soul for God.

We should know our hymn books. They are not the

"Joint Heirs With Christ." By Samuel Kiehl

TEXT: And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be glorified together.—ROMANS 8:17.

Jesus says, Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother (Matt. 12:50). That sinners receive Christ as their Savior and Lord is the Father's will. The inference from our text is that Christ is the believer's elder brother.

"Ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you (Rom. 8:9). From these words we learn that those who have the Spirit of God dwelling in them, are living in the spirit. "If we live in the spirit, let us also walk in the spirit" (Gal. 5:25). If living and walking in the spirit, we are spiritual men and women.

"The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him." His mind is not subject to the law of God (Rom. 8:7). He has only the spirit of man in him (1 Cor. 2:11). The spiritual man has the spirit of man in him, also the Spirit of God, which he received when he believed in, and accepted Christ as his Savior and Lord.

Believers are subjects for baptism (Acts 8:37). Take notice! The only promise of salvation upon record, given by the Savior, after his resurrection and before his ascension, is to those who believe and are baptized (Matt. 16:16). Such spirit-filled, baptized believers are a select class, "a peculiar people."

When Cornelius' family and friends (after hearing the word of God spoken by Peter) had received the Holy Ghost (to place them into this select class), Peter said, "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? (Acts 10:47). Only those who have the Spirit of God dwelling in them are members of that class; and being led by the Spirit of God, are sons of God (Rom. 8:14).

But let us not conclude that because we are sons, we are therefore joint heirs with Christ, as some writers, and others seem to teach when they tell us that we are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; placing a period after the word Christ, not quoting the concluding conditional clause, "if so be that we suffer with him."

We had a suffering Savior. Where are the suffering saints? or are we apparently soaring heavenward "on flowery beds of ease while others fought to win the prize (joint heirship), and sailed through bloody seas?"

The Prodigal's experience shows that not every saved soul is a joint heir with Christ, our elder brother. Before he left his father's house he was joint heir, with his elder brother, of his father's estate. After asking for, and receiving the portion of goods that belonged to him, he went into a far country and wasted his substance in riotous living. When his money was all gone he returned to his former home, was kindly received by his father, but was no longer joint heir with his elder brother, for the father said to his elder brother, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine" (Luke 15:31). Nothing is left for the returned Prodigal. After the feast (having nothing of his own upon which to subsist), although clothed in the best robe, a ring on his hand and shoes on his feet (if unable to work to pay for his board), the world will call him a pauper; but the father will say, Is not this a brand plucked out of the fire? (Zech. 3:2). There is not statement in the word that the Prodigal tried to overcome the temptation to spend his money in riotous living. He was a failure.

Jesus says, To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne (Rev. 3:21). The one who can sit with Jesus in his throne, "in the sweet by and by," is the joint heir with him, according to the "Word."

Let us not be deceived, the only way to become "joint heirs with Christ" is to pay the price. We shall be "joint heirs with Christ if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together" (Rom. 8:17). "No cross, no crown."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

We Must Count the Cost. By T. R. Atkinson

OUR SCRIPTURE

"And when Jesus heard it, he said unto him, one thing thou lackest yet; sell all thou hast, and distribute to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come, follow me. But when he heard these things, he became exceedingly sorrowful; for he was very rich." Luke 18:22-23.

OUR MEDITATION

We must count the cost of discipleship, Jesus invites us to follow him, but he requires us to take into consideration the great standards or principles, which he requires his followers to achieve.

Jesus made the requirements for salvation clear to this rich young man. He counted the cost and his heart was filled with sorrow, for he was unwilling to make a complete surrender to God. He wanted to follow the Master but he was unwilling to give him the first place in his heart.

What does Jesus require of us? Jesus requires us to count the cost of discipleship. Why? Because his standards have not changed, neither has man's disposition changed. If we think more of the world than of Jesus, we cannot be his disciple. Some twelve hundred years before the Hope of Israel was realized, before the sweet voice from heaven with the descent of the dove, said, "This is my beloved Son," God on the height of smoke-veiled Sinai, laid down that unchanging command, "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me." For over three thousand years God has been trying to teach this truth to men. We are sorry to have to confess that it is no uncommon thing to see men who have not counted the cost of discipleship; they are of all men most miserable; they seek to cling to God with one hand and hold to the world with the other. "No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." After the defeats and victories of the wilderness were past and the promised land realized, Joshua, the chosen of God to bring Israel unto Canaan, called God's people before him and told them to choose whom they would serve. Joshua exerted all his power to persuade them to intelligently choose God. He not only told them what God had done for them, but he told them also what God would require of them if they chose him for their God. Jesus makes the requirements for discipleship clear. "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, if any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." No man can follow the Master without giving up many things. You have read about the great Hebrew guide and legislator who was trained in all the learnings of the Egyptians. From a worldly viewpoint Moses had a wonderful future before him. He was qualified to hold any position in the kingdom; it was not impossible for him to have been king; but when the testing time came he chose to cast his lot with his own people. When he made this choice he did not know that some day he would be their emancipator; God could not reveal his life work to him before he chose to do his will. We cannot know God's plan for our lives before we live up to the light we have, neither will we be given any more light until we make use of the light we possess. When the test came to the rich young man he was not willing to give Jesus first place in his heart. The testing time comes to all; we must count the cost and choose whom we will serve.

When making the choice of whom we will serve, we must take many things into consideration, because the cost of our choice will extend far into the future, affecting our own life and the lives of all with whom we associate, for no man liveth unto himself.

The most vital effects of our choices are seen in the home. Therefore we should carefully count the cost and live in accordance with the choice we make. We must remember that what we are has a much greater influence on those dependent upon us than what we profess to be. It is folly to profess to be something when our lives prove we are something else. Our actions speak louder than our words, because our everyday life is a reflection of the light within us. It is inconsistent, it is folly for a father to advise his children to accept and follow Jesus and not do so himself. The parent is the ideal of his or her child and he or she will imitate first their actions and later their character. Great is the responsibility of the present. Have you estimated your influence and considered your responsibility? What foundation have you built your home upon? Is it built upon the rock foundation, or is it built upon the shifting sands?

Christianity is the foundation of the home. The home is the foundation of the nation. When the home fails disaster faces not only the individual but the nation as well. Therefore we should count the cost, choose and build our home upon the true foundation, Jesus Christ; for no other foundation will stand the tests of life.

OUR PRAYER

Almighty God, our Father, create within us, we beseech thee, an earnest desire to know thy will. Give us power so we will be able to live lives that are pleasing in thy sight. Father, make us conscious of our responsibility and help us to sense the necessity of considering the influence of our actions. Grant that we may with firmness live right, live up to the light that thou hast revealed to us. May we be true, firm and obedient to thee. Help us to so live that thy Kingdom will be established and thy Son glorified. This we ask in the name of Jesus, Our Lord. Amen.

The Muncie, Indiana, mission is reported in this issue by its faithful pastor, Brother J. L. Kimmel. He has delayed the report long enough from the revival that he is able to discern the abiding results of the campaign. He speaks a good word for Brother Thomas as evangelist and also tells of the goodly number of converts received. The Muncie workers are learning how to give under the faithful instruction of Brother Kimmel and they are piling up a fund for a church building. With such a faithful effort in their own behalf, there surely ought to be some outside help coming to them. Their growth is limited until they get a new building. But they are certainly giving a good account of themselves now. This little Sunday school won third place in the Sunday school contest put forth by Waterloo. A group of loyal Brethren who can do that surely deserve more adequate quarters.

We are favored this week with a report from the pen of Brother Yoder of Rio Cuarto, Argentina. They have had no small amount of sickness, but we are glad to know that Sister Atkinson is recovering nicely. Their exchange of missionary help due to the sickness of the Mennonite missionary, Brother Shank, was a very kind act, and a courtesy that is characteristic of the mission field. The foreign mission workers exceed the home workers oftentimes in exhibiting the fraternal spirit. Their forces have been strengthened by the reception of a learned Greek into their number, but they are experiencing loss by the moving away of some of their members. Their good instruction is showing itself in causing them to continue loyal to their faith and their church by the sending of gifts. We are always glad for these reports from our mission stations. They help us to keep interested and to keep prayerful in their behalf.

We shall expect next week a report of the commencement exercises of Ashland College. They began Sunday with the baccalaureate sermon preached by President Furry. It was a masterful sermon delivered in Dr. Furry's characteristically gripping manner. This sermon was delivered in the afternoon. In the morning, Prof. J. A.

Garber, pastor of the Ashland church, preached a very practical and stirring sermon. Brother Garber's sermons are characteristically of a high order. In the evening he preached in the Church of the Brethren. This is the first of a series of union evening services conducted by the two branches of Brethren. It is significant in that it indicates that they are able to forget past prejudices sufficiently to worship together. May God cause these two branches of his church to come to realize the sin and waste of separateness and the great handicap that both experience because of their aloofness from each other, and bring them together in fellowship, service and power.

Music as a Factor in Evangelism idle twaddle that many accuse them of being. Most of our religious songs have sprung from some sort of a religious experience. It may not be ours, but it is that of some one and when it touches a soul in a similar experience it will awaken a response that will bless the soul thus receiving it. Our hymns feed the soul even when properly read and when prayed over, and when sung by a chorus they are mighty to move the heart to action. Then indeed they are blessings but when added to all this there is a spiritual adaptation with the accompaniment of a trained voice and a trained manner of interpretation, then we can see the power in it and God will not fail to bless through it. We do not see the power of song in evangelism because we have not learned it and have not given ourselves to it, and so by our indifference we have lost one of the best gifts of God to us.

Worry and care, fear for our reputation, or for our loved ones, or for our work, vanish in the trust of God. And when we have learned habitually to abide in God's trust, to form our judgments there and to speak as trusting him and commending his trust, we have gained a spirit of peace in which trust becomes the easy instinct of the soul,

Topic for June 15: Prayer. By Dr. J. M. Tombaugh

Prayer is a universal language. There is a cry which must find utterance, in the heart of every human being, whether he be a philosopher or an untaught heathen; whether he be the king on the throne or his humblest subject; a self-righteous Pharisee or a penitent Publican, crushed with a sense of his sin; whatever one's station there is a yearning after God, for his help and his favor, which no circumstance or condition can quite suppress. It seems to be bound up in the constitution of man, a very part of ourselves, to believe that somewhere there is a Being, wise and powerful and good, unto whom our cries can come. Nature has endowed the birds and beasts with an instinct more infallible than reason, and the universal disposition of men to pray is to men what instinct is to the lower orders of created things. That there are individuals, here and there, who never pray and who deny the efficacy of prayer, is no argument against the overwhelming proof of its efficacy furnished by this deep-seated and well-high universal conviction, that there is somewhere a listening and sympathetic ear into which we may pour the story of our sorrow and need. If it is true that there is a natural instinct in all men which, without premeditation, and contrary even to previous training compels the heart to cry unto an unseen God in time of great danger and need, the fact furnishes incontestable proof that the God who made us is a God who heareth and answereth prayer, and that it is a part of his plan that because of our asking and because of our need "we shall have the petitions we have desired of him." Underneath men's agnosticism and infidelity there is a substratum of faith, and the cry which comes spontaneously from a man in extremity, the prayer wrung from unwilling lips, is proof, furnished by the natural constitution of things, of the efficacy of prayer. Men may live all their life-time denying the being of God and the value of prayer, but when they are brought to pass through experiences such as David describes in the one hundred and seventh Psalm, when they are "brought low through oppression and trouble, when they are at their wits' end and bereft of all hope and draw near unto the gates of death, then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble that he might save them out of their distresses.

The prayer which Jesus taught the disciples when they said: "Lord, teach us to pray as John taught his disciples," is in every particular, a model prayer. It illustrates both the manner and the matter of acceptable praying. It teaches not only what we ought to say when we pray, but how, in what spirit,—we should present our petitions. It is short, so as to teach us that length is not the measure of power, that we "are not heard for our much speaking; that we should pray, not as the heathen do, using vain repetitions; that we should pray, not as the Scribes, to win favor with men, not to impress our hearers, but to please God and secure the favor of heaven.

As to the relation between power and the mere multiplication of words in a prayer, it may be well to remember that, of the many prayers recorded, there are at least two very short prayers, intense earnest petitions expressing deep feeling and strong pleading, which were full of power and acceptable to God. Each of them contained, with the address, just seven words, but heaven itself bent down to hear these brief petitions because, like an arrow shot from a bow, they came from a heart full bent. One was: "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief," and the other: "Lord, be merciful to me a sinner."

In the Lord's Prayer, the address contains the key to its power. Just as soon as one masters the doctrine taught in the address, when one can say: "Our Father which art in heaven," nothing is more natural than that he should keep right on and ask for his blessing and for grace, and that he should expect to receive the things for which he asks. If God is the "God of Heaven" and so is possessor of all love and pity and tenderness; if he is our "Father" and so looks upon us as his own children, there is nothing strange or wonderful or unreasonable in the fact that we cry and he hears us, that we ask and he grants; it would be strange indeed if it were otherwise. When we have fully grasped the conception of God, and his relation to man, that is set forth in the opening words, praying will become easy and natural.

Learned men, learned in the wisdom of this world, tell us sometimes, that our prayers have no power to change the purposes and decrees of God, nor to alter the fixed order of events in our own lives or in the universe. They say that our praying, in so far as it is efficacious at all, has value only because our asking, and our expectation of receiving works a change in ourselves and so makes it possible for us to adapt ourselves to the pre-determined plans of God. In a word, they teach that prayer is "subjective" and not "objective;" that our strivings and pleadings and petitions react upon ourselves, but that they do not and cannot affect God. Such a view of prayer, however philosophic it may be is unscriptural and utterly hopeless; it brings a depressive feeling of isolation, a sense of helpless orphanage.

God's promise in his word is that if we ask we shall receive; if we seek we shall find; if we knock it shall be opened unto us; and this not because the asking and seeking and knocking procure for us, of themselves the blessings we seek to get,—but because God in his mercy and kindness, and in conformity with his promise does, of his own sovereign will, bestow the blessing, and so to God the giver of all good, who hears and answers prayer, is due our praise and gratitude and love.

There are certain requisites to successful praying set forth in the Scriptures, and while prayer is never unavailing, the mere reciting of prayers, the service of the lips with which the heart has nothing to do, brings neither honor to God nor blessing to ourselves. To pray aright our prayers must be offered to God alone; not to the Virgin nor to saints nor to any celestial dignitaries but to God. Our plea for acceptance and favorable answer must be, not merit or righteousness of our own, but "for Jesus' sake." There must be reliance too upon the Holy Spirit for help, "for we know not what we should pray for as we ought, but the Spirit maketh intercession for us." Acceptable prayer must be fervent and sincere and offered in faith, for "when we come to God we must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them who diligently seek him." The subjects of prayer are almost infinite in number—" whatsoever things ye desire." God is the Author and Giver of every good and perfect gift, and to him we may come boldly, not with confidence begotten of a sense of our own deserving, but with confidence in his goodness and his promises, and make our requests known unto the Lord. One may distinguish between invocation, adoration, confession, petition, pleading, dedication, thanksgiving and blessing as the special and particular parts of a prayer, but generally our prayers contain more petitions than anything else. It is natural that it should be so, for our hunger and thirst after righteousness, our spiritual desires and aspirations, our consciousness of failure, of shortcomings and imperfections, give us no rest, but urge us to come again and again with petitions for our special needs—for help and strength and spiritual power.

And yet when we consider how large a debt we owe on the account of blessings received, how much we have to be thankful for, we ought to bring when we pray, not petitions alone for new favors and fresh blessings, but we ought to bring hearts full of gratitude, we ought to bring praise and thanksgiving, for "it is good to sing praises unto our God, it is pleasant, and praise is comely." No sweeter incense can rise to heaven from the altar of human hearts, than the holy perfume of joyful praise. The sweetest music with which earth can salute the ears of God and the listening angels, is the melody of a grateful heart overflowing with gratitude.

An earthly parent bestows favors and gifts upon his child, and is pleased when there is some answering token of recognition of his kindness and appreciation of it; so God lavishes his love upon us and watches to see the answering throb in our own hearts to him again. If God is like men, how our ingratitude must wound and grieve him. We come before him every day asking new blessings which he freely gives, and yet we so often forget to thank him for those he has already bestowed. There is a legend which tells how the two angels, the angel of thanksgiving and the angel of petitions, went out from heaven one morning with baskets to carry back the messages which men would bring to the altar of prayer. At night they returned and the angel of thanksgiving carried an almost empty basket; but the angel of petitions came burdened with an overflowing load. Let us "praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men."

Endeavor in After War Times. By Dr. F. E. Clark

In these topsy-survy times every interest has been effected. The war unexpectedly compelled us to abandon, almost at the last moment, "New York, 1917." The equally unexpected armistice will enable us to enjoy "Buffalo, 1919," when most Endeavorers feared there might not be another "International" until 1921. "Put me off at Buffalo," was a song I used to hear. It will have a new significance for thousands of Endeavorers on August 5th next. Why August instead of the old convention dates in July? Because before the armistice made it possible to think of a convention, many state conventions had pre-empted the earlier dates.

Let us make it a "Victory Convention" in the largest sense of the word, to celebrate the great triumph of temperance, of right over might, of Christian fellowship over sectarianism, and, please God, the victory of the great ideals that mean a permanent world peace. But not alone will we consider past or present victories. We will plan for, and look forward to the future victories which our millions of Endeavorers must win for Jesus Christ. Come on to Buffalo for a Victory Convention.

I expect to see many soldier boys at Buffalo. They will have an enviable welcome, and for those who will never come back there will be a memorial service, at which we will all highly resolve that we also will not count our lives dear unto us, for Christ's dear sake.

Let the days between now and then be WELCOMING DAYS. The Southern Endeavorers have the most comprehensive plan of this sort I have yet seen. Here is an outline of it: Every Endeavorer returning from camp or France to be given an office or place on an important committee in the society; a welcome for each boy as he returns, telling the members of his service, the place in the society to which he has been assigned, also the presentation of a C. E. pin or The Daily Companion, and the placing of a Christian Endeavor seal on his star in the church or society service flag. The plan also contemplates an "After-the-War Social" for the returning soldiers, and for two or three months to come, an "After-the-War Three Minutes" in the society prayer meeting, giving each soldier a chance to bring a message concerning his experiences or his purpose for the future. Let all Unions, too, have a "Welcome Home Evening," as the seven districts of the Boston Union are doing.

Come on, soldier boys, meet us half way. Show us that you can fight for the Captain of your salvation as you fought your country's battles. Make false the predictions of your detractors who say that you will no longer care for the old church or Christian Endeavor Society, its meetings and its fellowship.

Let this also be a welcome year to a multitude of young recruits who have never seen camp or frenches. Welcome, Newcomers all, to the society, to the meetings, to the committees, to the Unions, and to "Buffalo, 1919." Could I speak with a voice like the Niagara which we always associate with Buffalo, I would say to all, "Welcome, thrice welcome to Christian Endeavor and its new and abounding opportunities for joyful service."

The Usual Method of Raising Money for the Church is Wrong

By Justin Prescott

1 Because—It robs God of his tithe, which before now could easily have carried the gospel to every creature.

2 Because—It absorbs the largest percentage of the vitality of the church in soliciting and collecting money.

3 Because—it is a reflection upon Christ and his promises, for the church, his "bride," to be found begging.

4 Because—It undermines consecration, by giving us no definite law as to our stewardship of God's bounties entrusted to us.

5 Because—It questions the conversion and consecration of Christians who seem un-Christ-like in their system of giving.

6 Because—It denies God a Father's privilege of paying all the expenses of Christ's kingdom himself, from his own tithe fund.

7 Because—It reduces many of Christ's kingly ambassadors to actual want, and makes them subjective to the will of man.

8 Because—It is unfaithful in the unrighteous mammon, so that God cannot commit to our trust, the true riches.

9 Because—It gives license to covetousness by giving equal fellowship to the rich man's dime and the poor man's dollar.

10 Because—It appeals to pride, sentiment, reason, love and rewards, rather than to obedience in stewardship.

11 Because—It is a type of anarchy which teaches that we owe something to God in general, and nothing in particular.

12 Because—It assumes that what we owe to God financially, can be made right by little gifts, instead of actual payment.

13 Because—It discourages prayer, for want of such faith as is produced by those acts of special providence, common to the tither.

14 Because—It takes away most of the joy of giving, and loses to us the special blessing of God upon our business.—From The Tither,

MISSIONS

My Trip to Kentucky. By E. M. Cobb

At the solicitation of the officers of the Home Mission Board, the writer accompanied Brethren Carpenter and Bowman to the Kentucky mission stations last week, and I feel it my duty to give to the readers of the Evangelist my impressions of the field.

The first thought that came to me after having arrived at Riverside, was what a difference it would make in the attitude of the Brethren Church toward the Kentucky mission, could the members of the church but visit the place." Sometimes when perplexing questions arise, when earnest appeals for money are made, and when unfavorable reports are afloat, it is difficult to keep up the proper amount of interest in the field; but if one remembers that fourteen years ago there was nothing there but a little valley and an opportunity, and now beholds the four magnificent buildings there, a mountain of coal, and a farm under cultivation, a well regulated student body on 100 pupils, one's attitude toward the place is entirely different. It certainly is apparent to the casual observer what one man and his wife can accomplish by sticking to it.

One of the greatest needs of Riverside at the present time, is a dining hall, another a laundry, and a third an electric light plant. These could easily be in one building, and this light plant could serve as a central unit for all the buildings. There should be more help at Riverside. When I see the possibilities of a peach orchard along the banks of Troublesome, an apple orchard in the cove between the mountains, a plum thicket in the woods on the mountain side, a flock of sheep and a herd of goats eating the grass and browsing the underbrush over the many acres of our highlands on the mission farm, an unworked mountain of coal, a fine strip of some thirty or forty acres of fine tillable soil, I see nothing between these possibilities and a well supplied dining hall for the students of Riverside, except a husbandman; but one man can not do everything. Agriculture, viticulture, horticulture are all on different lines from pedagogy, and one man should not be expected to take the place of a half a dozen men and make a success of all branches of effort. The possibilities at Lost Creek are limited only by our investment in brains and money. The community appreciates the place, and the students are heartily patronizing it, and it has a great future.

Brother James Cook and his wife have been at Krypton six years, and they have achieved marvelous success. When I tell you that there were 90 present the other evening at regular Wednesday evening prayer meeting, and no special attraction of any kind, it will put to shame many old well organized churches, including mine with a membership of 922. A number of outlying stations are being regularly visited by helpers from both Lost Creek and Krypton, and I must say that some very promising reports are being made, and no doubt there will be a call in the near future for permanent workers to superintend these various stations.

I secured a number of valuable photographs which I hope you will be able to see in the near future. If you want to use them in your church, write Brother Carpenter or Brother Bowman.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina. By C. F. Yoder

Our work in Argentina is going forward hopefully although hindered recently by sickness. Sister Atkinson has had the fever but is recovering nicely. Sister Shank also has had a long siege of typhoid fever so that Brother Shank was unable to return to their work in Pehuajo, and to help them out we arranged that Brother Barrio should help there to begin the work and Brother Shank will help here for a few weeks. He is a Mennonite missionary.

We now have a new brother who is able to preach and would like to engage wholly in the work. He is a learned Greek, head of the department of agriculture of the Province of Corrientes and was sent by the government to deliver addresses in the agricultural congress recently celebrated in Rio Cuarto. He has been converted for some years but not baptized except in infancy. He visited the mission here and on learning of our form of baptism at once asked to receive it. He would give up his high government position to be a helper in the work if the way opens, but it may be best to work in connection with his position as he can thus be in touch with a class that an humble mission can not reach.

The strike in the college has been temporarily settled by an inspector who came. The bad professors are out but the minister of education has not yet definitely named the new faculty. All the professors resigned in order to give him liberty of action.

The country is still in a crisis and things seem to get worse instead of better. The farmers are now on a strike. The land is mostly in the hands of rich owners who give contracts which keep the tenants in virtual slavery. The reaction is sure to come in a revolution of some kind. The gripe is also reappearing in worse form and is spreading rapidly. In some places the schools are already closed. We are losing several of our mission families who are moving to other places. The loss from this source is much greater in this country than in the home land. However, I am glad to say that our isolated members are holding out well. Practically all of them are faithful to Christ and the church. Some of them send monthly offerings for the work. We try to keep in correspondence with them and send them literature.

Our recent love feast was a time of blessing as usual and our attendance is good. Some new people are interested and we have no reason to be discouraged.

From Our Little African Missionary

Brazzaville, French Equatorial Africa,
Feb. 18, 1919.

My dear little friends:

There are three of us now to write to you, and just because there are three of us we have so much to say. Marie and Julia came to Brazzaville, February 5th. I had been here just eleven months. Oh, we were so glad to see them! How we did hug and kiss each other! I haven't had any children to play with for such a long, long time. I do admire their long hair and pretty ribbons, and the first remark I made about them was, "Those girls have pretty hair," putting my hands up to my own little bobbed head.

We haven't slept in the same house yet, as Marie and Julia are sleeping at the Swedish Mission; but we take all our meals together, and play together all day long except when I am naughty and then mamma has to put me away all by myself. But I am so happy to have them and I do try so hard to be good.

Marie and Julia think many things are very funny here. Some of them are worse than funny as you will think if you read this.

Lately we have had so many centipedes. The rotten walls of the house must be full of them, so daddy says. The other day when mamma was washing my face I commenced to cry, mamma shook out the folds of the washrag and there was a baby centipede in it. I cried more about the ammonia that mamma put on right away than I did about the centipede.

The other night when mamma was asleep, something crawled across her forehead and woke her up. Mamma brushed it off and when she felt its many legs, she asked daddy to light the candle and help her find it. At first they couldn't find it anywhere and daddy thought mamma had had the nightmare. So mamma lay down again and there it was, biting and burning mamma's shoulder. Well this time daddy killed it, and you can imagine what a funny sensation of creeping things we had all the rest of the night.

Then another day mamma was washing some clothes, and she found in one piece the biggest centipede she ever saw. She shook it out and killed it but it was so big and strong that it died very hard indeed, and seemed very anxious to do all the harm it could before it died. Mamma says she has never seen centipedes so numerous anywhere else.

The lizards are still our friends. They run across the floor, up and down the walls, and even into our clothing. The other day one ran out of the sleeve of Uncle William's shirt when he went to put it on. Marie and Julia thought the other night that somebody had arrived at the front of the house, and they were surprised when we told them it was just the lizards playing hide and seek on the roof.

We have a great many bats, too. Sometimes we find a dead one on the floor or on some of our clothing.

This morning, Masamba, the cook, brought me a toad with a long string attached to it. Mamma hadn't quite finished dressing me and before she finished, my toadie had hopped away, string and all.

I think I haven't told you about that telegram that we got on the night of February 3rd.

Mamma and daddy and Aunt Toddy went into Brazzaville and got some mail. Just as they were ready to start home a telegram was handed to daddy. It had just two words written upon it, "Arriverons Mardi." You know that is the French for "Arrive Tuesday." The telegram was signed, Rollier. Maybe you think we weren't all happy. When mamma came home and told us (Uncle William and me) we wanted to see the telegram, but as I was in bed mamma didn't show it to me till next morning. That was Monday and that night we had the biggest storm we have ever had in the Congo.

It took sheets of galvanized iron off the magazine (store) near here, crumpled them up like tissue paper and hurled them down toward our cook house. It uprooted trees, and loosened the roots of those near our house. But we lost nothing and not a hair of our heads was harmed. Mamma says, Satan who is the Prince of the power of the air, was angry because Marie and Julia and their papa and mamma were coming into French territory for Jesus' sake. Mamma sat on the edge of my bed all during the storm. I was the only one in bed, and my bed was the only one that didn't get wet from the rain, for the wind blew fiercely through our tents. Mamma herself was soaking wet and her feet were in water. My net was wet, but Jesus took care of the least of his little missionaries out here and not a bit of my bedding was damp. Aunt Toddy was as wet as could be in her tent. But the storm was soon finished and everybody made their beds as dry as they could and went to bed, but not to sleep. We were glad that Marie and Julia were so near, but we were glad too that they had not spent that night with us, for it was the worst night we have had in Brazzaville.

We want you to pray for us. Every day Marie and Julia and I build boats to go to Ubangi Shari with. Mamma says that soon Jesus will open the door and no man can shut it. We praise him for keeping us strong and well as we are now and for keeping us here, in spite of so much opposition.

Marie and Julia are learning Sango. Of course I jabber it too. Everybody is busy with French and Sango and packing boxes, and safari bags. It is hard to tell whether this is a bee hive or a factory, and whether we live in Brazzaville or the town of Babel, for we are all talking most of the time, and French, English, Sango, and Bakongo make a queer sounding mixture.

But ev all love Jesus and one another, and soon, mamma says, we will all go on together to Ubangi-Shari, because Jesus promises to give us the heathen for our inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for our possessions.

Lovingly,

MARGUERITE.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Some months ago a federation of churches was organized in our city and we joined the federation. An evangelistic campaign was immediately put on, all the pastors of the city treating the vital subjects proposed by the evangelistic committee from time to time.

As the final touch to our part of the campaign, we secured Brother I. D. Bowman of Philadelphia for a ten days' meeting.

Brother Bowman spoke mostly on prophecy and great crowds attended the meeting. The interest was good at the close and we would like to have continued, but Brother Bowman could not remain any longer.

One feature of the meetings worth mentioning is that of the visitation by the laity. Cards were given us by the federation from its house to house canvass and we visited almost one hundred homes. A study is now being made of each case with a view to still winning those who are unsaved.

Our meetings resulted in seventeen confessions. We did not reach any new families, except that there was one little girl from a home, the parents of whom are not members.

Most of those confessing Christ were children, but we recognize in them the hope of the church and feel keenly the responsibility of properly training them for the Master's service.

Accordingly the meeting has been pronounced a real success. Each newly received member was presented with a copy of the church's creed—a New Testament. It now looks nice to see them bring their testaments when they come to church. If they keep up this habit, they are sure to become great workers for their King.

Brother Bowman preached a straightforward and positive Gospel. He is not quite modern enough to omit a hell from the Bible (nor is the writer).

Our quarterly business meeting was held recently and some new Sunday school officers elected. Brother Turner, the new superintendent already has plans under way for the boosting of the Sunday school work.

We reached our high water mark of attendance with 89 present during one Sunday of the meeting—this was 14 over our goal.

The Easter program planned by Brother Oswald the retiring superintendent was a success and resulted in an offering of $21.05 for Africa.

The Y. P. S. C. E. goes forward, yet handicapped because we cannot get our young people to take the interest they should. Brother Shaffer is the president.

The Junior Christian Endeavor is quite active, having made a separate gift to foreign missions on Easter Sunday. Mrs. Geist has charge of this splendid work.

The S. S. C. E. has nothing of especial importance to report, except that the regular meetings are being held and an effort made to attain unto the National Standard. A splendid Mothers' Day program was rendered May 11 and an offering taken for the National work.

The Allentown church is not afraid to give, and we find that a great blessing accompanies this grace.

Last year our foreign missionary offering was $50.00. This year it was almost $100.00. As a pastor I find that people don't get insulted if you teach them to give. They will give and rejoice in it. When I remind you that we have given nearly $1.60 per member for missions, you will observe that we have quadrupled the modest goal of 40c per.

With our recent 17 accessions, we have checked up and found that we are not far from attaining all our goals of the Four Year Program. If the Sunday school, the Y. P. S. C. E. and the S. S. C. E. were to reach their standards, we could score. But these auxiliaries have not yet done their part in this particular. We trust that ere long they may prove to be auxiliaries in this as well as in other respects.

While we have had a victory in which we rejoice, yet our field is hard and we ask you to continue praying for this work.

ARTHUR L. DELOZIER Pastor.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH,

Los Angeles, California

Our three weeks' evangelistic services, held each evening except Saturday, closed May 12th with a Communion service which was one of the best ever held in this congregation. Brother Jennings delivered some strong messages and all his appeals were well made and given with such earnestness and intensity of feeling as to produce conviction. There were forty-one confessions and twenty have been baptized and received into the church up to this date. There were seven pupils from the Sunday school baptized.

Brother Jennings had just previously been given the privilege by the church here to hold a three weeks' meeting at Fillmore. He maintained his hold on the congregation here by returning each week and preaching the Sunday morning address. The Sunday evening meetings were maintained by Brother Harry Toler, Sister Grace Snack of Long Beach church and Brother Eli Hoover now of Long Beach.

Under the leadership of Brother Earl Hedrick the Sunday school is improving, there being a very noticeable increase lately in attendance, interest and in the offerings. All of this shows that pupils feel they are receiving something worth while and they are willing to make some effort to be present each Sunday morning to receive what the school has to give.

A reception to new members and good social time has been planned for tomorrow evening, May 20, at South Park. An interesting program is being prepared. The musical given by the young people of the church recently as well as their general reputation gives assurance of a pleasant and profitable time for all who can attend.

The first meeting of the new committee on a fund for a new church building, in connection with the official board has been called for Thursday evening of this week. I think it is generally anticipated they will be able to set on foot some practical plans of work that will result in a new, more commodious and more convenient church edifice.

The strong feeling now existing for the need of a better place to worship in no doubt arises because of a desire of the pastor and all his best supporters to serve the immediate community more efficiently. We judge this to be the ruling motive because of certain expressions we hear used when the matter has been up for discussion both in private and in public. Let us pray as though the whole thing depended on God and give as though the whole thing depended on us.

CONCERNING SPOKANE MISSION

In the last report from Spokane, on the last page of the Evangelist, under date, April 23rd, you'll notice that almost $500.00 had been sent in, of the $2500.00 which the Mission Board designated as the amount to be given by the church at large. Brother Miller's appeal for the remaining $2000.00 is to have it sent NOW, while they are making the supreme effort to complete the building. If the business situation in Spokane is as uncertain as in some of our eastern cities, Baltimore for one, then the effort is no child's play.

The local Brethren in the far west, are bearing a much larger end of the burden in the starting of a new church, than what has been done in the east, as I have found it, Philadelphia perhaps excepted. The Mission Board has done no small part to set the amount,—and could the rest of us know how difficult it is for a board to make decisions regarding a field with which they are not fully acquainted, we would heartily respond; especially in so modest a request as only $2500.00 more, in so bold an undertaking as to give the Brethren church her rightful place in the west.

It was this sense of loyalty to authority in our beloved church that induced me to break away from the strong "pull" westward, and turn back to Baltimore for the testing season as to permanency there. When the building committee was on the eve of purchasing a lot, it was suddenly learned that eight of our families were planning to leave the city, or had left,—one of the results of the signing of the armistice, putting thousands of men out of employment. With the immediate prospect of a building gone, the need also of enlarging our territory, was gone. The Mission Board was willing to have the work left in local hands and have me return to Spokane to help in this special effort.

Before joining them in Spokane in the month of June I want that you join me in getting that $2000.00 together. I rather guess that the $2000.00 is needed there more than my presence—I can but do my utmost before going and that is to take up what I was to have done over a year ago, but the war checked the sending out of the bond blanks that Brother Miller devised. They are less than the Liberty Bonds; $30 is to be the amount of the gift. Brother Miller's address is on the back—701 W. York Ave., Spokane, Washington. If the $30 is not possible, do not hesitate to send a smaller sum as your Business Partner agrees. Nor will Brother Miller object to your exchanging your $50 or $100 Liberty Bond for one of these.

Developments during the year make my leaving the east twice as hard as before,—the breaking health of my aged mother, special opportunities, etc., but I cannot forget the very definite leading of God in my first going to Spokane, his great blessing on our small effort, nor can I forget the promise when I came away that I would return, nor yet the $75.00 waiting in bank since last fall, sent for the one purpose to buy my railroad ticket to Spokane! What patience, and great grace.

VIANNA DETWILER.

Ridgley, Md., May 27th, 1919.

HUNTINGTON, INDIANA

Since our last report of the work here, we have been going forward in a very substantial way. The revival campaign is past and twenty-one took a definite stand for the Master; fifteen have been added to the church, others will be, and some are under-aged. Brother A. E. Thomas, our evangelist, did his part well, this being his second meeting for us. We asked that he preach doctrinal sermons and he did it in a very masterful and convincing way. We enjoyed having Mrs. Thomas and little Dorcas June with us. The meetings closed on Wednesday evening, May 14. On Thursday evening, we held a fellowship meeting which served two purposes, as a farewell to the Thomases and a welcome to our newly added members. The congregation assembled in the auditorium for 30 minutes' song and prayer service. At this time the committee selected called us to a banquet which had been prepared in the basement, from the well filled baskets brought by the ladies. More than one hundred enjoyed the evening together. Brother W. H. Landis, our very efficient Sunday school superintendent, acted as toastmaster. He used for the opening speech "The Future of the Brethren Church." Those responding to toasts were, Brother A. E. Thomas, Brother Paul Smith and the pastor. The Sisterhood Girls led by Sister Gertrude Ham responded by singing Sisterhood songs. All in all we had a very profitable and enjoyable evening together. We closed by joining hands and singing "Blest be the tie that binds." The benediction was pronounced by Brother Grant Walters.

On Friday evening, we held our first communion service in the new church. Brother Thomas led the meeting. The attendance was good and it was a blessing indeed to see those surrounding the Lord's tables for the first time. The opportunity was given for testimony which was responded to by many.

Our church was strengthened in many ways as a result of the campaign. Eight were added to the church since our last report of January 15, and the result of the revival made a total of 23 added since the first of the year.

At our April business meeting the pastor was asked to continue his labors another year at a substantial increase in salary. We have decided to continue the work, trusting in God to give us grace and strength.

Brother W. T. Lytle and Brother J. L. Kimmel were with us at this meeting for which we are grateful indeed. On Wednesday evening, previous to business meeting, we had planned for our regular mid-week prayer service in the church, but, others were planning too, and they planned to have "Prayer meeting," "surprise," "Pound Party" all the same time and at the parsonage too. Well, the "Surprise" was a success as were the other features of the meeting. It was our largest prayer meeting from point of numbers, and our lauder being replenished with the necessities of life. Such acts of kindness make the work easier. We must close for fear of the waste basket. We need your prayers, brethren.

J. W. BROWER.

MUNCIE, INDIANA

No report has come from this place for a long time. Yet the work has been to some extent reported. The fact is that our revival has been reported only by those who have been in the field for a short time. Since the number of accessions were reported or rather the number of confessions, the pastor had no inclination to make his report until he could really give the number of additions to the church. This is always the gist of the whole matter, but especially so when the report comes from a mission point that is supported by the various boards.

In this revival there was some uncertainty. We were new in the city and only a few months in our new home or location. Then again we had no place to baptize our converts except the river. There were a good many quite young and their parents did not belong to our church and we did not know what the outcome would be. But by this time we can give a more accurate report. Six came by letter, one has come since the meetings by relation, twenty-two have been baptized and two are yet to be baptized. These two were hindered by sickness. This makes thirty-one additions to the church. We had thirty-six members before the revival began and so you will see that we have almost doubled our members.

It is no more than right that I should say a word here for the evangelist, Brother A. E. Thomas, who labored very hard and to whom is due very largely the splendid results obtained. Brother Thomas is an evangelist in the full sense of the term and may the Lord continue to use him for the building up of his kingdom.

The work has not shown any signs that the interest is growing less since the revival is over. Indeed the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor as well as the preaching services, have all increased in attendance. About one week after the revival we had a Christian Endeavor social that was a splendid success. There were about sixty present and a fine program was rendered. This social no doubt did the church much good. The ladies' class also gave a very fine banquet for the benefit of the men's class and this was a most enjoyable affair. On Easter Sunday we had a cantata in the evening and every seat in the "Little White Chapel" was filled and the congregation seemed to be pleased immensely. We have also started a Teachers' Training class which meets once every week, and it is full of promise for the future of the church. The Sunday school has gone forward with leaps and bounds and has attained the record of 106 in attendance.

We have a building fund started which also promises great things for the Muncie church. At first we merely handed envelopes to the members without even suggesting any amounts which they should contribute. This did some good, but the money came rather slowly, for it seemed our people had not yet caught the vision for a church building. Then we conceived the idea that it might be a good plan to try the Sunday school. We announced that on a certain Sunday, we would take an offering for the building fund. The Sunday came, the offering was taken and we were all very agreeably surprised when the report showed fifty dollars and nine cents. So well pleased was every one with the result that we concluded we would try again. Sunday, June 1st, we lifted the second offering for this fund and we again were surprised when we found that this offering totalled one hundred and thirty-four dollars and thirty-three cents. Well, we expect we will fall down some in our next offering for we intend to take an offering every month for the new church. In this offering the S. S. C. E. came to the rescue with fifty-two dollars and they may not be able to do as well next time, but we know they will do their very best. My brethren, we need a church building in Muncie and we can have it if the Brethren churches and their pastors will get back of the project, but but we can not unless you do. I mean the Brethren churches of Indiana, of course. I am not going to make an appeal for money just now, but one young lady from the Goshen church, Sister Ester Cline, sent in ten dollars some time ago and I want to say it was highly appreciated and it was at once added to the building fund; and I want to simply say that if any of our friends wish to help the cause at Muncie, it will be highly appreciated.

We certainly rejoice in the success of the Brethren cause all over the brotherhood but ask especially for your prayers for the work at Muncie.

J. L. KIMMEL.

MARYLAND-VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

I want to express very briefly through the Evangelist my impressions of the Maryland-Virginia Conference which was held June 5-6 at Linwood, Maryland. The spirit throughout the whole conference was splendid. The program was well arranged and carried out. The attendance was very good and the entertainment could not have been any better.

The conference very kindly gave the writer two places on the program. I spoke Wednesday afternoon "My Ideals for a Brethren College." In the evening I spoke on "The Need of Christ." The audiences were responsive and appreciative.

It was a pleasure to meet the older members of the church in that district as well as quite a number of former College students. On every hand, the affairs of the College seemed to meet with enthusiasm. I predict a good time there for Brother Beachler when he enters that field. I believe I have never met with a more hearty response anywhere in behalf of the College work. This interest showed itself in a substantial way when the conference very kindly relieved the College of paying my expense by paying it themselves.

I covet the opportunity of attending every district conference for I am anxious to cultivate the interest and friendship of the entire church. I am having a mailing list made out so that the friends of the school may be kept informed of our work and plans here. I want the enrollment to be doubled next year if possible, especially is this desirable in the Seminary. I am anxious to have some of the men outside of the school to come in and give a series of lectures to the Seminary, thus keeping intact the interests of the church and College. Other conferences will please take notice that if an opportunity is given, some representative from the College will be present.

May God continue to use the College for the good of the church and for the upbuilding of the Kingdom.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

TWO-IN-ONE.

College Corner—Poplar Grove.

We have again been called to give God our full time and we are now serving these two churches. Poplar Grove has had its troubles and has been counted dead. This is one of the churches like many more in Indiana; because it has not a membership running up in the hundreds it is called dead. I am glad that even God's word says, "Where to or three are gathered together in my name there will I be in their midst" and that to bless. Poplar Grove asked two trial sermons. Well I was glad of that. I believe that every pastor should be tried. This is Bible. We are a whole Bible church, then why not use Bible methods in calling a pastor. A pastor that is not a whole Bible man has no place in the Brethren church. And when we have to cut out the First, Second and Third John and the teachings of Paul, we had better cut out the man.

Now we can not say just what the outcome will be here. Most of our calling has been to churches that have been called dead. I am a whole Gospel man and a plain Gospel man. What little I try to preach, I try to please God and not man. Now I may be plain, but God's word is plain. Let us hold up before the world the Gospel preached and lived by our Lord and Christ. Poplar Grove is close to College Corner and these two churches I believe will work together nicely for the Lord. Poplar Grove has already set a good example in the two times that I was called there. That is, they thought the laborer was worthy of his hire. Now you watch for Poplar Grove on the Honor Roll before the General Conference for I leave the Evangelist in my place when I leave. I left Dutchtown but they have the Evangelist now instead of me. Perhaps they will see what a help the paper is when pastorless. I hope that some Brethren pastor will go to Dutchtown and take up the work there. College Corner held their communion May 26. This was a glorious meeting. While we did not reach the 75 percent, it was a good meeting just the same. Mother's meeting was a good meeting. And the attendance is good at the regular preaching services. We consider the work in good condition, as good as the average church. We pray God's blessing on these two churches and the church at large. We will close with this announcement, that we have only promised these two churches our services until the Indiana State Conference and will be located in Wabash until that time. We will answer all letters from churches needing a pastor between now and then, and shall consider the call which we have already. Our new address is 96 North Comstock St., Wabash, Indiana. This shall be our home until October first. We need your prayer and not your knocks. Knocking will do to win a prize fight but knocking never built a church and it doesn't help a preacher. Let's pray for one another.

HOMER ANDERSON.

IN THE SHADOW

GARBER—Charles V. Garber, son of Elder Simon Garber and Anna M. Garber, was born in Fremont, Ohio, October 29, 1890. He departed this life at Camp Stuart, Newport News, Virginia, April 30, 1919. He is survived by his mother, six brothers and two sisters. He entered the service of his country in the recent war among the early volunteers. He went over seas with the 117th Supply Train of the 166th division, later the Rainbow. He was transferred to the motorcycle corps as a dispatch bearer, and carried many important messages to the front under the most dangerous fire. He was wounded with shrapnel in the face and legs, which necessitated a stay in the hospital for three months. Following his recovery from these wounds, he returned to his command, after which he was twice gassed. He saw twelve months' service and was on all the big fronts in which the gallant Rainbows were engaged. The war ended and his task completed, he was being brought back to his native land and to his home, when he was taken with pneumonia on the way, and was only landed on the home shore a few hours when he was called to answer the summons of death. Although he had never united with any church, it is the belief of his relatives that he had heeded the appeals of religious workers in the camp and had accepted his Savior.

He was buried in Oakwood cemetery, Fremont, Ohio, with military service. Funeral sermon by the writer.

H. M. OBERHOLTZER.

OPPENHEIMER—Mrs. Cora Matilda Oppenheimer, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Ruehle, was born in Hancock county, Ohio, September 8, 1880. She departed this life at her home in Fremont, Ohio, May 18, 1919.

She was married to Karl P. Oppenheimer February 4, 1913, to which union was born one son. She is survived by her husband, her son, her father, one brother and three sisters.

Sister Oppenheimer united with the Brethren church in West Independence, Ohio, several years ago, and after her marriage she transferred her membership to the Brethren church in Fremont, Ohio. Since her conversion she has always lived a most faithful and consistent Christian life, and was active in the work of the church in all its departments. Christ and the church were the center of her affections and interest. She cared little for any other pleasure than to serve her Lord and Master. She had been ordained to the office of deaconess, and from time to time filled various other offices of trust and responsibility. She will be sadly missed by both the home and the church.

Funeral services were held in the Fremont Brethren church, where she had delighted so much to worship, being conducted by the writer, her pastor. Text, John 17:24.

A WARNING

About May fifteenth notices were sent to all subscribers of the Evangelist whose subscriptions were due or past due at that time. In all, three hundred such notices were sent out. Since then many of these subscribers have renewed their subscriptions. Perhaps most of them have done so, but there are always some who are careless about such matters and we want to WARN any such that on June TWENTIETH all the subscribers to whom these notices were sent, but who failed to respond to the notices, will have their names taken from the mailing list of the Evangelist.

Since we are so near the goal of FIVE THOUSAND subscribers it would indeed be a pity if the goal should be lost because a few of these good people who have been warned have failed to heed the warning. Most of these subscribers belong to what we call the "single" list, that is they get their mail at post offices where only one or two copies of the paper go and their papers are mailed in single wrappers. Many of them are too far away from the church where they hold their membership to receive any pastoral attention and they need the paper all the more because of this. But this is our LAST warning, so please renew. AT ONCE.

Things Before

Several good churches are still working for a place on the Honor Roll and we hope to have them succeed before the close of the Conference year, and if they do succeed it means we will reach our FIVE THOUSAND subscriptions, PROVIDING we do not lose as many by expiration as we add to our list as new subscriptions. Both ends of the line must be watched constantly to keep the list up to the standard. But we hope to have some good things to report within ten days.

Still At It

The first church to report that every family was a subscriber to the Brethren Evangelist, even before such a thing as an Honor Roll was thought of, was the little congregation near Akron, Indiana. Brother A. E. Diekerhoff sent in the list three years ago with the statement, every family in the church is now getting the Evangelist. When the Honor Roll was started this was one of the first churches in Indiana to win a place with D. A. C. Teeter as pastor, but the church has now been without pastoral care for nearly a year, but just last week we received the renewal of the Akron list from Brother Diekerhoff who is still "on the job" of looking after the interests of his beloved church. These are the faithful Brethren who are "the salt of the earth."

Another item of interest is the Fairview church of Washington C. H., Ohio has just renewed its entire list making the third year it has won its place on the Evangelist Honor Roll. This was the first church in the entire brotherhood that, through the action of its official board, decided to place the Evangelist in the home of every Brethren family in the congregation. These people have "tasted and have found it good." Are there any skeptics left in the church? If so, we would ask them to write to Mrs. Laura A. Hegler, Austin, Ohio for a testimonial. Sister Hegler is one of the faithful sisters that make the Brethren church worth while, and when the Fairview congregation gets hold of something good it knows it and holds on to it as it held to Dr. J. M. Tombaugh as pastor for twenty years or more. But what we are most interested in just now is that FIVE THOUSAND subscriptions to the Evangelist.

At the Door

I thought myself indeed secure,
So fast the door, so firm the lock;
But lo! the toddling comes to lure
My parent ear with timorous knock.

My heart were stone could it withstand

The sweetness of my baby's plea—
That timorous baby knocking and—
"Please let me in, it's only me."

I threw aside the unfinished book,
Regardless of its tempting charms,
And, opening wide the door, I took My laughing darling in my arms.

Who knows but in eternity
I, like a truant child, shall wait
The glories of a life to be,
Beyond the Heavenly Father's gate.

And will that Heavenly Father heed
The truant's supplicating cry,
As at the outer door I plead,
"Tis I, O Father, only I!"

A Great Conference of the Church of the Brethren

There is no other church in which Brethren people have greater interest than the Church of the Brethren. They and we stand upon the same Biblical and historical foundations. From practically all points worthy of consideration we are one, and if the growing charity exhibited in some quarters is permitted to exercise itself with less restraint in the hearts of the leaders of both divisions, and if the rank and file of both churches are given an understanding of their likenesses, the great prayer of the Master may soon be realized in us, namely, "that they all might be one." No one wishes to show himself too optimistic, but there is one thing quite evident, and that is that the prejudice and unkindness of feeling is largely disappearing. We are rejoicing in the success of their conference and plans for future enlargement, and there are occasional expressions of rejoicing coming to us from them in our accomplishments for the kingdom of Christ. And believing that the masses of our membership will appreciate knowing something of their latest and greatest conference, we are giving our editorial space this week to a report of some of the high points touched by their principal conference speakers.

The conference began on Wednesday evening, June 4th and closed on the following Wednesday night, June 11. Elder H. C. Earley of Penn Laird, Virginia, was elected moderator; President Otho Wenger of North Manchester College, reading clerk; Rev. James M. Moore of Lanark, Illinois, writing clerk, and Rev. E. S. Coffman of Harrisonburg, Virginia, messenger clerk.

The initial address was given by one of their veteran ministers, Elder D. L. Miller, Senior Editor of The Gospel Messenger. His subject was, "My Church; What She Means to Me." He said, "My church means to me as close a relationship between the members thereof as exists between the members of the physical body. If one suffers, all suffer alike; if one rejoices, all rejoice. There is no division in the church which is the unified body of Christ. 'That they may also be one in us.' A divided church is sure to break down under great crises. The church rankling with internal jealousies cannot concentrate its powers in winning souls to Christ. 'And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand' (Mark 3:25)."

On Thursday there were some eloquent addresses on some world engaging problems, such as "Jesus Christ and Reconstruction," "The Child as We may Make It," "Our Debt to America," etc. Rev. F. M. Henry said, "As citizens we certainly owe America the best that is in us, expended in a life-long endeavor to make our nation what it ought to be, and what by his (God's) grace, and by every loyal citizen's consent it will be. In principle and privilege, I conceive our duty to be that of every other Christian citizen."

President Lewis S. Shively, of Mt. Morris College, Mt. Morris,

Illinois, spoke very effectively on the subject, "The claims of the Christian Ministry" and in the course of his address said, "These things upon which a successful ministerial career depends, are the ones that ought to be given the greater emphasis at such a time like this. They are the claims which the ministry makes upon the young man who is looking forward toward taking it up, and the welfare of the future church depends in a large measure upon how clearly these claims are understood and met by those who are to be her ministers. These things can be grouped about two main ideas. The first of these is preparation for the work such as we generally designate by the term education. The second is the individual's character."

The first address on Friday on the subject "The Spirit Filled Life," by Dr. A. W. Dupler of Bridgewater College, contained these words: "These are days when men need divine leadership. The chaos of the world's life—both in thought and action—the eager cry of suffering, starving men, women and children, starving in body, mind and soul; the restless turmoil of seething humanity, these and other conditions which might be named, call for the very best thought, life and consecration to high ideals and purposes that, under God, the church can give through the lives of those who make up its body. This can be realized only as we are taught and led by the Spirit of God."

Rev. V. C. Finnell of Elgin, spoke on, "What Can the Young People Do to Further the Interests of the Church in Pioneer Districts?" A few interesting statements are the following: "What are pioneer districts? At the close of our first half century of church work in America our frontier had been pushed but a few miles west of Germantown, Philadelphia. Twenty years later the membership of 800 had been doubled, and we had pushed west as far as Fayette county, Pennsylvania, and south into Maryland, Virginia and even the Carolinas. Up until about 65 years ago our frontier churches and pioneer districts were east of the Mississippi River. About that time we went west, northwest and southwest spreading like the proverbial prairie fire until we now have organized churches in all but three of the 22 trans-Mississippi states."

Rev. V. H. Schwalm spoke of the "Possibilities of the Home Field," and made these significant statements: "The home field is not in competitions with the foreign field. Place doesn't count in the work of the Kingdom, but rather faithfulness to the task assigned wherever God calls. Only about 41½ millions of our total population of about a hundred millions have any connection with the church at all, and only a comparatively small percent of these are actively or positively working their religion. In all candidness I ask you, friends, 'Is American democracy safe for world leadership with such large elements of her civilization completely untouched by the spirit of the Christ?"

Rev. J. W. Lear, of Mt. Morris, Illinois, in his address on "The Doctrines of the Church," said, "The New Testament represents the teachings of Christ directly and indirectly. The apostles' teachings were the words of Christ revealed through the Holy Spirit. The doctrines of the church coincide with the teachings of the New Testament."

Pleading for universal and lasting peace, endorsing the spirit of the League of Nations and outlining the position of the church toward non-resistance, Prof. W. J. Swigart of Juniata College and Dr. Edward Frantz, editor of the Gospel Messenger, both emphatically and enthusiastically declared themselves in favor of ending war forever and pledging the church to encourage any lawful movement to bring this about. "The surest and safest protection the world might have against war would be for the nations to disarm themselves. Individuals and nations that take the sword are most likely to perish by it."

The keynote of the conference was sounded on Sunday afternoon when a clear and ringing call to aggressive evangelism was sounded by Rev. John H. Cassady, Rev. George W. Flory and Rev. J. H. B. Williams, all specialists. The enthusiasm they displayed was contagious. Rev. Cassady said, "The time is ripe for a great forward evangelistic movement in the Christian church, and we believe it is fully ripe for such a movement in our own denomination. 'Behold I have set before thee an open door and no man can close it.' We believe that such a challenge has never in any age come with greater force, to any people, than this comes now to the Church of the Brethren. The world is getting ready for the pure and undiluted gospel. There are certain fundamental principles for which our church has stood through all its history that are now rapidly coming to the front."

Dr. Ezra Flory of the Bethany Bible School, Chicago, spoke in behalf of the Sunday schools and said the goal for the Sunday schools was to have annually "100 new schools started; 15,000 new scholars enrolled and an average attendance of not less than 75 percent of the enrollment of the main school; an earnest, prayerful, consecrated effort to lead every unconverted scholar to a confession of Christ and an active church membership; $40,000 raised for missions; the daily study of the Sunday school lessons from the open Bible in every home." In appealing for greater support for the Sunday school he said, "The church is getting from Sunday school 95 percent of her ministers, 87 percent of her members, 100 percent of her missionaries and 95 percent of all other workers. It is estimated that the church invests in the Sunday school 10 percent of her pastors and 10 percent of the time of all her church workers."

Dr. Otho Wenger, president of North Manchester College in his address on "The Church: Past, Present and Future," made these statements, "The church of the Brethren in its beginning was a missionary church. Elder Peter Becker was a true missionary. The church remained so during the eighteenth century. While we do not know much about the church during the seventy years from 1780 to 1850, we know that the church was a missionary church. During this time those grand old pioneers of the church were busy planting the strong churches of today. The church of today must move if it serves this generation as well as did the church of that day. But worldliness entered the church. To offset this there came to be undue emphasis placed upon formalities. Dissensions arose and troubled the church for a generation. . . There is yet much selfishness in the church that diverts much of the blessing of God to their own selfish purposes. There is worldliness on the one hand and too much formality on the other that prevent our people from seeing the one big thing for the church. We still have our Pharisees and our Sadducees as they had them two thousand years ago."

A message of fire came from Rev. Jacob Funk of Wiley, Colorado, on the subject of "Evangelism." A few sharp remarks of the preacher were, "The Scribes and Pharisees said of Jesus, 'He receiveth sinners and eateth with them,' and the modern scribes are still in the business of accusing Christians of becoming contaminated with sin by association with sinners. The church is not a money-grabbing institution, nor an institution to air out your differences but an institution to save souls for God. If that is not the business for your church then your church has no business for its existence. Men can be saved if only you will love them long enough and hard enough.

Soul winning means earnestness on the part of every worker. Why should men be earnest about every other line of work and careless about this? Laziness is a sin. Lazy preachers, deacons and laity ought to be kicked out. They are a disgrace to the cause. . . Go to work today. Quit quibbling over hair splitting theological nonsense, and get into the business for which Christ died."

Dr. D. W. Kurtz, president of McPherson College, Kansas, gave a stirring address on the "Forward Movement in Education." It so fits the needs of our own people at this moment that we are running the address as we received it in the Conference Daily, strongly supplements the article in this issue by our own college president, Dr. E. E. Jacobs.

It is said the 1919 conference called the Becker Bi-Centennial was the most largely attended of any in the church's history. The Five Year Forward Movement of the church as announced by the three boards of the church, General Mission, Educational and Sunday School, was given a most enthusiastic endorsement. Two most remarkable features of the conference was the dedication of 32 young lives and the giving of $155,000 for missionary extension. It is said to have been disappointing to many delegates that no steps were taken toward union with the "Progressive section of the church," but some thought the time was not quite here for action along that line. It is known that the feeling of charity is growing between the two branches of the church, however.

Dr. R. R. Teeter preached at Goshen, Indiana, on Sunday, June 15th.

Prof. Garber and E. A. Rowsey, president of the College Y. M. C. A. are in attendance at the Lake Geneva Training Conference. We are promised a report of the conference.

Brother Morton L. Sands, of Sergeantsville, New Jersey, announces his resignation of his present charge and desires to correspond with some church or churches needing a pastor.

Don't fail to read Brother Carpenter's "Home Mission Outlook" this week; it will interest you. He also reports the Kentucky receipts for May. Has your pledge been reported paid yet? Every pledge is due this month.

Prof. J. A. Garber, pastor of the Ashland church was at North Manchester, Indiana, on the occasion of a teacher training commencement, Sunday, June 15th, and President Jacobs preached in the college chapel one of his characteristically strong sermons.

If you could see what a beautiful and commodious church building the Spokane, Washington, Brethren are building, you would be impressed with their wisdom and vision and give them a boost. Some mission churches build so timidly that they fix the limit of their growth at the outset. Send your offerings or your "bonds" (thirty-dollars each) to R. Paul Miller, West 1514 Courtland Avenue, Spokane, Washington.

Brother J. H. Burnworth favors us with a report of his closing of one pasorate and taking up of another. He was very kindly remembered by the Brooklyn, Iowa, people whom he left, by a farewell reception and a substantial evidence of appreciation and good will. He had not been on his new field, Listie, Pennsylvania, long before a very pleasant and profitable surprise was put over on him. May God abundantly bless him in his new field of labor.

One of the most vital enterprises of the church is given a lengthy report this week—the college. Dr. L. L. Garber reports the commencement exercises in a very interesting manner. Most of you could not be present to enjoy the various features of commencement week, but in this report you can get a very complete idea of what took place and the gists of the principal speeches. Everybody is more deeply interested in the college and what transpires there since the endowment campaign is on. We feel now that it is our college and we are concerned about its welfare. And because it does belong to all we know you will take time to read this splendid report.

Some Ideals for a Brethren College. By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph. D.

The ideals of any self-respecting Christian college must be two-fold, viz., intellectual and spiritual. I count these two absolutely essential for Ashland as I do for other denominational colleges.

Intellectual. Every college that has any sense of academic fitness, must strive to meet the best academic standards of the day. It is nothing less than a form of robbery to get young people to spend the best four years of their lives at college, and then give them anything less than the best in return. Life is too short, thorough preparation too essential, and results too far-reaching to do anything less for the young person than the very best possible.

In accordance with this ideal, teachers must be well trained and efficient. The day is past when a teacher's qualification is to be wholly determined by his personal character, important as that is. A college teacher must be so trained as to know his field very thoroughly. Even the high schools of America are demanding very high qualifications for their teachers and the colleges of the country may no longer employ teachers on personal or sentimental grounds alone.

Moreover, the material equipment, the buildings and grounds, the library, the sanitation, the laboratories, and all other material resources must meet the constantly rising standards of the times. We may not fancy this, but it is the naked truth nevertheless.

The courses of study must be modern, properly interpreted, well balanced, and suited to the needs of this present day. Degrees awarded at the end of the college course are worth little or nothing unless the subject matter is well attended to. A college must be exceedingly jealous of its standing in the scholastic world for its reputation is no less precious and essential to it, than is the personal reputation of the individual. Some colleges of America have become a hissing and a byword simply because they have held to no clear and high academic ideal. The higher this ideal, the greater is the worth of the graduation from such a school.

Ashland College has always striven to meet these ideals and is now, under the fine leadership of Brother Beachler, seeking to make it possible to reach still higher ones as they are sure to be presented to the colleges of the country within the next few years.

Spiritual. But the intellectual side of college life must neither crowd out nor overshadow the spiritual. It is a commonplace saying that no education is complete without the awakening of the spiritual fires of the soul and yet many colleges have absolutely no regard for this element. But a college such as Ashland, has absolutely no excuse for existence if it can not lay a valid claim to efficiency here. There are any number of schools that can do all the work Ashland can do, if we leave this latter ideal out of consideration. The first claim, then, of Ashland is that it is a Christian college and a close second is, that it is a Brethren College. It must stand, then, for all that is Christian and Brethren.

Such a college as Ashland ought to be the place where the soul of the young person takes fire for God. It is the place where one receives the baptism of the Holy Spirit, a baptism that means a surrender of all the powers to the advancement of right. It is the place where the enthusiasm is awakened evermore for service—unselfish, devoted, consecrated service. It is the place where there should come a spiritual awakening, such an arousing of the dry bones of unbelief and doubt, as will constitute a resurrection indeed and in truth. It ought to be the place and time where a new birth, as real and as potent as that referred to in the account of Nicodemus, takes place.

The church has need of such institutions. The world has no institution playing a larger part than such a one. Material resources, intellectual acumen and worldly advancement, all sink away and ought to forever remain secondary, accessory and non-essential when compared with this glorious ideal. Without colleges doing such a work, America would be naked, bleak, and frost-bitten in her heart. To sustain such an institution, to assist in making its ideals come true, ought to command the best endeavor of every consecrated heart.

Teachers in such a college must maintain a fine spirituality and an unsullied character, for the close personal contact between teacher and student is proverbial in small colleges. If there is any one claim greater than another for the small college, it is just this. Such colleges, as the years come and go, ought to become redolent with the consecrated and godly lives of its men and women, as is the case with some of our older institutions. Halls and grounds do not make a college, but consecrated men and women, teachers and students and all contributing friends, do make and make possible such colleges as are worthy of the best we can give them.

Moreover, a Brethren college ought to stand for all the best that Brethrenism has to give. It ought to be true to historic Brethrenism, as was so well outlined by Dr. Bame in the Brethren Day program. It ought to be the place from which a stream of power always flows for the service of the church. It ought to be shot through and through with Brethren ideals and ideas. If others falter, the college ought to point and lead the way to the fulfillment of these ideals. The fine loyalty which historic Brethrenism has always claimed for the Book, ought to be uppermost. The absolute lordship of Jesus in the life ought always to be kept in the forefront. The ordinances of the church ought to find expression at the right time and in the right place. The genius and spirit that has marked the greatness of the whole Dunkard movement in history, ought to dominate, especially its seminary, and leave an imprint upon the lives of all whom it may touch. This does not mean that students of other denominations are not welcome nor that we should seek to proselyte others to our faith, but it does mean that if we have anything vital and dynamic in our religion, we should not be without the courage to make it tell in the life of the college. And Ashland seeks to make these ideals real in the largest possible measure.

Briefly, these are some of the ideals I have in mind for Ashland College. There are others, athletic, social, etc., which I have not stressed for they are not so essential. And these ideals are not all new nor did they have their origin in the mind of the writer,—they are the ones for which Ashland has always striven, and, of course, sometimes failed to reach. And with the consecrated effort of all those who love our church, who cherish her splendid history, and who have faith in her future, these ideals may be made ever increasingly real in the life of her denominational college.

Forward Movement in Education

By Dr. D. W. Kurtz, President McPherson College

(Synopsis of address given at Church of the Brethren Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana)

The Forward Movement in Missions, Sunday school and education are one movement; none can succeed without the others. They make progress together, or not at all. I am exceedingly anxious that you see how fully the missionary work and leadership in church and Sunday school depend upon our colleges. All of our missionaries were students and most of them are graduates from our Brethren schools.

Since 1892 the state schools have increased in enrollment 600 per cent, while in the same time the enrollment in the Christian colleges increased only 10 per cent. But in spite of this fact, 94 per cent of our missionaries and 91 per cent of our ministers come from the small Christian colleges. The future leadership of the church depends upon the development of the Christian college.

The needs of the world demand Christian education. The cause of this war was due to the materialism of Germany which was best expressed by Nietzsche. In Germany 92 per cent of the population are peasants, who receive only a common school education. Only 8 per cent receive the higher education, 98 per cent of those are atheists; believers in Nietzsche, in materialistic evolution. This philosophy holds that "force" is the only reality. There is no God, no spirit, no personality, no freedom, no soul. All is force. Greatness means power—mastery over others who are subjugated and enslaved. Again, this philosophy is anti-Christ; anti-morality; anti-democracy; and the superman through war and destruction. The war is over, but the materialistic philosophy is not dead, it is the basis of most of the textbooks in Science, used in our own schools. Therefore it is essential that godly men teach chemistry, physics and biology. I am glad to say that in our colleges, these sciences are taught by men of the highest Christian character and devotion. It is the hope of the Educational Board that all our colleges hire only professors who are believers in Jesus Christ. This is very largely realized now.

The Forward Movement requires first, a minimum of 3,500 students in our colleges, 60 per cent of whom will be in the college department. At present only 700 are in the college department, while the goal requires 2,000. We have the boys and girls, but too many of them are now in other institutions.

We must have a minimum of $300,000 annually for endowment. This is the least possible for the present crisis. It surely must be oversubscribed. No college is standard unless it has at least $200,000 endowment, paid up, and productive, as well as adequate equipment, faculty and courses. The colleges are in a real crisis and must meet this soon. We have the means; all that is necessary is the vision and the co-operation.

The Forward Movement also aims at increasing the spirituality of the schools, and get the schools to have the vision of the church and of Christian service. Ninety-five percent of the students should take some Bible work; 20 per cent of all students should become definite church workers; and 50 percent of the college graduates should enter the ministry or mission field. It is a remarkable fact that in the past, of all the college graduates of the Brethren colleges, 45 percent are now in the ministry or on the mission field.

I am glad to say that all of our schools have Bible courses, and require Bible study for graduation in the academic courses. Some of our schools have full seminaries. McPherson College, for example, has a full Divinity Department, with five professors, who have their degrees, and this department offers graduate work for the M. A. degree and the B. D. degree. This graduate work is recognized by the larger seminaries and universities. Our schools are growing in this direction, and the spiritual life of our colleges is increasing.

Our college must train men and women for leadership. Not only ministers and missionaries, but also laymen who will be the pillars and supporters of the church. Therefore, we have the various departments, so that our children can get their sciences, agriculture, music, business, etc., in a Christian environment, and under Christian teachers, so that they will be loyal and enthusiastic supporters of the cause.

Let us remember, that the world needs Christian democracy, Christian civilization, and that no progress can be made in missions or church work, unless our colleges are patronized and supported. Let us send our children and our money to our Brethren colleges and help to prepare the leaders who must create a Christian civilization.

The Christian as a Friend to Man. By Willis E. Ronk

The purpose of this article is not to prove that a Christian should be a friend to man. The Christian, the true Christian, is a friend to man, for the very nature of his profession makes him such. The purpose here is to show the "moving force" and act of "The Christian as a Friend to Man." But what does it mean for the Christian to be a friend to man? Does it mean that the man is to be a bosom companion? Is he to know the every ambition or secret of the Christian? What is the relationship and what the moving force?

A man's attitude toward his fellow-man is governed by his conception of God. The higher the conception of God, the better the relationship between man and man. The highest conception of God is the Christian conception. Therefore we may expect "The Christian as a friend to man" to show forth the highest ideals, motives and acts. In the "Good Book," (Luke 10) we read of a man who fell among thieves, was wounded and left half dead in the way. And there was one who "came where he was, and when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him and bound up his wounds—and brought him to an inn, and took care of him." May this scripture illustrate to use part of the "moving force" and acts of the Christian as a "Friend to Man."

"The Christian as a Friend to Man" must not only Find and See Man

"When he came where he was and when he saw him." The later acts of the Samaritan depended on his going where the man was and on seeing him. Thus it is today; if we wish to be as a friend to man, we must find and see him. The average man of the world is not going to search out the Christian, in order that he may have a friend. The Christian must find the man and see him. Too often today we have been seeing men and preaching a wholesale condemnation and repentance to them; but have not seen the individual man, and far too often have reached neither the men or man.

Fortunate indeed is the man who sometimes has handled the pick and shovel in the gutter and seen the look of scorn of the passerby. That man will understand the attitude of the laborer in the ditch. There is a variety of steps in the social "seale" running from the laborer of the ditch to the millionaire and no man can experience all these steps; but the Christian whether he be of the former or latter type, or between the two, must learn to look at the other walks of life and see life as others see it. Otherwise his attempt to be a friend to man will meet rebuff.

The Christian as a "Friend to Man" must know man, but he must also

Have Compassion On Man

The Word says, "he had compassion on him." That is, he saw his wounds, he saw his sufferings, he saw the need and he suffered with him. Truly it is important that we learn to see and know man, but this is useless unless we have compassion on him. The actions of another man may seem unreasonable to us, but if we will see his viewpoint, his actions will appear to us in another light. Jesus on one occasion looked at the multitude before him and "had compassion on them." He saw them with all their sorrows, griefs, heart-aches and trials—as sheep without a shepherd—and he suffered with them. On another occasion he stood beside the grave of Lazarus and wept—wept because Lazarus was dead. He well knew that Lazarus, whom he loved, would soon be called forth. Was it unbelief that caused his sorrow? Possibly, or he wept because he looked out at the world's millions who had thus stood with bowed heads and heavy hearts—he suffered with them. Once more, he thinks of Jerusalem, her wickedness, her sorrows and her griefs and he cries, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, . . . how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wing and ye would not!" And the Master went on with compassion in his heart and finished his work for humanity. To be as a friend to man we must have compassion or else our efforts, to help will be unsuccessful.

When compassion is in the heart we will

Bind Up Man's Wounds.

"And (he) bound up his wounds." The man whom we meet in the way, may not have the same kind of wounds as he who fell among thieves, but the wounds are there and just as painful. What are his wounds? The wounds may be an outraged conscience, a spirit of depression, a feeling that one is alone in the world, or a multitude of other things. The wounds are there; they are real wounds and if we have seen him we have discovered them and we must bind them up.

If we but knew the struggle of other hearts! We see our own struggles but not the trials of another. Sometimes the happy smile or cheery word hides a heavy heart. Man tries to be brave yet the bravest heart sometimes longs for the word of encouragement or cheer. We become so engrossed in things of self—our troubles, our trials, our heart-aches or our triumphs—that we forget others. If we could learn the value of a smile or cheery word, many a sorrowing soul would be made to rejoice. The Master, during his ministry, was constantly in touch with human sorrow and he sought to bind up the wounds of man. So may we say with the poet:

"So I say, let me walk with the man in the road,

Let me seek out the burdens that crush,

Let me speak a word of good cheer to the weak,

Who are falling behind in the rush.

There are wounds to be healed, there are breaks we must mend,

There's a cup of cold water to give;

And the man in the road by the side of his friend,

Is the man who has learned how to live."

"The Christian as a Friend to Man" must also

Care for Man's Future Needs

"And (he) took care of him." The Samaritan cared for the future physical needs of the man. Let us think not only of the man's future physical needs but also of his needs in another sense. There is a man by the way, whom we have helped. We stop here; the man's heart is cheered now, but what of the future? Suppose he never meets us again, what of his life? Has he in that moment caught the truth that such help comes because we are Christians? If not his life will likely go on in old channels and we will have failed. As we meet man in the way we must never forget that his soul is of inestimable value to God and that he would have us seek to win his soul. In fact, it is impossible for the Christian to be unconcerned about the man's soul and be a real friend.

The Christian as a friend to man will find and see man, he will have compassion on him, will bind up his wounds and care for his future needs. Let us therefore, as Christians go boldly forth into life's highway. Let us have an undying faith in God and man. Let us seek to know man and knowing him, help him. Let us go forth to prove to the world that Christianity is a life. Let us buckle on the whole armor of God and go forth to victory in his name.

The Importance of Christian Evidences. By T. Darley Allen

It is the belief of Christian workers who have had much experience among skeptics that a great deal of unbelief is due to the ignorance of the average person concerning the evidences of Christianity.

A man who had been a skeptic for years says that when a youth he made the acquaintance of a well-educated man who was a fascinating talker and who for hours at a time would talk upon the Bible and present the objections to it that he had read in infidel writings. "As I had no knowledge at that time of Christian Evidences," says the narrator, "the talk of this man was fatal to my faith. Had I been familiar with, say, an intelligent presentation of the argument for the resurrection of Christ afforded by St. Paul's conversion, such as that of Lord Lyttelton, and known what present-day scholars say as to the genuineness of the first epistle to the Corinthians, in which St. Paul's testimony is given, the words of my infidel acquaintance would have had little or no effect. It would not have been necessary for me to know how to answer him: the sole fact that I knew one of the great arguments for the Bible, and consequently was aware that Christianity was not based upon a mere sentiment, would have caused me to realize that, however ignorant I might be of the mass of infidel objections, I did know that there were good reasons for believing in the faith of my father and mother. For I was not desirous of being an infidel. I wanted to preserve my faith. And this is the great point: The desire to believe when not existing in connection with such knowledge will not save one when confronted with such seemingly strong objections to Christianity as able infidels are capable of advancing. It seems to me that the advanced classes in our Sunday schools should have regular instruction upon the subject of Christian Evidences, and ministers would do well to see that such instruction is given."

Rev. G. L. Griffith of Troy, Ohio, told, a few years ago, of a series of sermons against infidelity he had preached in a town in Michigan, and that at the close of the series a man arose and said that he was the president of an infidel club but that he desired to say that as an honest man "there is not a thread of my coat left, and I want to place my feet upon a plank that will stand,"—his unbelief had disappeared in the light of reason as it came to him from a preacher who could intelligently present the argument for Christianity.

In the preface of one of the editions of the well-known work by McIlvaine on the "Evidences of Christianity," the statement is made that a copy of this book once found its way into a community that was notorious for the infidelity of its inhabitants and was the means of the conversion to a belief in Christianity of every one of them.

H. L. Hastings once said: "Infidels can be reached and have been reached. There are probably hundreds of converted infidels now preaching the gospel of Christ." Few men knew better than Mr. Hastings the causes of infidelity and how to cope with this great evil among the common people.

C. J. Whitmore, a preacher of London, England, said that out of twenty prominent infidel lecturers, editors and workers he had known in thirty years' experience in the great metropolis, sixteen had renounced their unbelief and had become preachers, editors or workers in other ways in the advancement of the religion of Christ.

The great Chief Justice Marshall was skeptical until convinced through the study of prophecy of the reality of the revelation of God in Christ.

Chalmers, the great Scottish minister of the gospel, had come, when a young man to the conclusion, from the study of infidel writings, that all religion is merely superstition. He was induced by some friends to read Butler's "Analogy of Religion" and was led through his reading of that work to the study of other books on the truth of religion. Years later he said: "Butler made me a Christian."

More Straw! More Straw! By Dr. J. L. Gillin

My mind goes back to a homely thing that happened often in my youth. As a boy on the farm it was my lot occasionally to be assigned the task of earing for the straw at what was then called "the tail end" of the threshing machine. That meant that it was my duty to keep the straw away from the carrier and fork it back to others who were stacking it. This was a dirty, hard job. Work on the straw was considered the worst job in threshing time. At the "tail end" was the worst position on the straw.

Moreover, the most difficult time was not when the straw stack was low, but when it had grown so high that the carrier could not be raised any higher. Then the man at the "tail end" had to fork the straw not only back but throw it up to the men higher on the stack. Moreover, when the stack got that high, it was usually along towards the end of the day when the threshers were hurrying in order to finish before night fell. Naturally the man who was feeding the machine had every incentive to push the grain through as rapidly as possible. Furthermore, at that part of the day every one was becoming tired and sometimes irritable. If the man who was keeping the straw back grew weary and allowed the straw to accumulate it choked up the carrier and threw a belt sometimes thus forcing a shut down and consequent delay. One other thing often entered the situation. Frequently the "feeder" was some young chap who wished to bury the fellow at the "tail end."

Now, when the feeder tried to bury him, one of two courses were open to him. He could let the straw pile up, stop the carrier and the whole machine, or on the other hand dig in a little bit harder and keep the straw back. If he were tired out and had no reserve strength left to meet the increased demands, he would probably get mad and stop the whole game. That, however, was felt to be a confession that he was tired out, a confession that no young fellow of spirit would make as long as there was an extra motion left in him.

Most of our crowd in that situation would just bend to it a little harder and try to keep that upward whirling mass of yellow straw out of the way. One autumn, however, we had a young man who when he was working in that position, always commenced the day with taunts to the feeder. He would score him with his remarks all forenoon until he had him in a fine temper. One could hear the threshers remarking at dinner time, "Just wait until that straw pile gets up towards the top. See what I'll do to that fellow." Then along towards sundown the time would come. A new fresh feeder would wander out to the engineer and after talking to him a few minutes, would climb up on the foot-board where the feeder stood and take the place of the man who had been feeding the machine. The engineer crowded on a little more steam, the bundles began to flow into that humming cylinder in a steadier and more rapidly flowing stream. The man on the straw was not asleep, he had seen

It is almost needless to say that evangelists and all Christian workers constantly in the public eye, as well as ministers, should be prepared to defend their faith in these days when the claims of infidels are widely disseminated by newspapers and pamphlets and in lectures throughout the land.

The late William S. Heacock said: "I do not doubt fundamentals nor discredit orthodoxy in the least, but I do want to know, . . . for my own satisfaction, I want a reason for the faith that is in me, so that I can confidently back up my position with good arguments and proofs, in order that I may intelligently persuade men to Christ. It takes me aback to have persons question me about things I ought to know in religion, and find me ignorant, and it impairs my usefulness, for I can not talk to many as I would like to about their souls, since I would be so easily tripped up."

the whole performance and knew what it meant. He just spit on his hands, took a new grip on that fork handle, increased the rhythm of his steady swings, let out a good strong whoop to attract attention, and then began to cry at the top of his voice, "More straw! More Straw!"

It was a challenge to the feeder to do his worst. The feeder bent himself to the task of so feeding the machine that the utmost possible volume of straw would pass through and up the straw carrier. The man on the straw perspiring so that the sweat made streaks down through the dust settled on his face, forked more rapidly and cried out his challenge. No feeder was ever able to bury him, or to make him mad. With a laugh and a shout it was ever "More straw! More Straw!"

I have told you this because in my mind it is a parable. I have seen men in hard places in life; they were at the "tail end" of the machine of life. They were eating the dust. Trouble has come to them; affliction has fallen to their lot; perhaps the family has been ill or death has visited the home. Or, perhaps loss of fortune has been their portion; or perhaps they voluntarily deprived themselves for the sake of a cause. Two different attitudes have I seen manifested by these men. On the one hand, I have seen men complain of their lot, and beg sympathy of a busy world. I have seen those who made a sacrifice for a great cause whining because that sacrifice meant deprivation of some sort.

Again, I have seen men who said not a word about their troubles, but bent to their tasks just a little harder with each new burden. Perhaps they did not smile quite so much, but no one knew why. They accepted the discomforts of life with fortitude and never seemed to think that they had a special grudge against the world.

Again, I have seen men meet difficulties and burdens with a challenge born of the joy of battle. Did they whine and complain when someone tried to bury them with difficulties? Did they beg for mercy of a fate that brought additional burdens at the end of the long day? No, they challenged fate or the powers or persons conspiring against them with the challenge of our valiant friend of the straw stack. They called for "More Straw." Into the teeth of difficulty they threw that joyous and inspiring cry. One cannot but admire their courage. Such is the stuff of which heroes are made.

Paul was such a hero. Hear him as he says to the Philippians speaking of those who preach Christ "thinking to raise up affliction for me in my bonds. What then? Only that in every way whether in pretence or in truth Christ is proclaimed; and therein I rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." Or, after telling them what things he had lost because he had become a Christian, does he complain? No, he says that he counts "them but refuse, that I may gain Christ and

The Deity of Christ. By Sylvester Lowman

TEXT: And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. Matthew 16:16.
(Delivered at the Southern California Bible Conference, at the First Brethren church, Los Angeles, California, March 6th, 1919.)

I have been asked to speak this morning on a theme that is fundamental to the Christian religion; it is a foundation stone to the church. Strike at the deity of Christ and you strike at the church. It is a death blow to Christ. This question involves the truthfulness or falsity of Christ. Either he was God and man together, or he was just a mere man as you and I are. If he was not Deity and man in one, he was only a mere man, and his claims are false.

I fear Christians will not be able to weather the increasing storm of denial of the deity of Christ, unless they understand with mind and heart what is meant by the deity of Christ. What I mean by the deity of Christ is simply this, that he was God, the supreme Being.

Our Lord knew that he must leave his followers, and he knew the question which above all questions would divide men when he had gone, and he sought to prepare his disciples for this testing. They had heard his teaching and watched the performance of his miracles. He had told his disciples of his coming passion and resurrection and it was not long until he was to reveal himself in them. But before that time of crisis he wished to reveal himself in his glory on the Mount of Transfiguration to the three disciples. On the way to the Mount he asked the disciples the supremely important question in its two-fold aspect: "Whom do men say that I the Son of Man am?" And then, "Whom say ye that I am?" Hear that matchless, marvelous answer of the passionate Peter, speaking for the disciples and for the church of all time. The answer was given him of the Lord, the Father in heaven revealed it. "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Our Lord then let him know that "upon this rock," not upon Peter, nor upon his confession, would he build his church. The rock was his deity, the fact that he was the very God made manifest in the flesh (Matt. 16:18; 1 Tim. 3:16) was the foundation of the church. On his deity hang all the law and the prophets. The gospels and all the epistles would be a farce and a lie if Christ were not deity, or the true God. The word deity comes from the Latin word "deus" meaning a god. The word divinity comes from the Latin word "divine." The Romans often used these words interchangeably in referring to their heathen divinities. In these last days, there are many who call themselves Christian who are ready to affirm that they believe in the divinity of Christ and not his deity. The Christian Scientists say that Christ was just a good man and that he was divine as you and I are divine, thus denying the deity of Christ. Russell says in his books, volume 2, page 129, "It was his flesh, his life as a man, his humanity that was sacrificed for our redemption; there was no deity on the cross." But O, beloved, listen to me, if Christ is not God in the flesh then we are of all men most miserable. Listen to this in Coulson, "Kernahan's Dream of a Christless World": There is the story of a woman dying in despair. By her side sits an old man with a flowing beard; he has a ponderous volume under his arm. She says to him, "I was once a Christian, but I read your book and it came between me and Christ. I went far away and now I am dying, and for the soul of me I cannot believe that he will forgive. I have sent for you, sir; you are so wise; it was your book that destroyed my once pure faith. Now I ask you what comfort you have to give a poor dying woman who has lost her faith and hope in Christ?"

The old man shook his head and when the dreamer looked again the woman was dead and the wise man with his book was gone.

As I look into men's lives and see how they are bound up with need and think how Christ satisfies that need, I see Christ as God.

Let me give you a few scripture references on the subject: "And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee and the power of the Most High shall overshadow thee: wherefore also that which is to be born shall be called holy, the Son of God" (R. V. Luke 1:35). "Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, before Abraham was, I am" (John 8:58). "And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God" (John 20:28). Hear heaven's own testimony: "And Jesus, when he was baptized went up straightway from the water: and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the spirit of God descending as a dove, and coming upon him; and lo, a voice out of the heavens saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. 3:16, 17). Again turn to Revelations 4:11, where he is declared to be the creator of all things, "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive honor and glory and power: for thou hast created all things and for thy pleasure they are and were created." And now hear Jesus' own testimony, "And now, O Father, glorify me with thine own self with the glory that I had with thee before the world was" (John 17:5).

According to the full revelation of the Bible, the deity of Christ means the Godhead of Jesus, that the historical Christ revealed in the four Gospels was the promised messiah of the Old Testament. I say to you this morning, that his coming in the form of man does not make him any less God, for as I see him out on the Sea of Galilee, he speaks to the wind and the waves and they instantly obey his voice and there was a great calm. Again I see him stand by the tomb of Lazarus who had been dead four days. He says to the dead man, Come forth, and at once he comes to life and goes back to his house.

Another element in the problem is this: There are many people who deny his deity but take great delight in calling him a great teacher. But can he be a great teacher without being more than that? To such I would say, "He is God or he is man; there are just two choices. To such I would read First John 10:12: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and that life was in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." It is necessary that this problem should be faced squarely and by every person; for on the deity of Christ rests the destiny of every individual.

You ask, "Why make so much stir about this subject?" Listen to this: Mr. Pace, in his cartoon entitled, "Judas," quoted an extract from the sermon of a minister in a supposedly evangelical church, referring to the Bible view of Christ which he says for nineteen centuries has given him a place of gloomy grandeur, this extract says that at last the brave have come, have questioned and explored. And we know that he was a man even as Lincoln, or as you and I; that his soul was divine as our souls are divine. See where we are leading to? See the signal, the Bible; it says, "Stop, Look and Listen. For I say to you that if he be not God, my last hope of salvation from the power and penalty of sin, is gone, as I am offered a Savior who cannot do for me what I need, and what he claims to be able to do for me. Establish the non-deity of Christ and you wipe out at one stroke the very foundation of Christianity and all hope of salvation is gone. And if this be true, I had better never have been born.

Finally, Christ was deity, because before Abraham was born he was. When he was born of the Virgin Mary, he was deity. When he hung upon the cross he was deity. When he rose from the dead he was deity, he conquered death, hell and the grave. He was deity when he ascended into heaven. He is deity now as he sits at God's right hand and intercedes for you and me. He will be deity when he comes in the clouds to receive his church. He will be deity when he comes in glory with his church to be Lord of lords and King of kings, and to sit on the throne of David. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

"The New Testament Our Sufficient Creed." By G. L. Maus

Certainly this is a subject that ought to be of interest to every member of the Brethren church. The greatest service that the followers of Christ can render either to their Savior to humanity is the work of acquainting men and women with God. He that goes forth with a Gospel message, goes forth on a blessed mission. It is a wonderful confession whenever an unsaved man or woman goes forward and makes a confession of Christ, and declares that he or she believes Jesus to be the Son of God, and their Savior and accepts the New Testament as their rule of faith and practice. It is my purpose and privilege to ever hold before them the word of God as their guide.

But some people may say, "What creed shall we adopt? My reply is, 'Adopt no creed but the Bible.'" The declaration made by the Apostle Paul in his second letter to Timothy (3:16, 17), that, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," shows that God intended the scriptures to be a perfect rule of faith and practice, that they were intended to perfect the man of God, and to thoroughly furnish him unto every good work. This proves beyond a doubt that no man can justly improve upon the Lord's design, and accomplish that for which the Lord so wisely planned. Three hundred years after the birth of our Lord, no human creed existed. The church was governed alone by the Word of God. This I believe ought to show that a human creed is of no use in the governing of the church. A creed will only engender strife and lay foundations for divisions. The Bible is the only rule of faith and practice on which men can unite as one body and one church.

There is one large body of believers today whose creed is no doubt the result of much learning in the world, and all it has ever done for that large body is to bar them from other denominations. No other people but themselves believe and receive it. The old and new schools of that particular denomination disagree upon the interpretation of it.

The same thing can be said about another large denomination's discipline. They claim superiority over others for their creed, upon the ground that it is nearer like the Bible than what other creeds are. The same can be said, in fact, about all who hold to any creed other than the Bible. It is good in proportion to its nearness to the Bible. Now then, if being like the Bible makes it right, why not take the Bible itself? IT is undoubtedly right, and is the only ground of union in Christ.

To the readers of this article, may I say there is no use to which any man-made creed can be placed. If a creed contains more than the Bible, it contains more than is right, for the Bible contains all that is required; and whatever any creed contains more than the Bible is objectional, and that part contained in it more than this, should be rejected, because it contains too much. On the other hand if a creed contains less than the Bible, it does not contain enough; and just as much less as it contains than the Bible, it is wrong, because it contains too little and should be rejected on that ground. If a creed is like the Bible, then the Bible will do and why not take the Bible as a creed. This is the only ground relative to a creed as I see it that any man can take, and if any one wants a creed, it surely must be because it contains more than the Bible, or it contains less than the Bible. If it contains more than the Bible or less than the Bible it adds to, or takes from the Bible, and "Whosoever adds to the Bible, God shall add unto him the plagues which are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take his part from the tree of life, and out of the holy city, which are written in this book" (Rev. 22: 18, 19). If it be different from the Bible, it contains another Gospel; and "If we or any angel from heaven, should preach unto you any gospel other than that which we preached unto you, let him be anathema" (Gal. 1:8).

I believe that I voice the sentiments of every young minister of the Brethren church when I say that we young men cherish the ideals for which our fathers stood back in "81," and we hope we shall not fall into error. Though we differ some in our theories of interpretation, we should hold to the "Old Book" as our sufficient creed, regardless of these differences.

What then should be our attitude toward human creeds? We should do with them what a good many ministers or—so called ministers—have done with the Bible, abolish them, throw them away, pronounce them as wrong, and stand up for the Bible and the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible as our only safe guide to heaven. The men who advocate a human creed are groping about in the dark. They cannot stand before the Bible and Bible men. They know that the Bible has God for its Author, while their creed is not from God, nor right, and with this knowledge they shrink before men, who believe, obey and contend for the Bible.

The Way of Life

The way of Life is a way of conversion. It matters little what term we use, so long as it signifies an experience of change, which lies at the root of all Christian growth. We are awakened, turned from the bondage of sin and the love of self, to accept the forgiveness of the Father in Christ, and to enter the way of life.

Changed lives may be called the scientific facts of Christianity. They come before us in a striking form in the histories of those who are rescued from weltering moral degradation to become honorable and useful men; but it is not less true that a change must take place also in those who have been brought up in homes where religion is respected, and who have not done anything which the world calls wrong. Let us not think that conformity with conventions of a semi-Christian civilization, or birth in the suburbs, as it were, of the Heavenly City, absolves us from the need of this change.—Ex.

be found in him." When the unfaithful Corinthian brethren have dragged out of him a confession of the sufferings which his apostleship has brought to him and he has mentioned the stripes and imprisonments, the fastings and perils and buffetings, he writes, "If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things that concern my weakness." No wonder Paul has been the inspiration of all those who suffered since his day! We all admire the man who can cry back the challenge, "More straw!"

Topic for June 22: Love. By Dr. J. M. Tombaugh

It has been said truthfully that "love is the greatest thing in the world," but it is not "in the world" that love has its home and center and seat. Love is of God, and heaven is its home, but as it is of the nature of love to seek out the unfortunate, the unhappy, the unworthy, so love has come into the world. The extent to which love abounds and is the dominating force in men's lives, is the measure of earth's likeness to heaven. When perfect love is come, when the atmosphere we breathe, when our food and drink, when every heart throb, every emotion and impulse of the soul is pure, tender, unselfish love, then earth and heaven will be blended into one and love will rule over all. Love as a principle, whether it be our love for God, for our fellowmen or for earthly objects of desire, is the most masterful of all passions. The soul is subdued and swayed by love; it gladly surrenders and is willingly carried away captive at its command. Force provokes opposition, fear compels unwilling submission; but love masters all. The sceptre of love is more potent than the iron rod of authority or even the stern rule of necessity, because it not only controls the actions of men but it leads them along the lines of their own inclinations and wishes, and so compels a complete surrender of the entire man.

When men are called to repentance, the compelling motive which prompts them to renounce their former disobedience and sin, and to accept a life of faith and service, is the wonderful love of God revealed in Jesus Christ. Other motives may be appealed to and are not wholly without weight and value, but a complete and willing and happy surrender is made to love and not to fear or hope of reward. There are three voices which sound in the ears and stir in the hearts of all men away from God. The purpose of the message which these three voices bring is the same; They all call upon men to forsake sin and seek the favor of God. One voice comes from Sinai; it is the voice of stern, unbending justice. The lurid flashing of the lightning of God's wrath, and the thunderings and threatenings of outraged law, arrest and terrify the sinner. Another voice, a gentle, pleasing voice, full of sweet persuasiveness, comes from Paradise, the heavenly garden of delight. It tells of happiness complete, of bliss unending, of home and safety and eternal rest. It is a sweet voice, the call is attractive and men listen with pleased attention, but still remain unchanged in nature or in conduct. Then there comes another voice. It is the voice from Calvary, tremulous with pity and suffering. It is the voice of love, of a love such as the world had never known before; tender, pleading, forgiving love; a love that passeth knowledge; a love that melts the heart and refines and purifies it; a conquering love which compels instant and complete and happy obedience. Jesus had said: "And I if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." It is love, of which the cross is the marvelous and matchless manifestation, that has power to draw men. Sinai may threaten, Paradise may attract,—but it is the love of God, exemplified in the dying Savior, which effectually draws men from sin to holiness and from a life of disobedience to one of faithful, joyous service. The citadel of the heart is never fully surrendered but at the behest of love. The triumphs of force are short-lived, and unless it is love that has compelled submission, the attractive power of the world may draw the man who had professed repentance, back into sin again.

Love works miracles. It is more potent than the sorcerer's magic wand which had power to turn everything it touched into gold. God's love comes into hearts that are selfish and corrupt and unfeeling, and it transforms and purifies them, and makes them tender and trusting and loving. It comes into lives that are sordid and cramped and narrow, and new visions of service and of the brotherhood of humanity are created. It comes to men who are sad and lonely and hopeless, and it imparts a new zest to living. It is like the coming of the sun in springtime. Nature had been in the embrace of winter; vegetation seemed to be dead; the birds were gone or silent; the streams were ice-bound. Then spring came with its warm showers and bright sunshine and brought new life and beauty to the world. So God's love turns our gloomy winter of doubt and sin and fear into the glorious springtime of hope. What God's love can do for us however, depends largely upon our attitude to it. It is true that the coming of the sun in summer means new life to the world, but the inclination of the earth to the sun means much too. As a matter of fact the earth is nearer to the sun in winter, in the northern hemisphere, than in summer, but because we are turned away from the sun, and his rays fall upon us obliquely, we fail to get the full force of his heat. But with the coming of summer, our part of the earth turns toward the sun again and his rays fall more directly upon us, and do we witness the yearly miracle of springtime. The teaching of the illustration is, that while God is not far from any one of us, and his love is accessible to use all, if we would profit by it to the fullest degree, we must put ourselves in a receptive attitude, and be ready to respond to it to the best of our ability, love for love.

To be loved—to be the object of a tender affection—is a great joy. To be the recipient of the rich treasure of some loyal heart's unselfish love, is to be fortunate and happy. To have the love of friends and neighbors, the love of little children, the love and Christian fellowship of the servants of God, even the humblest and meekest,—and, above all to have the sweet and tender love of Jesus, is a condition full of happiness and peace. But after all there is something better than this, something better than possessing the loyal, faithful and true affection of friends, better even—if anything could be better—than the warm, rich, compassionate love of God. And that better thing is—to love. The greater glory is not in receiving, but in giving. Perhaps the joy of loving is not sweeter than the joy of being loved, but it develops character more; it enlarges the heart and beautifies the soul more. To be able to love unselfishly that which is pure and beautiful and good proclaims our kinship to God, and the more we love, the more we become like him.

There are many proofs of true discipleship, and many tests which we apply to ourselves and to others in determining whether or not a work of grace has been wrought in our hearts, and whether we have partaken of the divine nature, but the simplest, and the easiest to apply of them all is the one given by St. John: "We know we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." If we are Christ's, then we have his spirit; our affections are like his—we love that which he loves, and we love as he loves. It is not easy always to love the unloving and the unlovely; it is not human nature to love men who hate us, or to love them when their state is such that we feel that they are unworthy of love, but there is something higher and better than human nature—it is divine nature. And if we are Christ's, we have learned to love as he loves, to love the unthankful and the unloving.

The nature of Christian love is set forth in St. Paul's matchless "hymn to love" in the thirteenth of First Corinthians. The love which we, as followers of Christ, should strive to possess, is a love which finds expression, in part, in forbearance and tolerance and patience. Frequent occasion will be found for the exercise of these graces in the home, in civil life and even in the church. Christian love is characterized too by acts of kindness and practical deeds of benevolence. The sincerity of our love is proven by sharing the burdens of others and contributing help in their need. Christian love "envieth not," it enables one to rejoice in the prosperity of others, and is without jealousy. In a word, our love for each other should be a copy of God's love for us. "Be ye therefore, imitators of God, as beloved children and walk in love."

And if love should grow cold; if the sacred fire upon the altar of the heart should seem about to fail and fall into dead ashes, there is but one way to revive the holy flame again; pray earnestly that God, by the breath of the Holy Spirit, might breathe upon the slumbering coals and kindle anew the holy fire of love to God and man.

Challenges to Love and Good Works—A New Idea for Buffalo, 1919. By Dr. F. E. Clark

"Let us consider the example one of another, that we may be provoked unto love and to good works," says the writer to the Hebrews, according to St. Chrysostom. That is just what I hope the Endeavorers will do at the Buffalo conference.

In a previous letter I proposed that we make Buffalo, 1919, a "Challenge Convention," and said that I would indicate this month how we might "provoke (by challenging one another to good words." For years past we have been learning how to do this in a small way, as challenges to larger service for Christ have been sent from union to union, or from society to society. Let us do it this year on a far larger and more systematic scale than ever before.

In all human affairs there is a great stimulus in friendly rivalry, in generous emulation. Let us apply this stimulus to the advancement and enlargement of Christian Endeavor, thus "encouraging one another" in Christ's service. There is one supreme thing to be accomplished by the Buffalo conference,—namely, to enlarge the Kingdom of our Master through Christian Endeavor. This we can do by enlarging our numbers and increasing our efficiency.

I propose then that states issue to each other challenges for a two years' contest for the largest proportionate increase in number of societies, and in the total number of members. We are doing our Master's will in offering and accepting such challenges for reaching larger numbers of young people with the message of Christian Endeavor.

I propose in the second place that states issue to each other challenges for the greatest number of Efficient Societies, their efficiency to be determined not by any complicated standards, but by our simple efficiency charts for Young People's, Intermediate, and Junior societies.

Other special challenges may be issued at Buffalo between the states for such important features as the largest proportionate number of Alumni groups, of Comrades of the Quiet Hour, Tenth Legioners, or for any special Endeavor feature the states may desire to emphasize.

Then at Buffalo, or soon afterwards, the state officers should make arrangements that their different counties or local unions issue similar challenges to each other, and the unions can pass on the challenge idea to the local societies.

I believe there are in this plan possibilities for tremendous enlargement and improvement. I send with this a list of the states, as arranged by Dr. Shaw, whose representatives are asked to attend the different sections of the "Challenge Conference" in Buffalo on Thursday morning, August 7th, and would suggest that these challenges be arranged, so far as possible, advance. Some suitable recognition of the successful challenges will be made at the convention in 1921, when Christian Endeavor will be forty years old.

Groups of Challenging States

Delegates from this group of states are requested to attend the Challenge Conference in Section I at Buffalo, on Thursday morning, August 7th:—

Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Hawaii, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Texas, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin, Canada.

Delegates from this group of states are requested to attend the Challenge Conference in Section II:—

Arizona, California, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Missouri, Montana and Northern Wyoming, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, Virginia, West Virginia, Wyoming, Foreign.

The churches where these Challenge Conferences will be held will be indicated in the conference programme.

Other Conventions

As intimated in Dr. Clark's message numerous conventions will be held during June, so many that the monthly service theme is "Conventions."

Ohio Endeavorers in Cleveland

Over June 24-27 the Endeavorers of Ohio will assemble in annual convention at Cleveland. The committee on arrangements has spared nothing to make this Ohio's best convention. Most of the sessions will be held in Gray's Armory. Prof. Homer Rodeheaver will have charge of the music, and the Quiet Hour sessions will be conducted by Rev. Dr. Foulkes who was a favorite last year. The forenoons are devoted to departmental sessions under the leadership of the state workers, assisted by National and Field Secretaries like Hiss Hooper, Mrs. Maier, Walker and Macrory. Inspirational addresses will be given by Drs. Bustard, Clark, Poling and others.

Brethren Endeavorers should take advantage of the rich opportunities afforded by this great convention, particularly those of northern and northeastern Ohio. The Miami Valley will be represented, too. While in Dayton recently, President C. W. Abbott of the Montgomery County Union and our Dayton society said they would have a delegation of about fifty.

Brethren at Winona

It is not too early to call attention to our yearly meeting at beautiful Winona. This year the dates are September 1 to 9. Every year witnesses the coming of an increasingly large number of young people. We want no exceptions. Let our young people plan to come. Why not form Winona Clubs in all our societies? When one or more persons decide to come others will be encouraged to do likewise. Boost for a large attendance at Winona.

J. A. GARBER.

Sore distress is a blessing in disguise if it drives men to Christ and teaches them the power of prayer and faith.

Peter thought he was strong and that was his weakness—self confidence. Our safety is in being Christ-confident.

MISSIONS

Our Home Mission Outlook. By G. C. Carpenter

A SURVEY

"Does the architect waste time when he draws elaborately exact floor plans and life-like elevations of the building whose construction he is asked to supervise? Is the engineer an idler when he stops to draft blue prints of each particular element that is to go into the construction of the bridge which he has contracted to erect?"

The lesson is outstanding when we consider the work of missions. Other denominations are making most extensive and intensive surveys and they are making estimates of the money needed to meet the pressing needs as they are revealed by the surveys and this is followed by the raising of the necessary funds. That is doing business for the king properly.

The application is not difficult. The Brethren Church has not practiced what we are now preaching as it should but plans are being worked out by which this principle which is so necessary may be applied to the Brethren home mission task.

THREE FIELD SECRETARIES

At the Winona Conference a year ago three field secretaries were elected and added to the Home Mission Board. Their task was not to spend all their time in the field but to keep in touch with their section of the home field and make a survey of that field as far as possible, the report of which will be made at the coming Winona Conference.

These secretaries were H. V. Wall, Long Beach, California, for the section west of the Rockies; G. T. Ronk, Leon, Iowa, for the section from the Rockies to the Indiana-Ohio line; and Horace Kolb, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for the section east of the Indiana-Ohio line.

EIGHT DISTRICT SECRETARIES

The secretaries of the District Mission boards in the eight districts of the Brethren church are by virtue of their office also members of our Home Mission Board and are expected to be present in the sessions of the Home board at the annual conference, and during the year to co-operate in every way possible that the most good may be accomplished by the combined and co-ordinated efforts of the district boards and the general home board. Each of the district secretaries can aid our field secretaries in making their surveys, and the district secretaries should themselves make surveys of their own districts and come to conference with facts and figures and plans for the home mission work of their respective fields.

"ON BUSINESS FOR THE KING"

Then when the Home Mission Board meets at Winona Lake the first of September they will have floor and foundation plans and life-like elevations of the mission building the construction of which the King has asked them to supervise. And the result will be that some new churches will be erected and new congregations formed as called for by the Four Year Program. Other denominations are doing the biggest things in their history, and the Brethren Church is called of God to an equal task in proportion to her strength. May she prove herself a "Whole Gospel" church.

GET THE MONEY NOW

The tithe will do it. That is God's plan. Let every member of the Brethren Church make the tithe the minimum of his giving and the Lord's treasury will overflow, and the spiritual power of the church will be multiplied many fold. How get the money? Let every preacher preach and teach the practice of paying the tithe as the minimum of the Christian's support of the Lord's work. Most people who oppose the paying of the tithe, do so because they do not want to practice it. They do not, as a rule, give but a small part of the tithe and therefore dare not advocate it. A Methodist pastor was using his "Minute Men" at the Sunday services to interest the whole church in the Centenary Movement, and one of them found that tithing was strongly advocated by his church and by the Centenary committee, and he said to the pastor, "I can not talk to the people because I am not a tither." But he signed up as a tither and then he could exhort all the people to do no less. Many preachers and church officials and Sunday school teachers are in the same boat with that "Minute Man."

TEN THOUSAND TITHERS

There ought to be no less than ten thousand tithers in the Brethren Church. How many are there at the present time? Will every one of my brother pastors write me a card stating whether or not he is a tither and how many tithers there are in his church? The Methodist church is pushing a campaign for a million tithers and surely the Brethren church should have ten thousand. Let our beloved church prove God and see the windows of heaven open wide.

TEACHERS NEEDED

Will the friends of our Kentucky mission work help to find the needed teachers for the fast approaching school year. One teacher will be needed at Krypton and perhaps two, and two teachers will be needed at Riverside. And later a teacher will be needed at Happy. The schools at Krypton and Riverside will open about the middle of July. May the Lord call forth workers for his vineyard.

Pledges Due

Every pledge should be paid by June 30. If that is impossible write us for an extension of time, stating at what time the pledge will be paid.

LIGHT-HOUSES

Christians are set as lights in the world. Some of them are comparable to the tall and graceful lighthouses equipped with the finest lanterns, while others may be but lower lights along the shore. All are expected to shine for God, and to maintain their position as long as their lives are spared. If the light burns dimly, even if it does not go out altogether, it is shed forth upon the world from a lower moral plane, and so misleads into ruin those who have been accustomed to look to the church members for spiritual guidance.—Ex.

Cabled word comes from newly arrived missionaries to the Near East that the field for missionary service is open as never before. One cable, transmitted by Admiral Sims to the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, reads: "Missionaries here in Constantinople and in interior, well and hopeful, with unexpected opportunities opening under pressure from England and France. Great numbers Christian children and girls hitherto sequestered, imposing enormous responsibility, impossible to evade. Tremendous need. All available force to be upon the ground at earliest moment and new recruits should be engaged upon language study in preparation for impending task. Entire country awaiting strong, sane fraternal Christian approach."

We need more "quiet hours," when we may receive grace and strength from God. Mighty men of faith were men of much spiritual meditation.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT WEEK

A series of interesting events bring to a happy close the collegiate work of the class of 1919.

There's a star on life's ocean shall cheer us,
When wildly its billows are tost,
'Till the haven of rest draweth near us,
And memory's sweet song shall be lost.

Wherever we follow our duty,
Our hope and our pride it shall be
To write upon pages of beauty,
Our debt, Alma Mater, to thee.

With an enlarged soberness of the responsibilities and opportunities of life, and with a juster appreciation of their powers and capacities, the class of 1919 finished their collegiate labors, celebrated their commencement, and passed out into the busy activities of life. To all of us, doubtless, who accept the opportunity of a college training, our college years are our happiest as well as our most significant years. There are no days over which the skies bend with such benignant promise as over our school days. There is no regard quite the same as that the graduate feels for the college that opened to him visions of the completer life and nerved his heart for loftier achievement and nobler endeavor. There are no years in which the mind may so feed and fortify itself with inspiration, with noble thought and passion as the college years. There are no friendships like college friendships, which make commencement seasons one of deep significance and chastened joy.

The thirty-fourth annual commencement began Sunday with the baccalaureate services at 3 o'clock in the college chapel, which was tastefully decorated for the occasion.

The Faith for the New Day

The sermon by Dr. W. D. Furry, the retiring president was one of Dr. Furry's characteristic strong inspiring idealistic efforts, replete with helpful advice, pointed comparisons, happy suggestions, and striking parallels. Dr. W. D. Furry said in part:

The past four commencements have been held under the shadow of the World War. Yours today is held under brighter and better auspices, for the war is ended and a new day opened. Your commencement today means both for you and the world the beginning of a new world-order.

Today old institutions and traditions are being challenged as never before. The challenge comes not only to establish forms of government to demonstrate their right to exist but to every institution of society. Our American Democracy is challenged. During the past one hundred years we have seen our American life and ideals going out to possess the world. We have witnessed also the rise of democracy throughout the world. But today democracy has triumphed. For the first time in human history democracy is threatened with success. The world of the future belongs to democracy. But the fact remains that our democracy is facing the challenge of its history. We have hitherto thought that our government represents the last word in democracy. Today we are questioning some of our most sacred governmental traditions and precedents. The age long Laissez Faire doctrine of Jefferson and our Revolutionary forefathers is today yielding to larger conceptions of property and human rights. The old-time emphasis upon property rights is giving place to a new emphasis on human rights. Man is no longer as merely a producing machine but rather the person for whom all things are made. Moreover, we now believe that there is something radically wrong in a country new and large and prosperous as ours when at any time ten per cent of the people are living beneath the poverty line. It is too true that here we have witnessed class rather than people rule. If here wealth has been created beyond the fondest dreams of avarice its distribution has been as capricious as its production has been rapid. The millionaire and the pauper are the twin-bloom of our civilization. The fact of hunger is back of most revolutions today.

Challenge to the Church

Today, urged Dr. Furry, none of the institutions of our modern society are challenged as is the church. To her the test is applied as never before. Today the church must vindicate her right to existence. To many persons the church lingers on today as a pious survival. Today needs are emphasized rather than creeds and the mere shouting of a shibboleth will no longer guarantee a following.

But to you reared in a Christian college and under Christian influence the challenge comes with peculiar emphasis. You, and others like you, leaving these denominational colleges today will determine in large measure how the church will meet this challenge. You are the products of the church college. The church must frankly meet the challenge of the new day and in a large measure you constitute the forces with which the church must work in meeting the challenge.

The Fourfold Challenge

The church today, and you, too, face a four-fold challenge and the truth remains that the life and usefulness of the church depend wholly upon the meeting of these tests. (1) The giving of the word upon which the church is builded and of which it is the custodian in the world. (2) To a new and larger appreciation of the world-wide responsibility of the church. At its last analysis the church is but the world-wide confession of faith and the goal of the Christian faith is a world-wide order of good fellowship. To establish a league of nations as an international order of good-will is the next stage in the movement of God's providence. America and the world today have no greater enemies and none who are contributing more to the delay and possible defeat of God's program for this generation than those who are seeking to defeat the League of Nations. Partisan politics aside, President Wilson must be regarded by every serious thinker as God's voice to this generation. This is America's Day of Visitation and she will never have greater opportunity to render the whole world a great service and thus bring greater luster to her name than now. (3) We must seek to bring every aspect of our American life under the influence of the Christian gospel. Great as has been America's impact upon the world in the past it will be ten times greater tomorrow. The collapse of autocratic governments in Europe and Asia during the past two decades is wholly due to the influence of America. Great will be our opportunities of intellectual and moral leadership. To no other nation in the world's history has so great opportunity come. It is not excessive enthusiasm nor sheer braggadocio to urge that as goes America so goes the world. But let our impact upon the world and our leadership be fully and frankly and freely Christian. (4) We must make the church life of America fully democratic. Doubtless today every aspect of our life and every accredited institution is more democratic than the church in which democracy had its birth and upon which it must rest for future growth and power. The present divided condition of the church is not only a scandal but the most fruitful source of the defection of the church.

To you, young men and women, members of the class of '19, has come the honor and responsibility of living in a new era and helping determine the character of the new world. I congratulate you upon your having come to the world at a time like this. We shall watch you, with all the sympathy and tenderness of a genuine Alma Mater. Your success shall also be ours. Your defeats should any come will also be our burden. In the spirit of the Master of us all leave these halls, assume your share of the task now stretching out before you—the task of making the world new after the fashion of faith.

The Class Address

was given Monday evening, June 9, in the Methodist church by Former Governor Frank B. Willis. In introducing the speaker of the evening, Mr. George Hildebrand, president of the Ashland Chamber of Commerce, expressed regret that Dr. Furry was leaving for another field of labor and satisfaction that so excellent a choice had been made in the selection of Dr. Jacobs as his successor, and urged the citizens to rally around the college, which is so important an institution in the city's midst. In his stirring and timely address, Mr. Willis spoke in part as follows:

The smaller colleges have a vital, a necessary and important work to perform. They have opportunity the university does not have. There is the element of personal contact with a great teacher, the inspiration of the more intimate relationship of the instructor with the various members of his classes. To know a great man or a great woman intimately and to have the helpful interest of that person day by day is a very great privilege and productive of benefits that endure.

Urging loyalty to the college, Mr. Willis stated that there never has been a time when the demand upon colleges and college men was so great as it is now. College men have always been leaders and have always done their full share. Never was there a stronger demand for Christian citizenship. In the past year we have put a new movement in the watch on the Rhine and they are all keeping time by it. Ahead of us are conditions that demand courage, strength and virile Americanism.

If the people are awake, there is no danger of bolshevism fastening itself upon our institutions, but if the people sleep no one can tell how terrible may be the consequences. In the Garden of Gethsemane, it was not the treachery of Judas that gave the Savior his anguish but that Peter, James and John slept when they should have been awake. God help us all to awake to the perils of the time. This nation has cost too much in patriotic sacrifice of lives and treasure to be wrecked on the rocks of disrespect of law. Our schools, colleges and universities who have rendered such excellent service in the past must give even more attention to the teaching of Americanism.

Mr. Willis urged upon the graduates the efficiency of plenty of good old fashioned work as an element in the attainment of success. The pathway of business life is strewn with many failures of brilliant young men who depend upon their brilliancy instead of upon hard work. Nothing can take the place of industry. There must be thrift, cheer and optimism.

"Don't be afraid to fight for the thing you believe in," said Mr. Willis. "What causes one the most regret is the memory of times when for the sake of expediency one has modified his opinion somewhat, and what gives one the greatest satisfaction is the recollection of the times when he has stood up for the things he believed in."

Sterling honesty was emphasized and the importance of being allied with the cause of the lowly Nazarene. There must be faith and there must be patriotism.

The Spirit of Truth: The Pageant

Beneath the trees of the college campus, a beautiful pageant, The Spirit of Truth, was given under the auspices of the Senior class by the students, to a large and delighted audience.

In the first episode was presented the Spirit of Truth which came to the earth spotless and pure with the advent of the matchless Christ. It was exalted by the supreme sacrifice on Calvary and ever since has been the inspiration of all that is good, the guiding lamp of man's destiny.

Conditions of this present day, which marks the period of transition from conflict to peace, were presented in the second episode. There, as before, the Spirit of Truth eternally prevails and speaks to its three associates, Religion, Education and Democracy, telling them of the new age that is dawning, an age in which progress must be the watchword. The ambassadors of the nations both great and weak are presented and they express their hopes in a League of Nations for the future of the world and the peoples they represent. Following this the four great evils of the world are brought in—Greed, Materialism, War and Tyranny—and before the throne of Truth they are condemned forever.

At the beginning of the third episode Faith, Hope, Love, Music, Poetry, Painting and Drama enter and express the ideals which must characterize the world of the future. Even though Materialism, Greed, etc., attempt to oppose them and gain a new stand, the evils are defeated and with the Spirit of Truth eternally prevailing the superior and finer spiritual graces conquer.

Junior-Senior Luncheon

The interesting and enjoyable feature of the commencement began with the dinner hour Wednesday and extended far into the afternoon, with an interesting round of speeches, recitations, music and songs, in which the alumni of the class of '18 were especially conspicuous. The toast to the S. A. T. C. by Mr. Nieschwitz and the "experiences of Sergeant Howard Leslie, lately returned from France, were special features.

Final Musical and Elocutionary Recital

Wednesday evening the chapel was filled to capacity with an appreciative audience to hear the final recital of the instrumental musical department, the vocal musical department and the elocutionary department, under the efficient direction of Miss Wilma Lichty, Miss Puterbaugh, and Miss Harveys, respectively. The occasion was heartily enjoyed by the audience.

Class Day Exercises

The culmination of the commencement program came with the class day exercises Wednesday morning, June 12, before an attentive and responsive audience. After the graduates, trustees, and faculty had taken their respective places, the invocation by Dr. Miller and a pleasing solo by Miss Lulu Wood, prepared for the regular commencement numbers.

Salutatory: Miss Pauline Teeter, the salutatorian introduced the general theme of the day, "Democracy," in a well written oration on "The Meaning and Demands of Democracy." She set forth the idea that while we may not have observed any startling innovations, we should not therefore conclude that the great sacrifice of the war had been in vain. Democracy has expanded in ever widening circles. The first step, the Declaration of Independence, was a "no trespassing" sign for North America; the Monroe Doctrine a similar sign for North and South America; and the Great War a "no trespassing" sign to autocracy everywhere upon the earth to "make the world safe for democracy." Thus she concluded, every man that thinks must henceforth think in terms of the world-order, and every man who labors at any task must make his daily work a part of the rebuilding of a shattered world.

"The Economic and Social Demands of Democracy" were considered by Herbert L. Ford: Our economic order must work away from one-man power toward the democratizing of industry. It must take the taxing power of monopoly from an irresponsible aristocracy and put the people in full control of their own livelihood. It must do away with the present unethical inequalities of wealth and approximate a human equality. There must be economic independence in order to make political independence, without which the Great War will have been fought in vain.

In a well written essay, Edwin Penhorwood outlined "The Demands of Democracy Upon Science," showing how science must contribute to the development of the better physical man, more efficient agriculture, industry, and happy home life.

"The Educational Demands of Democracy" was the title of a thoughtful oration by Lee A. Humphry: More and more are we coming to realize that political stability, civic righteousness, social purity, progress, and the possibility of attaining higher ideals, are all conditioned by the amount, quantity and quality of the education of the people. Democracy means co-operation. Hence education must be democratic. It must provide equal opportunities for all and be carried forward in an atmosphere where social equality and the spirit of helpfulness prevail, in order that the democratic Christian spirit, the foundation of democratic institutions is developed.

In a strongly delivered oration, Walter O. Nieschwitz considered "The Demands of Democracy upon Christianity": Idealism guided by Christianity produced Christian democracy. Misdirected science gave us the superman. The only solution of the problems of democracy is Christianity. The gradual alliance of the democratic peoples against a certain nation that sought to fasten autocracy upon the world was inevitable. Discovering through experience that their problems are common the nations must learn that the remedy is one, namely, the transformation of the spirit and genius of social and international life until it shall become like that of the Christ. Democracy is found at the heart of Christianity. The church devoted to preservation of the spiritual life of the nations, alarming conscience when evil invades, stirring its heart when suffering calls for help, energizing its will when duty calls, is the highest institution of democracy.

The valedictory by Edwin Boardman, Jr., was on "The New Interpretation of Democracy." In this splendidly delivered oration, Mr. Boardman summed up in striking phrase the various suggestions with respect to the meaning of democracy: Democracy is a new and universal spirit gathering within itself more of the spirit of Christ than has the spirit of any other age. Hence democracy is the incarnation of Christ in practical affairs. In harmony with the Christian spirit, the democratic spirit, the ideal is emphasized as of transcendent worth over and above the material. Democracy cannot be separated from the Christian faith, for it is this faith that stresses not only the supreme worth of the individual, but also the specific incarnation of the Christ life in the affairs of the world.

After the touching farewell words of the valedictorian, Dr. Furry presented the diplomas to the graduates in an impressive farewell message. Following this was the "Mantle Oration" by Mary Louise Switzer. In happy phrase she dwelt upon the beauty of loyalty to one's Alma Mater and the usefulness of tradition in fostering and maintaining proper collegiate ideals, and closed by placing the mantle, emblematic of the responsibility of maintaining scholastic ideals, upon the shoulders of the new Senior class president.

Upon Miss Lulu Wood fell the privilege of giving the "Class Gift Oration" in her becoming way. The class gift proper is a large and handsome religious painting which is to adorn the College Chapel, and will impress its silent lesson of devotion to the Christ upon the student body as they come and go with the passing years. ssssstoin and go with the passing years. Not less beautiful in spirit was the other class gift: a subscription of nearly $250 to the permanent endowment. Dr. Jacobs as president-elect, with fitting phrase and hearty gratitude, accepted these gifts in behalf of the College, dwelling upon the worth and value of the spirit which prompted them and the privilege and duty of all to promote the welfare of the Christian college, and upon the place of a college such as Ashland has been and intends to be more fully, as an institution where a student may have a veritable new triune birth: a birth into the fuller realization of the spirit of Christ, a birth into larger and completer knowledge, a birth into an ampler power of mind and soul. In announcing the gratifying results of the endowment campaign under the splendidly efficient direction of Rev. Wm. Beachler and his plans for the coming year, Dr. Jacobs electrified and inspired his audience to new enthusiasm and new effort. The future looks good. The students are happy and full of hope. Nearly all are expecting to return, many to bring others with them. The attendance must be doubled. With the passing of the war and other hindrances, the college will meet the demand for an adequate equipment, a deeper spiritual life, and fill its allotted place as the chief agency in creating a "Larger Brethren Church."

LISTIE PENNSYLVANIA

We closed a four and a half year pastorate at Brooklyn, Iowa, where there are some of as good people as can be found anywhere.

On the last evening prior to our leaving we were called to the church when on entering we found the people regardless of church affiliation present to the filling of the house. An evening was spent socially with a splendid lunch served on the cafeteria plan. We were given a substantial evidence of the appreciation and good will of the people in general.

After songs and prayer and farewells we boarded the train for Lanark, Illinois, where we visited the pastor and his family.

From there we went to Columbus, Ohio for several weeks. And from there we journeyed to Washington where previously we had served the people for nine years. It was a great pleasure to meet our old time parishioners and some new members as well. The church is doing fine under the leadership of our young Brother Stoffer, who is one of our promising young men. We visited in West Virginia and from there came to Meyersdale, where we visited another son who is pastor of the church there.

On April first we became pastor of the Listie church. Aside from the pastors who have served the church here, there may not be many who know where our town is located.

Well, Listie is a small but very beautiful town on the "B. & O." railroad leading from Rockwood to Johnstown. The hills are not very steep. The timber is at its best with its coat of green. We certainly enjoy it after living in a prairie country for many years.

Listie is a mining town and coal mining is the chief industry.

On coming here we found an excellent people both in and out of the church.

The church here has never had a pastor for full time until the present. They have a splendid front line Sunday school.

We are busy becoming acquainted and getting located in our new home.

Some two weeks ago we saw several ladies after the morning service talking in a subdued tone which awakened some little curiosity in our mind. However we just waited and on Wednesday evening two of the brethren were seen approaching our home and when we looked up the avenue we saw forty or more of both sexes coming down upon us. Well we just held up our hands and said Kamerad. You should have seen our table. It would have made you think the preacher was going into the grocery business. And then the ice cream was served to all. And as Riley said in his poem going to Aunt Mary's there was much to spare after all had eaten cream and cake.

While it was a complete surprise it was much appreciated. Some who could not come sent their gifts with others and some sent cash.

These gifts may not have meant so much to those who gave them but they mean ever so much to us.

May the blessing of a kind Father rest upon the Listie church. The pastor and people work together for the upbuilding of his Kingdom in this place.

FAITH IN GOD

It seems to me sometimes as if we look upon life as a chessboard in which the pieces played the game themselves. Now it is a knight, now it is castle, now it is a pawn, now it is a bishop, now it is a king that moves; and why they move back and forth, and what the end of it all will be, we are puzzled to determine. But these great historians of the past saw God's hand on the chessmen, saw him moving them, and knew that at the end white would checkmate the black and sweep the black off the conquered board.—Abbott.

The day well spent makes of yesterday a pleasant memory, of tomorrow a pleasant anticipation.

MINISTERIAL EXCHANGE

After four years of service at this place I have resigned from the pastorate of the Seargeantsville-Calvary churches and am open for a call to another pastorate. I shall be glad to correspond with any church or churches looking for a pastor with the purpose of making arrangements to take up the work about September 5.

MORTON L. SANDS.

Seargeantsville, N. J.

FROM LOUISVILLE TO ASHLAND

The editor has been making the trip "from Louisville to Ashland" for five months and now he is taking opportunity to write about it. It was the first of the year that he began his work as editor of The Brethren Evangelist. But he was not able to leave his charge at that time and at the same time be fair to his kind parishioners. It is only fair to both parties to say that we were unwilling to leave each other. The pastor loved his people and the people were very loyal and co-operative in their relation to their pastor. The relations of each to the other had been very pleasant, and in such cases it is always with reluctance that a separation is made. But the pastor yielded to the entreaties of the Publishing Company and to what seemed to be the will of God and is now seeking to serve the brotherhood as best he can in the capacity of an editor.

The nearly three years of service rendered to the Louisville church was not entirely without fruit. From thirty to thirty-five members were added to the church membership under the preaching of the pastor. No evangelist was at any time secured, though we made attempts at different times to get outside help. A new heating system was installed and paid for; the financial part of the undertaking being worked out and the money raised by the young men of the church during one month of a mid-summer. The financial system of the church was perfected and nearly all the members induced to adopt the weekly giving plan. In fact, the finances were budgeted both as to the computing of the expenses and the securing of funds to meet them. The Brethren Evangelist was placed on the church budget and every family in the church is and has been for nearly a year and a half getting the church paper. During one year all the Four Year Program goals but two were won and they were not missed far. This last year not such a good record was made owing to the conditions that interfered with church work in general. But the thing that was accomplished which will mean most for the church in the future was the aiding of the church to find itself in its community. Many of the members speak differently of the church's future than they did at the beginning of the pastorate. The church has received a new vision; it believes there is a larger place for it in the community than it before thought possible. It is not to the glory of the pastor that this is said, but to the people who were willing to accept leadership at a time when the community was realizing a revival as it had never previously experienced. If any predecessor had been there at the time he would doubtless have seen the coming of the larger opportunity and would have sought to grasp it for the church. This is what the retiring pastor sought to do, to call the church's attention constantly to the greater future that it could have, if it would. Hundreds of times the receptive people accepted the challenge, "A Greater Brethren Church in Louisville. We can have it, if we want it; if we want it hard enough." And they are beginning to want it with a seriousness that is a fair guarantee of its realization. And under the efficient leadership of our successor, Brother E. M. Riddle, this loyal people will go forward to heights yet unattained. They know how to give loyal co-operation to a pastor as much as any people that can be found, and there are a goodly number of as efficient workers as any pastor might expect to find. They were always charitable and forbearing with their pastor's mistakes. They accepted his plans that meant for a larger church and looked after his material needs in a splendid way. It was a joy to work with them and it will be a joy to remember their loyal co-operation as time separates us more and more. There is no doubt that they will give their new pastor just as loyal co-operation, for it seems to have been their habit. They have been loyal not to one pastor, but to all their pastors. And may God abundantly bless them and Brother and Sister Riddle as they work together for the enlargement of Christ's Kingdom. The retiring pastor and his wife are more than confident in the ability of their successors to carry on the work and achieve more than they were able to do. Though separated from the work they shall follow it with their prayers and interest.

NORTH GEORGETOWN

This little country church was a part of our pastorate. The pastor was not able to continue his work there after the first of the year on account of the inconvenience in getting there and the time it took off of the work at Ashland. The work for that place was reported last fall near the close of the pastorate. This church has suffered more than most country churches from the moving away of its young people and a goodly number of its adults. There was a time when its future looked very bright and a large number of young people were in the church and community. But nearly all of those young leaders are gone to other fields of work. In this Georgetown has done a noble service; it has given its young life for others. But these words are not written to discourage the faithful few (for there is a very faithful little band there and the pastor only wished there might have been more of the calibre of some of those who still labor there and are always faithful) who are there, but to disabuse the minds of the brotherhood of the idea that North Georgetown is a strong country church and ought to do so much more than it does. May God abundantly bless this little band and their new pastor, Brother Riddle, and may he lead them into the solution of their problems.

IN THE SHADOW

OVERMAN—Philip Taylor departed this life at his home in Roanoke, Virginia, May 5th, 1919, at the age of 22 years, 3 months and 24 days. He accepted Christ as his Savior and was baptized by the writer on July 8th, 1917. Taylor was of a quiet and kind disposition and loved by all who knew him. He called his father to him and told him that he was going to die and made him promise not to grieve for him because he was a Christian. He also gave assurance to his pastor that he was ready to go. He certainly made a good fight, not only for life but for Right life. Funeral by the writer.

L. G. WOOD.

McUTCHEON—Mrs. Aldora McCutcheon of Port Wayne, Indiana, was fatally injured April 29th, 1919, and passed away in a few hours. She was born July 4th, 1862, coming to Port Wayne at the age of twelve years. Her husband preceded her in death by 25 years. She is survived by one son, one daughter, one granddaughter and three sisters, one of which is Mrs. Clara Ebersole of the Huntington Brethren church. The funeral was conducted by Rev. J. B. Wilke of the Church of the Brethren, assisted by the writer.

J. W. BROWER.

BOWEN—Mrs. James Bowen, aged sister of the Burlington Brethren church died at her home near Galveston, where the family had taken up their residence on March 22. The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Elder Blickenheimer of the Church of the Brethren, at the home, March 24th.

W. T. LYTLE.

HAYNES—Rolla R. Haynes was born in Tama county, Iowa, May 28, 1891, and passed away at the Deaconess Hospital, Marshalltown, Iowa, May 28, 1919. He spent his entire life in the community, and near where he was born. He was well and favorably known. There is left to mourn his departure his wife, two children, his mother, three sisters and two brothers. May the bereaved be comforted in their sorrow. Services were held in the Friends church in LeGrande; burial was made in the LeGrande cemetery. Services were conducted by the writer.

God In The Nation's Life

Putting God in the Nation's life,
Bringing us back to the ideal thing—
There's something fine in a creed like that,
Something true in those words that ring.
Sneer as you will at the "preacher air,"
Scoff as you will at the Bible tang,
It's putting God in the Nation's life
That will keep it clear of the crooked "gang."

We've kept him out of its life too long,
We've been afraid to our utter shame—
To put him into our speech and song
To stand on the hustings and speak his name.
We've put all things in that life but him,
We've put our selfishness, pride and show;
It is time for the true ideal to come,
And time for the low desire to go.

Putting God in the Nation's life,
Helping us think of the higher thing
That is the kind of speech to make,
That is the kind of song to sing.
Upward and forward and let us try,
The new ideal in the forthright way—
Putting God in the Nation's life,
And putting it there in a style to stay.

Some Thoughts for Independence Day

There are some days so distinctly linked up with certain great events that they stand out as beacon lights outshining all other days. Independence day is one of that sort. There is no other day in the calendar that is of more vital interest and has larger significance for the nation and for every individual citizen than this day. It is to the nation and the citizens thereof, what Christmas is to the church and to Christianity. It is sacred to every true American and its annual recurrence brings to his mind certain great ideals for which it stands. The Christian citizen not only cherishes the long-fostered ideals of true Americanism, but is ever alert to opportunities to cause the ideals of his country to be more thoroughly permeated with the spirit and purposes of Christ. It is therefore the Christian's duty as well as privilege to contemplate the national ideals and to glory in them, and also to consider wherein they are lacking in the Christian tone and spirit and to plan how they can be made to conform with those ideals. Independence Day should not therefore be allowed to pass unnoticed or indifferently by, as if it had no message for us or was weighted with no significance. Every Christian should meditate on the meaning of the day and every church should give some recognition to the great truths for which it stands. It ought to be used as an occasion for the injection of higher and holier ideals into the minds of the citizens and into the life of the nation.

As we meditate, let us remember with gratitude the great blessings vouchsafed by our nation and the lofty ideals it has always cherished and championed. The most sacred ideal of our national life is that of freedom; it is the ideal that gave it birth. We cling to this ideal with greater passion than to life itself. It was the power of our passion for that ideal that caused us to pass through the travails of the Civil War. It was that that caused us to intervene in behalf of weak people persecuted and in chains. It was that that brought us into clash with our mother country more than once. It was that ideal that sent us forth to aid in the great world conflict for democracy. It is the hope of the realization of that ideal that brings millions from other shores to live under the benign shadow of the oldest and truest democracy in the world. Do we realize the greatness of that ideal and cherish it with true appreciation?

Another ideal for which America stands and which calls forth gratitude in our hearts is that all men are created with equal opportunities and privileges. Men are not born with equal intelligence, nor with equal wealth, but with equal rights so far as rights can be measured. It is one of the tenets of our national faith that no one should be placed under an artificial handicap that will prevent him from having an equal chance with his fellows to develop his talents and make the most of himself. Race, nationality or class should not be allowed, and is not according to the theory of our national policy, to interfere with the highest individual development and progress. Because this is our ideal, America has become the "melting pot" of the nations, and here many a cramped life has come to its own.

Freedom of worship according to the dictates of one's conscience has been one of the outstanding ideals from the landing of the first colonists to the present. The new world was settled in a passion for religious freedom. Persecution and intolerance drove them from their native land and out of their bitter experience they brought forth a new nation conceived in religious liberty. As much as political freedom and privilege has meant in the building of our nation and in attracting the depressed peoples of the world to our shores, far more has religious freedom meant. It is the one place where religion has maintained its purity and strength and exercised itself in all the various departments of life as it has not in any other land. Where a state religion holds the iron hand over all other forms of worship, there is sure to grow up a formalism, a hollowness and a tyranny that means the death of all true worship and the desertion of the house of worship by even those whose hearts are hungering for the bread of life.

Yet as we continue our meditations, we are forced to a realization of the fact that the ideals that we have long cherished and which have already meant so much to all who have come under the sway of the "Stars and Stripes," are not fully realized. They have been worthy, but have only begun to develop the noble fruit that under the pruning of God and the faithful care of man is possible. "There is yet some distance to liberty."

Once a Frenchman was addressing his compatriots on July 14—the French Fourth of July—and considerably stirred them by saying, "You talk liberty loud and long on this day, and you have written 'Liberte, Egalite and Fraternite' on every wall, public building and door post in France, but neither in your heart nor in your country have you got even the semblance of it yet. You are held down by a lot of tyrants and bosses in your government, you are slaves to capitalists in your industrial life, and in your hearts you are slaves to some of the worst vices that ever afflicted a nation."

These are very strong words, and we would not apply them to our own country on this Independence Day, for at this season, we can boast of a greater liberty and more equality than ever before, or than is to be found in any other country. But after all we must confess that true liberty is yet very far away. We celebrate not a completed liberty, but the first step toward freedom which we hope some day our nation may attain. For instance, we have not reached our ideal of freedom so long as 2,000,000 children in the United States are allowed or compelled to work when they ought to be in school or out in the open, developing as God would have them, strength and character for the strenuous and responsible days of adult life. One in seven of our little boys and girls are confined in cotton mills or are buried from early dawn to late at night in the coal mines or in the glass factories. We have not fully realized our ideals so long as the outlawed saloon is permitted to violate the law and men in high station and leadership in the nation encourage it and seek to give it a new lease on life. We have not grasped our ideals in the fulness of their Christian and humanitarian aspects so long as politics is permitted to play so prominent a part in so vital a matter as the ratifying of a world peace and a League of Nations. It is surprising to see how far selfish men will go in their desire to discredit any great accomplishment and make political capital of any move of a public servant not fully understood. The very men who were crying "Peace, peace, and world freedom" most loudly during the world war, are not placing every hindrance they can in the way of its realization. It is not the party that I am concerned about, for if the other great party had been in the saddle and had had the privilege of directing affairs during these critical days, I doubt not that there would have been men small enough in the opposite party to have thrown a wrench in the cogs of the governmental machinery. It is more than a supposition, for they show themselves up even now. Suffice it to say that we are very far from the realization of the Christian ideals in our public life.

So long as there is so much wickedness and crime in the land, so much infidelity to the laws of God and man and the Sabbath is so wantonly desecrated, so long as there are so many vicious and irreligious people among us, and so long as there are so many neglectors and even opposers of the principles of the Christ, our country is very far from the attainment of the ideals that are set before her. And the church which is to be the salt of the nation to save it from corruption and as a light to guide it to God, must realize that so long as these conditions prevail it is challenged by a great task and must seize Independence Day, Memorial Day, and every other season that will give it occasion to influence the national ideals for God and the right. If in the approximately two hundred thousand churches, with an equal number of ministers and from thirty-five to thirty-seven million church members, there were services held with the definite aim of imparting an impetus to the perfecting of our liberty and the stirring the hearts of men with a higher and holier patriotism, what a wonderful influence would be wrought who can tell? Let us remember that the church is responsible far more than she has been want to acknowledge for the standards and ideals of the nation. The sins of our national life, are in a large measure, a reproach to those citizens, and especially the Christian citizens, who fail to do their duty.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Johnstown Third church is getting more alive all the time, and every department of the work is moving forward under the able leadership of Brother Jones. The new church proposition seems to be growing in interest there also. It is surprising how many churches are talking building. It is a sign of growth.

Word comes from Brother J. A. Garber, who, with Brother Rowsey, is in attendance at the Y. M. C. A. conference at Lake Geneva, saying that they are having a great conference. Prof. Garber goes immediately from there to the Ohio State Christian Endeavor convention at Cleveland, June 25 to 27.

We have another installment of College Notes, but this time from the pen of the new president, Dr. Jacobs. President Jacobs promises to keep the brotherhood informed continually as to the work and plans of the college. The people will doubtless be more than pleased at this, because of the growing interest in the college. The report concerning the Summer School sounds encouraging. The president's ambition for a doubling of the attendance at the fall term is a high and worthy one, and every Brethren home where there are young people ready for college should, as a matter of duty, help to make this possible. Then with the enlarged endowment and the increased number of students, the college authorities will be able to grant to the graduates degrees that will be recognized anywhere.

Brother Gnagey handed us a news item received from Brother S. E. Christiansen, pastor of the Columbus, Ohio, mission. Brother Christiansen states that he has received four members by baptism since the close of the revival conducted by Brother Thomas.

From correspondence sent to Brother Gnagey, we learn that Brother Rench and his good people of South Bend are going forward. Brother Rench states that the church building is too small for their work, that they were swamped at their spring communion service, and that they went over the top in their Easter offering.

Brother Orion E. Bowman, our efficient secretary of the Missionary Board reports the receipts for April and May. It always gives one a feeling of satisfaction to know that he has paid his share of the required amount as these offerings are reported. We have, have you? If everybody had we would now be "over the top" instead of $1800 behind the goal.

You will find in this issue a report of the Maryland-Virginia conference. The splendid addresses that were given there makes one wish he might have been there. It is an interesting report, read it. We want to say to that district that they lost a good man, when their conference host and secretary came over to Ohio to sojourn. But Ohio, and Louisville in particular are the gainers.

It is not too soon to begin to plan for the delegation your church is going to have at the General Conference to be held at Winona Lake, September 1 to 7 inclusive. We ought to make this the banner conference in the history of the church. Two hundred years of Brethrenism in America! That ought to draw more than the full quota of delegates to help in the celebration of our BI-CENTENNIAL.

Another letter from our little African missionary is found in this week's issue. It is unusually interesting because it tells of a misfortune that befell the Gribble "home" and the good fortune that attended the missionaries in that no one was hurt. God protects his own. They have now located in a more favorable place. You will be interested also in reading about their new "kitchen" and "cup-board."

Brother I. B. Trout, pastor of the Berlin, Pennsylvania, circuit, says the work in his parish is going forward. He speaks some nice words about the Brethren Day program which his people used with profit. We have noted his suggestion regarding the publishing of the splendid addresses of Brethren Miller, Bame and Garber in the Evangelist and we think too, they deserve being read by a larger number than those who bought the program, though the patronage was splendid.

Sister Drushal writes this week telling of the many gifts of clothing, bedding, fruit, etc., made to the Lost Creek Mission. She writes in the same strain as every one else who has written from or about our Kentucky work,—enlargement is necessary if we are to come into our own. The needs of Lost Creek are computed, not in hundreds, but in thousands of dollars. But we ought to thank God that he has enabled us to develop such a large mission work and carry it forward to yet greater realizations.

Do not fail to read the report of the secretary of the Four Year Program Committee in this issue. Brother Goughnour has gone to no little pains to compile the report and if it does not make as good a showing as you had expected, just remember that it is the best that could be made out of the material sent in. Brother Goughnour writes some plain words, but if those who have been neglected could know what a strain it is to wait for reports that never come they would not complain at his words of reproach.

Brother Beachler has another report from Pennsylvania and has run the mercury out at the top. A new thermometer has been ordered, but did not arrive in time to run in this issue. He speaks some nice words for the little congregations just canvassed, and if the brotherhood could know the conditions, there would probably be as loud praises for the loyalty of these churches as for the larger churches who gave out of their abundance. Old Pennsylvania certainly did well, and the pastors and the district director of endowment, Prof. Edward Byers, deserve a great deal of credit for their co-operation with the campaign secretary. We shall look anxiously for Brother Beachler's next report from the Illiokota district.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Summary and Analysis of Four-Year Program Reports of Period from July 31, 1918 to Jan. 31, 1919.

By H. L. Goughnour

The secretary of the Four Year Program Committee has been very delinquent in submitting this summary and analysis. Sickness in his family and work incident to the canvass for College Endowment in his congregation have been the causes. He earnestly begs the forgiveness of the brotherhood.

The figures for the period mentioned above are given in the chart which appears below in parallel columns with the figures for the one-year period ending July 31, 1918. It might seem more fitting to compare the figures for the period mentioned in the title with the figures for the first 6 months of the year preceding General Conference, 1918. It has seemed to the writer, however, that we can best see where we are, and what we have to do before General Conference, 1919, by comparing with the last year's entire report.

Goals 8 and 16 are left out of account, as in the report of 1918. In each District except Southern California, the same number of congregations are considered in the 1919 column as in the 1918 column. Consequently, if the standing were the same as last year, the figures would be the same in the 1919 column as in the 1918 column, except in the case of Southern California. This District has reported one more congregation this year than last. The chart follows:

DISTRICTS	Number of Goals
	Gained		Progress		Lost		No Report
	1919	1918	1919	1918	1919	1918	1919	1918

Outlook Not Hopeless

At first glance the figures given above seem quite discouraging. There is one gleam of hope, however, in the fact that "Progress" is reported on 449 goals for 1919, against 340 for 1918. The period covered in the latest report was the period of the influenza epidemic. It is quite natural that many of the congregations were forced to report "Progress" on many goals that otherwise they would have gained.

However, we have no margin of safety. If all the surplus "Progress" goals are changed into "Gained" goals in the next report, which will be made in July, the number gained for 1919 will stand 699 against 768 for 1918. Yet, 20 congregations reported in 1918 that did not report in 1919. These 20 congregations reported an average of 10 goals lost, and an average of 4 either gained or in a state of progress. If these 20 congregations gain all of these goals before the next report is made, this will give 80 goals to add to the "Gained" column for 1919, making the total of "Gained" goals stand 779 for 1919, against 768 for 1918.

This would be an advance of 11 goals gained. But, the new congregation in Southern California reports 6 of these. This leaves an advance of 5 goals gained, if all the surplus "Progress" goals in the last report are changed into "Gained" goals before the next report, and the 20 congregations mentioned gain all the goals they gained last year and change all their "Progress" goals of last year into "Gained" goals, and report.

"The chances are mighty slim," you say. They are indeed. Yet, a fighting chance remains to us.

Considering both the "Gained" and "Progress" goals, the totals stand 1039 for 1919 against 1108 for 1918. If the 20 congregations mentioned should report the same as last year, and the new congregation's record is deducted, 1105 "Gained" and "Progress" goals can be registered for 1919 against 1107 for 1918. Inasmuch as the past year has been the hardest year in church work that any of us have ever known, to accomplish this would be some encouragement. But, those 20 congregations that reported last year and did not report so far this year, must report in July or we cannot do even this.

A Preacher on a Rampage

If some of you don't want your hair tousled, don't read the remainder of this article. The secretary takes all the responsibility for what is here written. General Director Bame has been zealous but always kind. The District Directors have been patient and hard-working. With me, for a short time, patience has ceased to be a virtue, and I am going to write some things that need to be written.

Why, under high heaven, should there be 1400 goals upon which there are no reports? Each congregation should report on 14 goals. This means that 100 congregations out of 201 congregations have made no report this year.

Last fall at General Conference everybody present seemed to pledge himself to see that reports would be sent in. Is this the response? Every one of our Districts has endorsed the Four Year Program. General Conference has promoted it. It seeks only the progress of every activity of the church. Yet 100 out of 201 congregations do not report.

Put Up or Shut Up

Other denominations are raising hundreds of millions of dollars to push their programs. We say that they do not stick as close as we to the New Testament. Yet one-half of our congregations are too indifferent or lazy to send in a little post-card report. We have got to "produce the goods" better than this or admit that we are hopelessly decadent.

Selfishness

Some preachers do not co-operate in the Program because they "do not want anyone to supervise their work," or because they do not like some one in the Four Year Program organization. These preachers ought to be ashamed of themselves. They put their own little independence and their private grudges above the welfare of the denomination. Now as never before the world knows that co-operation is the key to progress in every organization. Is this co-operation? A good brother boasts, "If the Kaiser had been a Dunkard the world war never would have occurred." Yes, and if the Kaiser had known no more about co-operation than many who are of Dunker training do Germany would never have been more than a bunch of little, two-by-four states. We are a small church today, though this is our bi-centennial year; and we ever will be a small church or none at all, unless we throw away our selfishness and work together.

Laziness!

Many reports are not sent in because of pure laziness. What is the matter with Michigan? The five churches in Michigan have not sent in a report either last year or this year. Can't some one, please, in some one of the churches in Michigan get up enough "pep" to send in at least one report and stop this awful monotony of making Michigan a blank in every column but the "No Report" column? Get some "go" into you, Michigan! How in the world they can manufacture Ford cars in Michigan is more than I can understand; for Ford cars go.

But, 95 other congregations are just as lazy or lacking in the spirit of co-operation as are the churches in Michigan. Here they are: 7 in Iliokota; 14 in Indiana; 7 in Kanemorado; 24 in Maryland-Virginia; 2 in Northern California; 12 in Ohio; 29 in Pennsylvania. This year, as last, Southern California has no "No Report" churches. "Hats off to Southern California," I say.

This laziness is made insufferable by the fact that printed post-cards for the purpose of making the reports are contained in the Four Year Program Hand Book, which has been sent to all pastors and congregations. To make a report it is necessary only to write a name and address on each side of the card, and write 16 capital letters, one letter on each of 16 different lines. My, what a task this is! A report containing 16 letters! Do we expect these overburdened pastors and church officers to do such an appalling amount of work? In reality, however, a very short sentence may contain 16 letters. Here is one selected at random; see how brief it is: "We are all very lazy." And some are so lazy they won't write a report containing just this many letters to help their own denomination reach the goals of its Four Year Program.

I Am the Goat

Personally I accept the responsibility for this truthful article. Brother Bame and all the rest of the Four Year Program organization have advised repeatedly that we use sugar instead of vinegar. I believe that a little vinegar now and then is relished by the best of men. I am sending this analysis without their knowledge. The next report, which will be the final one before the 1919 General Conference, will be called for between July 20 and 31, 1919—this is next month. If any of the "No Report" congregations want to act fairly by sending in a report, and do not have a Hand Book, if they will send me a post-card requesting one, I will gladly mail them one or as many as they want. If any would prefer to receive a Hand Book from C. A. Bame, write him at North Manchester, Indiana. Please remember, however, that I have written in behalf of our common cause, and not in the slightest degree because of any personal grievance. Anyone may have a Hand Book by writing a card requesting it.

GENERAL ARTICLES

How the Path Was Found Again. By J. Allen Miller

How the true path of life in Christ was lost is a long story. Our blessed Lord Jesus himself came to show us how to live. He taught us perfectly the Father's will. It is all to be found so clearly and plainly set forth in his Gospel. How the first disciples understood Jesus and how they carried out his teachings we may learn from the Acts and the Epistles. The record of all this is our New Testament and it is attested by God's Holy Spirit as true and worthy of all acceptance. The rest of the story we must find in church history. It was not long after Christ left the earth until men began to corrupt his word and substitute their own notions. In spite of the protests of the faithful of every generation for a thousand years the church was more and more lost as she drifted farther and farther away from Christ and his Word. Then the Dark Ages came on and for five hundred years more the darkness grew. The path which Jesus had so clearly pointed out for men was lost. His teachings were corrupted or forgotten. Man substituted his own rites for the divinely appointed ordinances of the church of the living God. Life was sadly wanting in the Christian characteristics as revealed by the Gospel. Here and there men arose who protested but all in vain. They died as martyrs for the true light or else were silenced. And so the "Old Paths," the doctrines and practices of the apostolic church, were lost.

Then came the era of the great Reformation. When men first began to see the light of truth again the church herself turned persecutor and quickly and mercilessly snuffed out the flickering torch and the life of the bearer himself. Thus died such men as John Huss of Prague, Tyndale who gave the English a translation of the Bible, Savaronola the hero of Florence and many hundreds of others. Then came Luther and the great Protestant Reformation really began. The power of the Catholic church in northern Europe was broken. Many evils were corrected and many false teachings were repudiated. The gospel was given to the people and a new day actually dawned. From 1517 to 1648 the struggle, fierce, relentless and bloody, was waged for religious supremacy. Then by treaty after thirty years of terrible war involving all Europe the struggle was ended. Three state churches now were recognized and all others were denied the right to exist.

After a hundred years more of struggling toward the recovery of the truth of the gospel and experience of the divine life in the soul large numbers became separatd completely from the state churches. These were the so-called Separatists. They felt that the Reformation had not gone far enough. Vital and essential truths of the gospel were utterly neglected. The rich fruits of the spiritual life were wanting. Men were not satisfied. Just what they needed was keenly realized but how and where to find it seemed an elusive and hidden quest. Confusion of beliefs resulted. The wildest fanaticism obtained. All the while the heavy hand of persecution pressed upon these sincere but unfortunate seekers of truth and light and life in Christ. The untold sufferings endured by these innocent seekers after truth forms a dark page in history.

But persecution's bloody threat could not calm the ardor of these heroic men and women. Many earnest and devout dissenters of the last half of the seventeenth century taught a much purer and fuller gospel than the established churches. It was in the circumstances thus too briefly sketched that the first members of the church whose faith we yet hold were born and reared.

Of these original eight we learn the following from a little book published by Alexander Mack in 1713: Everywhere men heard the call to repent. They beheld with sorrowful eyes the great decay in spiritual things. Little meetings were held here and there by these newly-awakened souls and many faithful testimonies were given. Driven from place to place they finally found refuge at Schwartzenu in the province of Wigenstein. Many different opinions were held; they differed greatly in manners and customs. They studied the Word. They were led to consider the obedience of faith that saves the soul. Some faltered, some turned toward other leaders. Out from among these religious refugees in Wigenstein came the eight with Alexander Mack as their leader and minister. He himself says: "This state of things continued until the year 1708, when eight persons agreed with one another to enter into a covenant of good conscience with God, in order to take up all the commandments of Jesus Christ as an easy yoke, and thus to follow the Lord Jesus, their good and faithful Shepherd, in joy and sorrow, as his true sheep, to a blessed end." Then after giving the names of the eight he continues his account as follows: "These eight persons bound themselves together as brethren and sisters unto the covenant of the cross of Jesus Christ as a church of Christian believers. And when they had found in authentic histories that the early Christians, in the first and second centuries, had been planned into the death of the crucified Christ by a three-fold immersion into the watery bath of holy baptism, according to the command of Christ, they then sought industriously in the New Testament, and found everything in it perfectly harmonizing with this early practice."

Thus after long study and earnest prayer they yielded to the command of Christ and obeyed. Just as they had thus been led to restore the apostolic mode of Christian baptism they also restored in the church they organized the other teachings of the gospel as practiced by Brethren everywhere today.

Alexander Mack relates how the church grew in numbers during the next seven years. God wonderfully blessed the new movement and raised up from among them strong preachers and witnesses of the truth as it is in Christ. The Schwartzenuau congregation grew rapidly and by 1715 there was here a large church. A second congregation was formed at Marienborn. Other churches were organized and the membership spread even to Switzerland and Holland.

With such a growth the opposition of the state churches was soon aroused. With no legal standing these groups of Brethren became the victims of bitter persecutions. Deprived of their goods, driven from their homes, imprisoned or sent to the galley they endured for their faith. Heroic men and women they were! If time permitted one would be profited to hear their story of faithful endurance for the principles of the New Testament. Let us hear just one brief incident. At Crefeldt in 1714 certain members of the Reformed church became dissatisfied with their infant baptism and the practices of the church. They applied to the Brethren for membership and were received by trine immersion. This led to great confusion and turmoil among the officials of the state churches. The government summoned six persons before the court to answer for their actions. The judge was a Catholic. The six were condemned to hard labor and for four years they suffered. The year 1715 marks a new outburst of fury against these "quiet and pious people" as the governor of Schwartzenuau called them in 1720.

Persecution scattered the congregations. They began to look towards America. Hither the first party came in 1719 under Peter Becker. Ten years later what remained of the mother-church, which in 1720 had been driven into Friesland, came to America. The entire congregation consisting of fifty-nine families with their minister Alexander Mack landed at Philadelphia, after a stormy voyage of seventy-one days, on September 15, 1727. In 1733 the last group under John Naas came to the New World. Of those who remained in Europe some returned to the state churches or identified themselves with other dissenting groups. Persecution and emigration disintegrated the movement in Europe and by 1735 no organized work remained. Doubtless a few more came as immigrants to America after 1733.

Behold now what these pioneers wrought! They had been reared in established churches but became dissatisfied with their spiritual existence. The deadness of the existing churches, their disregard for the plain teachings of the gospel, and the poverty of the real Christian virtues and graces in the life of people and clergy drove them to search the Scriptures. Thus through a reading of the New Testament and a study of the history of the early church they were led to restore in a new organization the primitive faith of the church. How well they did this we may testify today.

The scanty accounts of the great leaders of this movement read like romances of faith. There was first of all Alexander Mack, wealthy, educated and deeply religious. He was the first minister and well did he give an account of his calling! The purest and highest motives actuated his whole life and he gladly paid the price of his convictions. His body rests at Germantown, Pennsylvania. John Naas, a man of commanding presence, venerable in countenance, a great preacher and scholar, is doubtless the second in influence among the early leaders. His body lies buried at Amwell, New Jersey. Christian Libe is described by Brumbaugh as an eloquent, gifted evangelist, and whose voice was heard all along the Rhine valley in defence of the faith he loved. Time fails to tell of the others who in Europe championed the cause of the restored gospel.

Hail to the blessed memory of Alexander Mack whose conscientious convictions resulted in the organization of the church of our precious faith. Hail to the memory of John Naas, "the incomparable teacher," and of Christian Libe the bold preacher, and of Christopher Hochman, the friend of Mack, and of whom another said "he was a rare man." Hail to the memory of all godly, bold and heroic leaders of the Brethren faith. May we be worthy followers of the same Master!

So Is Every One Born of the Spirit. By Samuel Kieh1

The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit (John 3:8).

In the parable of the sower, Jesus is telling his auditors what a blessing the "seed," the word of God, is to sinners who receive it (Matt. 13:23). In John 3:8, he is telling Nicodemus of the blessedness of those who are born of the Spirit, who have the Spirit of God dwelling in them. He is not teaching him something about the wind which he already knows, but he uses that to illustrate to him what every one that is born of the Spirit is; not what he does, or will do.

Supplying (by permission) an ellipsis we have, "As you (Nicodemus) are; so is (Not as the wind is, or as the wind does: so is). As you, born of the flesh, are to fleshly environment; so is every one that is born of the spirit to spiritual environment. As you, a natural man, are to natural phenomena; so is every one that is born of the spirit to spiritual phenomena.

The natural man knows that in the air he lives, and moves, and has his being; that wind is air in motion(at work); and under certain conditions he hears the noise (voice of the wind), but whence it cometh and whither it goeth he can not tell. As the natural man's relation to the wind is; so is the spiritual man's relation to the spirit.

The spiritual man knows that in God, the Lord, he lives, and moves, and has his being; that God works in him both to will and to do his good pleasure (Phil. 2:13); and under certain conditions he hears the voice (the word) of God saying unto him (when doubting), Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding (Prov. 3:5). When forsaken he says, Rejoice in the Lord alway (Phil. 4:4). He will not fail thee nor forsake thee (Deut. 31:6). When despairing, the eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms (Deut. 33:27). When aged, Be of good cheer (John 16:33). Christ hath gone to prepare a place for you. He will come again and receive you unto himself, that where he is there you may be also (John 14:2, 3). In his presence is fulness of joy (Psa. 15:11).

Thus do those who are born again, who have the spirit of God dwelling in them, receive spiritual comfort and consolation from a word of God dictated to them (impressed on their hearts and minds) by ministering spirits (the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost (John 14:26), the spirit of truth (John 15:26; John 16:13, 14), or angels sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation (Heb. 1:14); whence the spirit comes, or whither he goes they can not tell; but they know whom they have believed, and are faithfully following the supernatural scriptural leading of the invisible, heavenly messenger; knowing that as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are sons of God (Rom. 8:14).

Dear reader, do you and I have such supernatural scriptural leading, bringing to our heart and mind the very word of God to help us just when we need it? If we have, we can sing, "He leadeth me." If not, let us examine ourselves, whether we be in the faith (26 or 13:5).

The Church.

By N. J. Paul

As we understand the term "church," it is the entire body composed of those who are savingly related to Christ. It may mean a particular Christian denomination or, a building dedicated to Christian worship. It is essential to keep these meanings clearly in mind to prevent confusion of thought in our discussion upon this subject.

The fundamental meaning of the term as we want to discuss it, is the whole company of true believers—those called out from the world into the spiritual communion of which Christ is the head. From what we understand, it is plain that, according to the New Testament scripture, the church, in the deepest and truest sense of the term, is the entire number of the saved, whether upon earth or in heaven, united in one spiritual household by salvation through Christ.

It embraces thus both "the church militant" and "the church triumphant." The visible ecclesiastical organizations upon earth are not, strictly, the true church for such organizations have commonly embraced some who are not true believers, and the forms and methods of those organizations are marked by much that is merely human and correspondingly imperfect. These organizations are called churches largely by way of accommodation. They are worthy of the designation only in proportion as they represent the spirit and purpose of Christ, who is the Head of the true church.

Thus it appears that, while the churches are not identical with the church, they are nevertheless more or less perfect representations and are more or less helpful and necessary instrumentalities. And, further it should be remembered that Christ contemplated, and in some measure arranged for the formation of churches. The apostles who were specially authorized to carry forward his work, labored not only to lead men to a saving knowledge of Christ, but were active also in establishing churches. But it is clear from the New Testament scriptures that the churches, as visible institutions, along with all their human elements, are required to contain a divine element which gives to them great dignity, importance and power. These considerations prepare us to appreciate justly the conflicting views as to the true idea of the church.

The Relation of the Church to the Kingdom of God

The relation of the church to the kingdom of God is a matter often involved in confusion through inexact use of terms. As a visible institution the church is not the kingdom. At most, it is a training school of the kingdom of God. We are permitted to think only of the invisible church as being identical with the Kingdom which is referred to so frequently. And even of these two, the term "the kingdom of God" has often the broader meaning, as is indicated by the statement, "His kingdom ruleth over all."

Unity of the Church

Christ prayed that his followers "may all be one." Again he says, "My kingdom is not of this world." All Christians are bound together in "the unity of the Spirit" having "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all" (Eph. 4:3-6). Only by adhering to the word of God as the "rule of faith and practice" can the church save itself from two extremes; on the one hand, that of unduly magnifying the authority of the visible church and, on the other, that of laying aside its highest claim to recognition and obedience. Quite generally the true idea of the church is lost sight of and the church assumes too much or too little.

As has already been said, the church is a body of believers in Christ. In order to give the church power, as she should have, she is in need, first, of converted members; Second, consecrated members; third, members who are willing to deny self; fourth, perfect co-operation of the membership and; fifth, members yoked together in love.

Conversion—It does not mean merely to join the church while we hold to the old evil habits and practices of which we were guilty before we came into the church. Conversion means a change of heart, or of a disposition whereby the obstinacy of the will is subdued and life is given over to a supreme love for God and his Kingdom. It means a complete change of life. If we join the church, and still hold on to our old habits, we simply assist the Devil in taking away what power the church already has. That kind of a Christian is one who professes he knows God; but in works denies him (Titus 16, see also Jude 11:22).

Consecration. Members of the church should be consecrated to the extent that they are ready and willing to cry out and say with Paul, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do." To the extent that we are unwilling to make a complete sacrifice for the sake of Christ and the advancement of his Kingdom we are a hindrance to the work of the church. Again, consecration requires us to be sociable for the sake of Christ and the church. Have a smile for every one, a good word for all, a disposition to associate and be congenial with others. Especially should a disposition of sociability be shown toward the stranger. With these characteristics we give the church influence, that will enable her to accomplish much good and to be a power in the world.

Self Denial—As we search through the Scriptures, we find that when our Lord called his disciples to his work all seemed to have had this spirit of self denial, for none of them offered an excuse, or held any reserve for self (Matt. 16:24). We should by all means be interested in the church to the extent that we will see that God's storehouse is first filled. It is sad, but too true that many professed Christians look after self first and if anything is left they give the Lord the refuse (Matt. 6:19-21). Let us remember God's cause comes first; he wants the first fruits (Ex. 23:19). If this principle were carried out as it should be, the storehouse of God would always be ready to draw upon and begging for the church would soon be a thing of the past.

Co-operation—If the church lacks this principle, this one thing which is most needful, she lacks all. Without co-operation we can accomplish very little or nothing in the Master's service. Co-operation of the American people gave us power that soon won the great world war. Co-operation in the church will be the stepping stone to success. We can not all be ministers, neither can we all be deacons, nor can we all be pastors, but we can all be helpers. We can, we should, we MUST supply the ministers of the Lord so that they may be able to give their entire time to the spreading of the gospel (Acts 6:2). Our body is composed of different members and we have use for them all. So is the church composed of different members, and by co-operation we find work for all to do (1 Cor. 12:13-14).

The one great sin that is creeping out in the church in these last days, is the sin of jealousy. We become jealous one of another; are not content to do what we can; always aspiring to a higher position in order to gain more for self. We are not willing to humble ourselves and work where we

The Bible God's Inspired Word

TEXT: All (every) scripture is given by inspiration of God.—2 Tim. 3:16.

(An address given by A. V. Kimmell at a Bible Conference of the Southern California Churches, held in Los Angeles)

It is a source of surprise even to Bible students, when they look up the number of times the writers of the Bible declare that their message is God's word. So much of the time we are looking for outside proof that we forget that the best proof of the truth and inspiration of the Bible is the Book itself.

Because we so often take this matter for granted I want you to follow as I present a few of the many passages that could be given on this point. First we will take a verse that declares verbal inspiration and at the same time suggests in mighty plain terms that the Lord will preserve his word as well as give it, therefore we need not marvel that in the hands of fallible men we have an infallible record. I purposely choose this passage from that portion of the Bible which the critics would have us believe is all wrong, one of the books written by Moses, Exodus 17:14. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua." Certainly we recognize that this was written concerning some of the minor affairs of Israel, but if the unimportant detail is so absolutely proven how our confidence in the big questions of the Bible is strengthened.

Who can read the following passages and reject inspiration? Ezekiel 1:3,—“The word of the Lord came EXPRESSLY unto Ezekiel the priest.” Jeremiah 1:4,—“Then the word of the Lord came to me saying,” now to the seventh verse,—“Whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.” Isaiah 1:10,—“Hear the word of the Lord. Give ear unto the Law of our God.” When we say that these words are the result of inspiration we do not mean that the writers were filled and thrilled by some human emotion that led or carried them beyond the ordinary efforts of men, but that the Lord so possessed them that they spake and wrote as his instruments. Now before you reject this statement, let me say that I am only giving you the thought that Luke puts in words (Acts 1:16), “Men and brethren, this scripture must needs be fulfilled, WHICH THE HOLY GHOST BY THE MOUTH OF DAVID SPAKE.” It is the joy of my heart and the life of my ministry to know that the Bible is not merely the exalted work of some good men but that through men the Lord himself spake to us. Not only once or through one person for (2 Timothy 3:16), “ALL (every) SCRIPTURE IS GIVEN BY INSPIRATION OF GOD.” There is sufficient external and internal evidence to prove without doubt that from Genesis to Revelation we have scripture that was included in the apostle's “ALL” or “EVERY.”

Just when our faith is a little shaken or when the devil suggests that the writings occurred so long ago that no one can be certain, and when modern wise men have given us the results of research, along comes another high mountain of truth from Peter's second epistle, first chapter and twenty-first verse: “The prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but HOLY MEN OF GOD SPAKE AS THEY WERE MOVED BY THE HOLY GHOST.”

Brethren if this Book is not true the God of the Old Testament is a liar; if this Book is not true the Lord Jesus Christ of the New Testament is a liar; if this Book is not true the Holy Spirit in his message to the apostles was a liar; Luke, Paul and John together with the others quoted above were all liars.—IF THE BOOK IS NOT TRUE! Now I hate a lie. Put a man who will lie in a tight place and he will do more than lie. One of the hardest scriptures for me to take literally is to hate a lie and yet love the liar. If you prove my Bible a lie and its Author a liar, you can have all the rest with it. I am an unbeliever, a skeptic, an agnostic. This is just where modern Bible rejectors, even some ministers, are putting thousands of men and women today.

Some will say, “These are the words of an alarmist, a fanatic,” now wait; a few years ago we said the trend of Bible criticism was toward the rejection of the Book as God's complete revelation to man and many replied, “This is impossible. We never can be shaken in our belief in the Bible,” and you are living to see in this our day the literal fulfillment of that prediction, for there is now advertised and on sale a book called “The Shorter Bible” conspicuously deadly because of the passages which it purposely leaves out. One authority states that there are seventy-five passages setting forth the inspiration and authority of the Bible omitted, some of the verses which I have quoted above. The scriptures which refer directly to Christ's substitutionary atonement are studiously avoided. The verses which so positively declare that Jesus Christ will return again and which have never been successfully contradicted have been dropped. The parts of the New Testament which speak of the decline of the church are thrown out and what do you have left? Just such parts of the Holy Word as will not interfere with man's ideas of how heaven and earth and hell ought to be run.

With this actual, positive proof of where this Bible tampering is leading us, dare we rest in contentment and ease? I tell you, No. “When ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, BUT AS IT IS IN TRUTH, THE WORD OF GOD.” (Thess. 2:13).

To thus receive the word of God is to develop a love for it. Now there is a vast difference between love and worship. Our most zealous love is due the Bible as God's word. We never accord the mere book worship. If tearing the Bible as a book to pieces will convert a sinner, then tear the book. If tossing it in the fire will convince a man that he is lost and cause him to cry for salvation then burn the book. You can do this and yet love the Bible. You could never do this if it were worshiped as a God. Love the Word, do not worship it. “I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food.” “Thy words were found and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart.”

Every believer should be a lover of the word of God. The Bible alone reveals the matchless charm and character of Jesus Christ. The Bible is absolute in its integrity and power. The Bible is the revelation of the will, purpose and plan of God, and the contemplation of such facts will produce love and desire for the Word.

God's Children Forgetting God

OUR SCRIPTURE

They provoked him to jealousy with strange Gods, with abominations provoked they him to anger. They sacrificed unto devils, not to God; to gods whom they knew not, to new gods that came up newly, whom your fathers feared not. Of the Rock that begat thee they are not mindful, and hast forgotten God that formed thee (Deut. 32:16-18). In that day shall his strong cities be as a forgotten bough, and an uppermost branch, which they left because of the children of Israel: and there shall be desolation (Isa. 17:9, 10). And forgettest thou the Lord thy maker, that hath stretched forth the heavens and laid the foundations of the earth; and has feared continually everyday because of the fury of the oppressor, as if he were ready to destroy? And where is the fury of the oppressor (Isa 51:13)? Can a maid forget her ornaments or a bride her attire? yet my people have forgotten me days without number (Jer. 3:32). Therefore will I scatter them as the stubble that passeth away with the wind of the wilderness. This is thy lot, the portion of thy measures from me, saith the Lord; because thou hast forgotten me and trusted in falsehood (Jer. 13:24, 25). Because my people hath forgotten me, they have burned incense to vanity, and they have caused them to stumble in their ways from the ancient paths, to walk in paths, in a way not cast up (Jer. 18:15). Am I God, at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off? Can any one hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the Lord. Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord. . . . How long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophecy lies? . . . Which think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams which they tell every man to his neighbor, as their fathers have forgotten my name for Baal (Jer. 23:25b, 26). In thee have they taken gifts to shed blood; thou has taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbors by extortion, and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord God (Ezek. 2:12). For Israel hath forgotten his maker, and buildeth temples; and Judah hath multiplied fenced cities: but I will send a fire upon his cities, and it shall devour the palaces thereof (Hosea 8:14). According to their pasture were they filled; they were filled, and their heart was exalted; therefore have they forgotten me (Hosea 3:6). But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you (John 14:26).

OUR MEDITATION

One of the Scriptural indictments against man for his forgetfulness of God is based upon the fact that God is man's creator. Man has forgotten the "God that gave him birth, Jehovah, his maker." As creator God is Lord and Master, who says, My people have forgotten me." Sometimes this forgetfulness is the result of prosperity; sometimes it is the effect of avarice. There is a feeling of sternness, as well as grief, in God's attitude towards these forgetful and neglectful individuals, for he shows the inevitable penalty. Sometimes forgetfulness is not wilful, and so in the New Testament our Lord promises a Helper who will bring to our remembrance those of his words that have slipped from our minds.

It is a sad refrain, and it runs through the Scripture from page to page, "My people have forgotten me." Forgotten is an intense and awful word. Open and deliberate revolt shows, at least, some respect to his power. And even tion of God's existence. But to forget this, to live and to plan and to work as though he were not, to dismiss him as insignificant—this is surely the last expression of a separated life.

"Afraid of a man that shall die and forgettest thou the Lord thy Maker?" The fear of man destroys the nobler fear of God. I suppose that one may say that two commanding fears cannot occupy the soul at the same time. The fear that is created by the cracking of a whip cannot drive out the fear that possesses an animal shying at an unfamiliar object by the roadside. It seems as though one fear draws to itself all the energies of the mind and the other fears are left with no sustenance. A big tree in a garden-bed sucks into its fibres the juices of the soil for many yards around, and other growths are starved, and they wither and die.

So fear to man drains to itself the mental energy and devotion which ought to feed the fear of God. A politician who is moved by the fear of man, who shies and changes and sidesteps to avoid the hostility of man cannot retain a wholesome, efficient conception of God. So it is with the minister who is afraid of man, his mind is not filled with a vision of "the Lord high and lifted up." It is equally as true of anybody in any kind of work in life. The fear of man takes away their healthy fear and regard for God.

The fear of man is a snare and the power of a snare is to be found in its fascination to lead the mind of man away from the fear of God. "Afraid of man that shall die, and forgettest thou the Lord thy God?"

And here is another type from the portrait gallery of the Bible: "Thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the Rock of thy strength. Here is a forgetfulness that is born when we have recovered from some weakness. Our weakness helps our remembrance of God; our strength is the friend to forgetfulness. Perhaps this is most apparent in our physical weakness. In our weakness we remember the Lord, and the dim things of the unseen come clearly into view. But when our strength is regained then our vivid vision fades again, and is sometimes entirely lost.

Frailty in any direction makes us lean upon the power of the Almighty, and in every frailty our remembrance of him is keen and clear. But our strength helps to create a feeling of independence, and we become unmindful of our God. And therefore it is that a man who never knows weakness has a stupendous task in maintaining communion with God. People who never know what it is to be ill have so many more barriers to overcome in their fellowship with the unseen.

A man's devotion is apt to dwindle as he becomes more successful. Our piety does not keep pace with our purse. Absorption in the bounty makes us forgetful of the Giver. We can be so concerned in the pasturage that the Shepherd is forgotten. Our clearest visions are given us in the winter-time when nature is scanty and poor. The fullness of the leaf blocks the outlook and the distance is hid. And the summer time of life, when leaves and flowers are plentiful, is apt to bring a veil. The very plentifulness impedes our communion.

There is a very gracious promise of the Master in which I think all these perils are anticipated, and in the strength of which they can be met and overcome: "He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to you." John 14:26. Here is the promise of a gracious minister to the memory, strengthening it in its hold upon the unseen.

OUR PRAYER

O Lord God, thou who hast created us and dost sustain us and looketh to all our needs, we come to thee with humble acknowledgement of our forgetfulness. We have sinned in that we have forgotten thee. We are unworthy to be called thy children because we have forsaken thee when thou wast guarding us round about like a tender father. Forgive us, we pray, our sins, and take away our shortcomings. Do thou not hold against us our forgetfulness, and do thou strengthen our hearts that they may not forget thee evermore. May thy Holy Holy Spirit come and abide with us and bring all things that thou hast spoken for our good to our remembrance. And may we never forget or neglect thee in the days and years to come as we have in the past, and keep our hearts ever tenderly sensitive to thy gracious will. We have feared men more than we have feared thee. We have allowed prosperity to take away our affection. In the midst of our strength we have thought we had no need of thee. So many things have come between us and thee. But we are determined by thy grace to keep our minds and hearts upon thee continually henceforth. Wilt thou now in very truth give us faith to lay hold of thy great and abundant strength that we may be true to thee evermore. In Jesus name we pray. Amen.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

What Our Cradle Roll Could Be Doing. Mrs. H. H. Wolford

We take for granted from the subject that the Cradle Roll is already organized and in working order.

1. If we want to do anything at all we must have a wide awake superintendent, one who is loved by children and is able to enter the homes and make herself a welcome guest. And this superintendent must have helpers. Then secure the co-operation of your pastor. Have him report to you the babies in the homes he visits, also give him an announcement to be read from the pulpit, reading something like this: "Our Sunday school invites all children under three years of age to become members of the Cradle Roll. If any present are acquainted with children under this age will you report their names to the superintendent or take an application card to such homes to be filled out and return them again to the school."

Also have the Home Department superintendent to report the babies in the homes they visit.

Talk to the children quite often in the Beginners' Department, telling them what the Cradle Roll is, and asking them to bring the names of their little brothers and sisters.

Another very important thing is the paying of a visit by the superintendent to the mother and baby. This should be done before the name is enrolled if possible, if not then immediately afterwards.

Have the Sunday school to let you have a few minutes once a month for the reception of Cradle Roll members. This occasion will bring the mother and perhaps the father to the Sunday school.

Another thing we can do is to give the mothers a place in the Sunday school by having a class especially for them, where they may feel free to bring their babies and come. If once we get them to realize that we really want them, they will be glad to come.

After the third birthday, or when the child can attend with regularity, he should be transferred from the Cradle Roll to the Beginners' class or department. At this time he may be presented with a promotion certificate.

Be sure to have a Cradle Roll chart hanging on the wall where it can be seen and be prompt about putting the name on the chart. Some have large frames with each baby's picture in it who are members of the Cradle Roll. This is very pretty, and mothers will be proud to have their pictures in it.

A report should be given at least monthly in the main school. Every opportunity ought to be used to recognize the child and bring the main school into touch with it. Christmas, with its treat, Easter, with its eards, and the birthday with its greetings should all be remembered by the superintendent.

We should have annual receptions for the mothers of the Cradle Roll, also quarterly socials. In this way the superintendent gets better acquainted with the mothers and the mothers with one another. The quarterly social may be held in the church parlors or at some home, having a short program, a good social time and then light refreshments may be served. Provide people to take care of the children so the mothers will be able to have a good social time together.

One successful school has for its motto: "We seek the last one." They also had a monogram button with the representation of "The Good Shepherd," holding a lamb in his arms.

So we see that the Cradle Roll could be the means of reaching all ages and classes of the community and bring them closer together.

can be of the greatest use and where the church sees fit for us to labor. We should encourage the spirit of co-operation, and when we have that spirit, the church will become powerful, and will be able to accomplish that whereunto it has been called. So long as the church must take her best talent out of her pulpits and make them beggars, to go from one congregation to another to beg money to carry forward the Lord's work, so long will the cause be dragging. We should soon arrive at the place where we will be ready and willing to give even without an invitation. If a member must be coaxed to give, and then he gives grudgingly, what reward can he expect to receive? "He that soweth sparingly, shall also reap sparingly." "The Lord loves a cheerful giver" and possibly he hates a tight-wad giver. "The liberal soul shall be made fat." "Freely ye have received, freely give." Should God withhold his mercy from us, as we withhold from him what belongs to him, we would be most miserable. It is a sad thing that men get so low that they will commit these night robberies which are so common now. But much sadder is it to see the professed follower of the Lord Jesus Christ rob God, and that, in broad daylight. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings." The question has often come to my mind, Why will men be so fair, so true, and so honest with their fellowman that he would not cheat him out of one cent and at the same time shta m m fhwewewetun, wffrtgevaom, mSsei withhold from the Lord the things which belong to him. The Jews sought Pilate to have Christ crucified, not because they do not believe in the law of Moses, or because they did not believe in God the Father, neither because they did not believe in Abraham, Isaac or Jacob, but because they did not believe in Christ. It seems at this day and age of the church, we as professed Christians do not withhold our support from the Father's cause because we do not believe in his Son; the great trouble is, we somehow do not believe in his teaching. If we truly and sincerely believed in all the teachings of the Master, there would be no lack of funds to carry on the Lord's work. "He knows the thoughts and the intents of the heart."

LOVE—Love will prove a prime factor in this case. Men love their families, their homes, or ought to) and do not withhold anything that will add to the comfort of their loved ones. If we had that sincere love for the church, that we profess to have, how could we withhold our support from it? Would we not rather freely give to the church for which Christ gave his own precious BLOOD to establish? Would we no give if we only thought how that he has given us life, and life more abundantly. Let us realize the fact that all we have, or all we can expect to have, comes from the good and liberal hand of God.

Losantville, Indiana.

There is no man as happy as the Christian. When he looks up to heaven he thinks: That is my home, the God that made it and owns it is my Father. Yea, these things which are the terriblest of all to the wicked are most pleasant to him. When he hears God's thunder above his head he thinks: That is the voice of my Father. When death comes he esteems it but as the angel set before Paradise, which admits him to eternal joy. And (which is most of all) nothing in earth or hell can make him miserable. There is nothing in the world worth envying but a Christian.

The Vital Importance of Conventions. By Dr. F. E. Clark

Some great conventions are just ahead of us. Fourteen state conventions come in June, many of them in our largest states, and, as a climax to all the Endeavor gatherings of the year, our International Conference in Buffalo in August.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to overestimate the importance to our cause of such conventions. Christian Endeavor from the beginning has set the pace, in size and enthusiasm, for religious conventions all over the world. None have been so large, none more inspiring, none more influential. They seem indigenous to Christian Endeavor soil, and they always bear rich fruit.

I have attended such conventions in many parts of Europe, Asia and Africa, as well as in North and South America, and these are some of the fruits I have seen grow on convention trees:—(1) a peculiarly joyous Christian fellowship; (2) a new vision of the largeness of our tasks and our opportunities as Endeavorers; (3) a new sense of the power of the Spirit, "who helpeth our infirmities;" (4) new plans for the future; (5) new resolves and new inspiration to carry them out. These are only a few of the many convention fruits, and there are as many flavors to different conventions as there are to the fruits in my orchard.

Think of the great Endeavor advances that have had their rise in our conventions. In Old Orchard, '85, the United Society; in Montreal, '93, the good citizenship movement; in Boston, '95, the World's Union; in Washington, '96, the Quiet Hour movement; in London, 1900, the International emphasis; in Agra, 1910, the convention of missionary zeal; in Atlantic City, 1911, "A Saloonless Nation by 1920"; in Los Angeles, 1913, "The Millions Campaign"; in Chicago, 1915, "The Efficiency Standards"; in Winona, 1917, the Sustaining Alumni plan.

I cannot begin to write in this brief letter of all that Endeavor conventions, international, national, state, county and local, have done for our cause. It would require a volume to tell the tale. Every one of our great conventions has projected some large, definite and important idea which has blessed Christian Endeavor everywhere. I have mentioned a few of them.

What has been will be. The past is a prophecy of the future. Your state convention will have a special message for every society in the state, and for every individual Endeavorer who attends it. Our International convention will present plans that will, if carried out, bless every society in North America, and that may reach around the world.

I propose that we call Buffalo, 1919, "The Challenge Convention." In my next monthly letter I will tell how I think we may at that meeting challenge each other to larger service for Christ and the church, or, as the apostle puts it, "Provoke one another to good works."

The Story of a Hymn, Galatians 6:14

"In the cross of Christ I glory."

The author of this hymn was an Englishman, Sir John Bowring. His life extended from 1792 to 1872. He was a very learned man, speaking more than a score of languages. Bowring wrote other hymns, such as "God is love, His mercy brightens." "From the recesses of a lowly spirit," and the famous missionary hymn, "Watchman tell us of the night." This last was written as a poem based upon Isa. 21:11, 12. The author first knew that it was set to music and used as a hymn when, some ten years after it was written, he heard it sung at a prayer meeting held by American missionaries in Asiatic Turkey. He was consul at Canton and governor at Hongkong.

Of the origin of this hymn Rev. Francis E. Wilber gives the following account: "The early Portuguese colonists built at Macao, on the crest of a hill on the South China coast, a massive cathedral with a splendid approach of stone steps. But a violent typhoon nearly wrecked the building, only the front wall remaining intact. On the summit of this facade stands a great bronze cross, defying storm and weather. When Sir John Bowring, then governor of Hongkong, visited Macao in 1825, he was much impressed by that uplifted cross. The sight inspired the famous hymn, 'In the Cross of Christ I Glory, Towering O'er the Wrecks of Time.' Since that day, thousands of visitors have looked upon the ruin, and cross that glorifies the ruin; some with indifference, some with curiosity, some with reverence, but few have known that the splendid hymn sung by the world-circling Church of God for nearly ninety years, was born in the mind of the British governor of Hongkong, by the sight of the same cross that stands today 'towering o'er the wrecks of time.'" As you sing this hymn, think of a great ruined wall on a misty hill-top; birds nestling on its hideous gargoyles, the sea and the mountains and the sky of China seen through its gaping doors and windows; and over all the Cross, changing desolation to majesty.

"Sir John has gone to taste those 'joys that through all time abide,' but his hymn remains; the builders of that distant cathedral are long since forgotten, but the cross they reared there in memory of the Crucified One remains. And time has seen mightier wrecks than a cathedral. The monarchy that built it has gone; the priesthood that burned incense within it, has been driven from the colony forever; and the iron dynasty that ruled those Chinese hills beyond the bay has crumbled as did the church of stone. But the cross, it stands. And the light of that sacred story that gathers round the sublime head of the cross is bringing liberty and light and life to Portuguese and Chinese; and in these days of ours we begin to catch the vision of that radiant day when all men shall know the story of the Cross and from the heart shall worship the Christ of the Cross and of the Throne."

Prof. Amos R. Wells says that in that terrible Boxer year in China, after the raising of the siege, and the terrible strain was over, the missionaries gathered in the Temple of Heaven,—that mysterious shrine which no one but the Emperor of China had been allowed to visit, and he only once a year. Around the royal marble altar in that heathen temple gathered the missionaries of the Cross, and sang the hymn which expressed the spirit that had sustained them during those dreadful weeks of suffering and danger—"In the cross of Christ I Glory."

Love of Country

Love of country is not only a natural sentiment in every true heart, but it is right in the sight of God. No one can ignore his relation to his country and not sin against God. "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy." These were the words of one loyal both to God and to native land. Christ, too, was a patriot; and a religion without patriotism is not inspired of Christ. Christ loved his own nation. He came first to his own people, preached first to them, and wept when they would not attend to the things that would make for their peace. The Gospel exalts patriotism as a Christian virtue whenever it is held in a Christian spirit.

MISSIONS

From Our Little African Missionary

March 28, 1919.

My dear little friends: It has been Julia's coming. They have been with us I told you in my last letter about Marie and Julias coming. They have been with us more than seven weeks now and we are very happy to have them. When they had been here a little more than two weeks the house in which we had been living fell down. The walls and ceiling of the dining room were destroyed and although the iron roof still remained supported by pillars, and the walls of the store room were still partly standing, we thought it was best to move out at once!

We are so thankful that none of us were hurt. Our heavenly Father kept us from all danger. We were frightened of course, we three little girls, but mama took us around to the side of the house, and there was a calendar which had fallen in the dust of the ruins. Mrs. McClain had sent it out to us, and it had been hanging in Aunt Toddy's tent ever since Marie and Julia came. On it was printed in large letters, "He shall give his angels charge over thee." Oh, how happy it made us feel and how it comforted us, as we were frightened and houseless, to know that Jesus was keeping us!

We were all busy helping to carry our many things out of the ruins. Some tracts and papers were scattered around and I heard Aunt Mary and mama laughing. I wondered what they were finding to laugh at and I found out, it was because there was a tract lying on the ground with "The Last Hour of Foreign Missions" printed on it in large letters. Mama said, "It did indeed look like it."

It was just after supper when the house fell. Marie and Julia and Uncle Antoine and Aunt Mary still had a room at the Swedish Mission, but that night Uncle Antoine stayed out at the ruins with Daddy and Uncle William; and mama and I went in to the mission with Marie and Julia and their mama. Aunt Toddy was nursing at the Swedish Mission at the time, so she was sheltered from the confusion of the falling house. Daddy and Uncle William and Uncle Antoine put up a tent with three beds in it, and slept in these that night. The extra baggage they put under the fly of another tent. We prayed that it would not rain that night, as there was much that could not be protected and the Lord in his mercy kept the rain away, not only that night, but many following nights until we were established in a better place.

It was hard to know what to do. The place where we were living had scarcely any shade, except a few very small trees close to the ruins of the house. There were many, many mosquitoes and many tsetse flies. Of course we felt all these things very much.

Daddy thought perhaps we could put up some grass shelters over the tents, and so the men commenced gathering poles and grass, but it was too bad a place for us to be long without better protection, so our heavenly Father, who knows all our needs, raised up for us a better place.

We are still camping out, but we are in a lovely grove. Much jungle and underbrush has had to be cleared away, but we wish you were here to play with us now, for we have lovely shades and no tsetse flies, and very few mosquitoes compared to the other place.

The trees are all overhung with huge vines which make lovely natural swings. Uncle William has just added a little to one of them for us, and made it very comfortable.

The house falling down made a great impression on me. I do not think I will ever forget it. The other day when mama and Marie and I were coming home from town, I ran up to a Frenchman and said to him, "Say, did you know the house fell down?" He smiled at me very pleasantly and said, "Je ne comprends pas" (I don't understand), so I didn't tell him any more about it.

Not long ago, March 10, a Belgian boat came in bringing us more than fifty letters. How happy we were to have them. I had several in my own name. I have a little tin box that I keep them in and I look at them over and over again, and count my precious enclosures, two handkerchiefs, two ribbons and some picture cards. I take the letters out of the envelopes and "read" them too, every now and then asking my mama what a certain word is. We do thank all our dear friends at home for writing to us, and we want to hear from you often.

Dear little Julia has had fever, and Marie a little touch of it, but God answers our prayers and constantly restores.

I am sure you would like to see our cuisine (kitchen). It is a little semi-circular place in the grove with the camp fire at one end on the ground. A bench for the water pails, a kitchen table made out of a big packing box, and two small cupboards made by putting shelves into boxes, make up its furniture. The kitchen is alright if it doesn't rain.

The cupboard which we keep our food in has four little wooden legs each one of which stands in a little can of water. This is to keep the ants out, but, I will tell you a secret. They get in anyway. Marie and Julia get tired picking ants out of the honey and bugs out of the bread. We buy bread from the bakers here, and the bugs are baked in. We were here a year before we had any honey, so it tastes pretty good to us now.

I am very much of a little native. My babies ride on my back, my toys are carried on my head, my children wear no clothes, and I do not mind the bugs and ants so much as I used to.

Marie and I saw two dear little girls yesterday. They are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Frame, missionaries at Thyesville in the Belgian Congo. One is a year older and the other a year younger than I. They understand English, but talk only Kikongo, the language of the people among whom they work.

Thyesville is very high, and they have no mosquitoes, and no tsetse flies. They live in a nice house there and there are no scorpions and centipedes crawling about as there are in our tents. Mama has found four scorpions in our tent. One was on the canvas, one on a trunk, one on the box that we use for a book case, and one just about to crawl into mama's shoes. They are very deadly indeed, and cause fearful pain if one is stung by them. How good Jesus has been to keep us from all this pain and danger.

We all love Jesus and one another, although the adversary tries to get victories in all our hearts, big and little. I want you to pray for me especially, that I may lay aside my besetting sin, a naughty temper. Mama says we can only overcome, as we look unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith. We are still waiting for Jesus to open the door to Ubangi-Shari.

Lovingly,
MARGUERITE.

Riverside Institute, Kentucky. By Mrs. G. E. Drushal

Several months have passed since we have reported through the Evangelist, the splendid way in which the church is helping to support Riverside and her workers by their gifts.

The last report included all things received up to the middle of last December. Since then we have received the following: Two boxes of good clothing from M. W. & Angeline Eikenberry, Kokomo, Indiana; box of clothing with some Christmas gifts from King's Daughters Sunday School class, Waterloo, Iowa; comfort and quilt for the dormitory by class No. 5, Middle Branch, Ohio; package cards for school children from two old ladies, and sent by Miss Alice Livengood, Milledgeville, Illinois; two barrels of clothing, some nice fruit, and two comforts for the dormitory, by the S. S. C. E., Uniontown, Pa.; one barrel of clothing; comfort for the dormitory, papers and books for the school children, from Carleton, Nebraska; two coats, from L. E. Moore, Marianna, Pa.; boys clothing, from Mrs. Jane Gish, Flora, Indiana; 15 towels and 12 pillow slips, by the Sisterhood, of Meyersdale, Pa.; 2 sheets, 1 pair of pillow slips and rug for ourselves, from the Sisterhood, Canton, Ohio; 2 mantle lamps, James Krowning, Peru, Indiana; one comfort for the dormitory, from the Sisterhood, Dallas Center, Iowa; box of seeds, L. S. Keim, Bakersville, California; steel cot, pillows, box of clothing with some nice little extras in, from King's Daughters, McKee, Pa.; 2 boxes of clothing, a comfort and quilt for ourselves, from Waterloo, Iowa; 3 comforts for the dormitory, from Mexico, Indiana; box of Bibles from Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Bradfield, Earlham, Iowa.

There has also been received the following gifts of money: The Meyers family, Williamsburg, Iowa, $12.00; Christian Endeavor society, McKee, Pa., $5.00; Helen Beyer, Bellefontaine, Ohio, $5.00; Mabel Boyce, Seven Fountains, Virginia, $6.00; Ida Shank, Jenny Lind, California, $10.00; Miss Beulah McMillen, Chicago, $5.00; Lydia Ann Baker, Swanton, Ohio, $2.00 for ourselves; Miss Ida Shank, Jenny Lind, California, $20.00. The spirit directed the giving of these gifts, for they always come at a time when something was needed for the work which we had no money to buy.

Some, on sending clothing sent their apologies along, fearing we could not use the things. Let me again say, there is a constant demand for just such things as have been sent, and they have been a great help to the work in different ways.

The towels and bedding of all kinds are always needed for the dormitories. We feel like adding an extra word of thanks for the quilt and comfort sent to us personally. Any woman who has had comforts to make the past year, knows what a terrible price we must pay for everything that goes into one, and hence how valuable they are, beside the worth of the time it takes to make one. The nice rug and bed linen sent to us from Canton were surely needed also.

The little things sent in at Christmas time, and the fruit which some placed in the barrels of clothing, show that kind hearts abound among Riverside's friends. Only you who have been on the field know how such things help.

We are all interested in the seeds which came from California. We gave some to the man on Riverside's farm, planted a few ourselves, and divided up the rest among a few of our neighbors. Watermelon, squash, cantaloup, and causaba! How we hope they will all bear fruit! The causaba is new to all of us down here, and we are eager to taste the fruit.

A few weeks ago we were favored by a visit from two members of our Board, Brethren Carpenter and Bowman, accompanied by Brother Cobb of Dayton. Brother Cobb gave one of his splendid lectures on the Holy Land, and has promised to come back next winter and tell us more.

Altogether we went over the plans for the future work. Of course there were plans for enlargement. It could not be otherwise. If the work here were at a stand still there would be no need of enlargement and bigger plans, which means greater expenditure of money. But as more young people of our beloved hills turn their faces toward Riverside, as more and more Riverside becomes their standard, so it must be that we must meet these demands that come from year to year.

We sat down the other day and figured out what it would cost to make Riverside what it ought to be. The need isn't in hundreds of dollars, it ran up into the thousands. When we looked at man, we said, "Impossible." Building material is high, so many other places needing money, etc. Of course other mountain schools of other denominations are adding new buildings and new equipment this year, but the Presbyterian's God and the Baptist's God are richer than the God of the Brethren. At least that is what it amounts to, if we say there is a need in the Brethren church which our God can not supply. But when we look at our God as he is revealed in the Bible, we feel ashamed to even think "Impossible," so looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, standing on God's word and believing that there isn't one sentence or one word in the Bible but what is true, we are depending on God to supply these needs.

We wouldn't care if a million dollars were needed, it would be just as easy for God to put it into the hearts of some to give it, as it was for him to put it into the heart of Sister Baker to give the two dollars which was needed.

We are getting in line our helpers for next year. All have not been arranged for, but God is calling out those whom he wants for his service here. We have found out in the past that only those whom God calls out feel at home here, and the most successful ones have been those who believe in the Old Bible as it stands, with no additions, no omissions, no precious doctrines cut out, and no new theology put in.

Let us pray that such may be found for the coming year.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Berlin, Pennsylvania.

Since our last report five have been added to the church here by baptism. Thus the work of our Master is moving forward. Our Sunday school and the other departments of the church are each doing good work. The people are attentive to the preaching of the Word. We celebrated Brethren Day on June 8. We used the program published by the Publishing House, and found it very instructive and interesting. Every one present seemed to be greatly interested, and we believe that much good was done. The addresses furnished by Brethren Miller, Bame and Garber were pointed and timely, and were listened to with marked attention. I would like to suggest that they be printed in the Evangelist for the benefit of those churches and readers that may not have used the program. Last Sunday evening we had a very impressive love feast in the Downey church of this charge. A very large concourse of people were present, many more than could find room in the church. Next Saturday evening we expect to have the love feast in the Maple Grove church. Each of these feasts follow a few nights of preaching. How true the words of the Master, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." There is so much to be done, and the time is short in which to do the work. Grace, wisdom and courage are needed at all times in the Lord's work, that it may be done in an acceptable manner, and to his glory. We are now in the midst of a preparation for Childrens Day, which is to be held next Sunday evening.

I. B. TROUT.

JOHNSTOWN THIRD CHURCH

With the opening of the summer months our work apparently took on new life. We observed our spring communion with the largest attendance the Morrellville Mission ever had at such a service, so the officials report. It was indeed an inspiring service, the worship and fellowship seemed to be the best we have witnessed for a long time.

Our S. S. C. E. reports some increase. The ladies have moved up from a membership of 24 the past year to 33 this present year. Sister E. J. Burkhart is the worthy president this year, Sister W. Boyer the retiring president. These ladies are among the most faithful we have. The co-operation and mutual helpfulness we hope will produce just as great an increase next year.

Our Y. P. S. C. E. is in the midst of a contest—yes, it is Red and Blue. The interest and competition has resulted in a splendid attendance which we hope will remain largely permanent. Brother David Benahoff is the energetic president and much of the success is due to his enthusiasm.

Our Sunday school is doing splendidly also. Our attendance the past month has ranged from 132 to 152. The inconvenience of church and the proximity of the railroad and Wire Mills has made it so unpleasant that we are simply waiting for an opportunity to present itself that will give us the advantage of a small reduction in the cost of building materials and we will launch our new church building project. We are looking forward to a Sunday school building when we start to erect our new church, that will make possible a large increase in attendance and effectiveness. We have a splendid corps of officials.

Our membership roll is slowly increasing. We have baptized four new converts since our last report, who did not come out at the time of Brother Watson's preaching, but are largely a result of that meeting. We still have a number to baptize and confirm. We have had a number of letters, adding some splendid people to our membership.

Church finances are going splendidly in spite of the real "hard times" which have everywhere struck the steel and iron, and coal regions. We are slowly accumulating a fund for building purposes and in the past year paid off a debt of $700.00 on our lots. The lots are now clear of debt and we have the deed recorded.

The large number of deaths has been a serious blow to all churches having small membership and we have had a large share of the results of the epidemic.

With our hearts filled with thankfulness for our blessings and prayerfully consigning to the Lord the bereft of our number, we look forward to possibilities which we hope the dear Lord will make us worthy to perform.

G. H. JONES, Pastor.

MARYLAND-VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

The 32nd Annual Conference of the Brethren churches of Maryland and Virginia met at Linwood, Maryland, June 3-5, 1919, and services opened at 2 P. M., by singing "Faith of our Fathers," after which C. R. Koontz conducted the devotions by reading John 4:31-43, calling special attention to the 35th verse with suitable remarks followed by prayer.

The delegates and friends praised God further by singing "Will there be any stars in my crown?"

Moderator Tombaugh appointed the following brethren to serve on the Committee on Credentials: L. G. Wood, T. J. Fahrney, and Silas Snider.

The address of welcome was then given by the pastor of the local church, E. M. Riddle, who assured the delegates and friends of the conference that they were welcome at Linwood, although there was no big sign of WELCOME hung up before the church door. It is the welcome that is characteristic of Linwood too.

To this hearty welcome Brethren J. M. Tombaugh, E. B. Shaver, G. A. Copp, Clarence Rohrer, W. E. Ronk, and A. B. Cover, responded with choice words of spirit and sentiment.

The first report of the Committee on Credentials revealed the fact that there were 10 ministerial and 28 lay delegates at the opening session of the conference. The report was accepted and the committee continued.

The election of Conference officers was as follows:

J. M. Tombaugh, re-elected as Moderator.
L. G. Wood re-elected as Vice-Moderator.
C. R. Koontz, elected as Secretary.
A. B. Cover, elected as Assistant Secretary and Statistician.
C. U. Mossler, elected as Treasurer.

During the above election further responses were made by Brethren C. R. Koontz, T. G. Locke, Hareter, and Prof. McClure.

The first session closed with a hymn and benediction by Brother E. B. Shaver.

Evening Session

The first feature of the evening program was the Christian Endeavor session, led by Miss Helen Brandenburg, who in a few well chosen remarks pointed out the unique place of the Christian Endeavor. Various other phases of the work were discussed by delegates and the service was closed by a beautiful duet rendered by Miss Erb and Miss Englar, after which the Mispah benediction was used.

The evening session proper was opened with the singing of "Leaning on the Everlasting Arms," and devotions conducted by Brother E. B. Shaver. Before the sermon by Dr. Tombaugh, the Englar Brothers sang a very impressive duet, and the evening offering was lifted. Dr. Tombaugh's subject was "The Doctrine of the Second Coming." In a clear and unmistakable way he brought out the following: Pulpit has been silent on this very important doctrine, because of fanaticism; the time of his coming is nowhere revealed but the fact of his coming again is sure; exhortation to watchfulness and worthy living, for to some that day will be a day longed for while to others it will be a time of terror. "I shall see him by and by" was used very appropriately after the sermon. After a few important announcements by the pastor, the doxology was used and the evening session was closed with the usual benediction.

Wednesday Morning

Services were again opened Wednesday morning by singing, "I belong to the King" and prayer by Brother H. W. Nowag. After the singing of another song, the minutes of the previous sessions were read and adopted. The Courtesies of the Conference were then extended to Dr. Jacobs, W. E. Ronk, and any other visiting brethren. These responded with a brief word of appreciation.

The program was then taken up and the following subjects treated:

"Prospects for the Attainment of the Four Lear Program" was discussed by L. G. Wood, who said that he wished every minister would try it for a year and then report: that the prospects were as bright as the promises of God; that he wished to appeal for more loyalty.

Brother A. B. Cover then presented in an able way the "Organization and Equipment of the Sunday School." He emphasized the need of systematic organization and equipment in harmony with the need of the various scholars.

The "Grading of the Small School" was next presented in a very practical way by Clarence Rohrer of Hagerstown. Said he: "The small school should receive as careful attention as the larger school. The need of grading arises when we try to fit the word to the growing child; the essentials are the various departments and officers, and adaptation of lessons and teachers; the benefits to be derived are: makes work more appetizing, teaching more definite, and raises the standards."

"The Equipment of the Sunday School Teacher" was next treated by Brother W. M. Lyon, who suggested that the most essential qualification is the Spiritual qualification, for after all the human qualifications are of little value if the Spirit is not present.

After the reading of the Statistician's report, and the election of the District officers of the Sunday school, A. B. Cover, President, G. H. Haun, secretary, the benediction was pronounced by Brother Lyon.

Wednesday Afternoon

The session was called to order by the singing of a hymn and prayer by Mrs. Wood, after which Mrs. Fahrney read a scripture lesson and Mrs. Cover gave a very impressive address, setting forth the thought that the supreme mission of the Woman's work is "Service."

"A Great Need and Our Supreme Opportunity" was discussed by Miss Mae Minnick, who said in part that the great need arises from the fact that people are being born into the heathen lands much faster than they are being born into the kingdom of God. Our opportunity is to share our blessings with them.

Miss Mae Smith was the next speaker, who called our attention to the fact that the nations of the earth are undergoing a "change" not only politically but also religiously. They are looking for something firm. Herein is to be found our great challenge. Let us give them Christianity.

After the singing of another hymn and the rendition of a beautiful solo by Mrs. John A. Englar, Mrs. Cover read a paper upon the subject: "Stewardship in our Missionary Cause," written by Miss Mary Pence. Mrs. E. M. Riddle then read very impressively, "Is it nothing to you."

We were then privileged to listen to the appeal of Dr. E. E. Jacobs in behalf of Ashland College. He told of her needs and that it was his desire to have every minister "died in the faith of Brethrenism" and every other student fired with righteousness.

After the report of the Committee on Credentials, the benediction was pronounced by C. R. Koontz.

Wednesday Evening

After the singing of several hymns Brother Samuel Matthias conducted the devotions.

The following business was then transacted:

Conference ordered the re-election of the Mission Board officers. (G. H. Haun, President; A. B. Cover, Secretary; Theodore Fahrney, Treasurer). G. A. Copp was then re-elected as a member of the Ministerial Examining Board. J. A. Englar was then re-elected as a member of the Property Board. T. G. Locke was elected to succeed Dr. V. M. Reichard as a trustee of Ashland College. The treasurer's report of the Mission Board was then read and accepted. The treasurer also spoke briefly on the subject of Tithing.

"The Ministry of Stewardship" was then taken up by Sister Detwiler, who emphasized the fact that stewardship in its widest sense means an entire life dedicated to the will and service of our blessed Master.

The next on the program was the masterful address of Dr. Jacobs, upon the subject, "The World's Need of Christ." The great problems before the world today show that there is something needed. We believe that need can be supplied in Jesus Christ and his ideals which are as follows: (1) Faith in the Gospel which is intended to save men. (2) Faith in God, who doeth all things well and in the end shall right conquer wrong. (3) Ideal of service. Christ was the exemplar of his own teaching. (4) Social aspects of the Gospel religion after all is intensely individual and personal. Man is great as a man be he what or where he may be. Christ was the first to point out the worth of man.

After an offering was lifted for the defrayal of Dr. Jacobs' expenses, Brother Williams was called upon to give a report of the beginning of the work in Baltimore. In addition to this report which was not so encouraging, he presented in a clear and graphic way the idea of success in its true significance.

The service was closed by singing the doxology and the benediction pronounced by Brother L. G. Wood.

Thursday Morning

The devotional exercises were conducted by W. E. Ronk, who offered a prayer of thanksgiving for the Conference. The Mission Board report was then read and accepted. The minutes of the previous sessions were read and adopted.

The first address of the morning was upon the subject of "Christian Union" by G. A. Copp, who said in part that the nations of the earth are seeking to get together. So also is there a movement on foot to get together as Christians. Practically all the different denominations agree on the fundamentals of religion, and it is now time to lay aside the insignificant things and thus stop hindering the cause of Christ, because in unity there is strength.

Brother E. B. Shaver replied to the above by saying that Church Union was not a feasible plan. Giving as his reasons various citations from history. Brother Samuel Houshell also asked whether it would be necessary for the Brethren to give up the doctrines that make her a distinctive church.

The next speaker on the floor was Brother C. R. Koontz, with the subject, "Stimulants do not have an Enduring Effect." A survey of conditions show that there is a large class of people who have to be continually stimulated with some kind of a "Special" to keep them active, and the results show that they are not enduring. As in the physical so in the spiritual, when the patient is out of fix, one of the chief factors in the restoration of health is the proper food. Therefore, rather than so many stimulants let us return to the "sincere milk of the Word," "the strong meat of the Word" and the "Bread and Water of Life."

Additional remarks were also made by E. M. Biddle, and Dr. Shaver, the latter giving his experience with stimulants as a physician.

The Ministerial report was then read and adopted. Statistician's report on Benevolences was read and adopted. Congregation at Roanoke tendered the Conference an invitation to convene at their church home next year. This invitation was accepted. A motion prevailed that T. G. Locke and Clarence Rohrer be elected as members of the Executive Committee.

The Ministerial List of the Credential Committee was read and accepted. Those present were as follows:

L. G. Wood, E. B. Shaver, H. W. Nowag, George Chambers, J. W. Leedy, W. M. Lyon, Quinter Lyon, E. M. Biddle, R. I. Garber, Roy S. Long, Amzi Weimer, J. E. Patterson, Mrs. L. M. Jennings, J. M. Tombaugh, C. R. Koontz.

A motion was made that the secretary prepare a copy of these minutes for publication in the Brethren Evangelist. Conference was set for the second week in June. A motion was made for adjournment, and the congregation arose and sang the doxology, after which Brother C. R. Koontz offered a prayer of thanksgiving for the benefits of the conference and pronounced the closing benediction. J. M. TOMBAUGH, Moderator.

C. R. KOONTZ, Secretary.

Note.—Owing to the absence of a Resolution Committee the Secretary was authorized to append the following resolution:

That, we the delegates assembled in conference at Linwood, Maryland, express our sorrow and extend our sympathy to the family and friends in the death of Dr. V. M. Reichard. In his death we realize a great loss, not only in our own district but also in the entire brotherhood, and the host of people to whom he ministered as a Christian physician.

Our goal for 1919 is $7,500.00 for Home Missions. Last year we went over the top. Let us do it again this year. Some churches and some Home Guard pledges have not yet been paid. Our books close August 20th. Please see that you are paid up by that time.

Respectfully submitted,

Secretary-Treasurer.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

With the exception of the Brush Valley congregation this report represents the finals from Pennsylvania. We had hoped that this last trip into Pennsylvania would complete the work in that state; but it was the judgment of the pastor at Brush Valley, Brother E. H. Smith, that the canvass of that congregation for endowment at a later time would be better. This report is for five congregations, viz, Vandergrift, Vinco, Windber, Terra Alta, and Accident. These last two congregations, though the one is in West Virginia and the other in Maryland, claim membership in the Pennsylvania conference, hence they appear with Pennsylvania congregations. Before I take these churches up one by one, I want to say that all of these congregations are small numerically, nevertheless I found in each of them some splendid, loyal people.

At Vandergrift the result for the College went $255. I felt that all things considered this was quite good. On the basis of membership it measures up well with the result in many very much larger churches. Brother J. E. Furry of Martinsburg is now serving this congregation. The home of Brother S. H. Buzard was my headquarters while at Vandergrift and it was a real pleasure to me to become more fully acquainted with Brother Buzard and his good wife, and to mingle with his family of children. I also received the very kindest of treatment in the homes of Brethren Frank Buzard, Frank Mangol and Wm. Davis. During my stay among this people I also called on the widow of our much lamented Brother J. B. Wampler. It is in the most pleasant way that I shall remember the Vandergrift people and I covet for them God's richest blessing as a congregation.

From Vandergrift we came to Vinco. Vinco did $190 for endowment. This congregation had just lost their pastor, Brother Earl Flora, at the time I came to Vinco. Brother Flora did a fine work in this circuit of Pike and Vinco; and in the future he will be able to do still better work because he has taken unto himself a splendid wife who will doubtless be able to help him much in his work. While in this congregation I received royal treatment in the home of Brother Singer, also in the Smith, and Wissinger, and Mackall homes. I am very grateful to these good people for their many kindnesses to me. In all of these churches there were many other homes open to me but I can only eat three meals a day and sleep in one bed at night hence it becomes an impossibility to accept all of the offers of true hospitality which come to me. This is the home church of Brother George Leidy and wife, also Miss Nora Bracken. These are all former students of Ashland College and I found them very much interested in the school and anxious to help to the fullest extent of their ability. I hope Vinco may very soon secure a pastor to take up the work where Brother Flora laid it down.

The result at Windber was $265. This could and should have been better; and if all had done as well at Windber as a few did it would have been decidedly better. During my canvass at the Windber church I stopped with Brother Lewis Hostetler. Needless to say the hospitality was of the very truest Pennsylvania kind. I greatly appreciated my sojourn in this home. Brother Hostetler is a firm believer in Christian education and he is just as strong a believer in the importance and necessity of Ashland College in its relation to the future of the church. Brother Hostetler was top notch man in his gift at Windber. Brother Forest Byers of Cone-maugh has been serving this church very acceptably for more than a year. He works hard during the week in secular things and goes out to Windber each Sunday to help in the work of the Sunday school. Every two weeks he preaches. I wish him and the Windber people success in their labor for the Master.

I had never been to Terra Alta before; but I am going to go back again the very first chance I get. Our church at this place is located in the country just a short distance out of town and the membership is made up quite equally of country and town people. Brother Edward Boardman has spent his last three or four vacations at Terra Alta and Accident. He did a splendid work in both of these churches and made many friends for himself and the College. And right here I am going to say what I have not said before in the many Campaign Notes, viz., that the very best advertisement Ashland College can have is preachers going out from her halls whose lives ring true and who know how to work and who are not afraid to work. Boardman is not afraid to work. And I found Terra Alta people keenly alive and awake to the interests of the school. Our result there was $300 and I am proud of the result. Brother John Freeland and his good wife "fathered" and "mothered" me mostly while I was at Terra Alta and they are splendid people to know. Brother Freeland has stood faithfully by the work at this place for many years. I am also very much indebted to Brethren Spencer, Whitehair, Bucklews and Dodge for entertainment in their homes. This is another place where every door swung wide open to me but it was impossible to accept all of the invitations. Terra Alta will have a young man in college at Ashland this fall. Brother Tombaugh is preaching here now every two weeks. I very greatly enjoyed my stay at Terra Alta.

Accident was the last place visited on this trip. I had been there for a week in a meeting during my pastorate at Meyersdale so did not feel entirely strange to the people. Brother Tombaugh is also serving this congregation. Here is a fine little country congregation. The people do not as a rule have big pocketbooks but they most certainly do have big, true, unspoiled hearts. And in the sight of God how very much more important that is than merely big pocketbooks. I found an exceptionally fine lot of young people in this church and it was through the faithful efforts of Brother Boardman that they are in. And while I tarried at this place I was made to feel keenly the possibilities of building up a great country congregation out among the Maryland mountains from as good people as are to be found anywhere and at an expense very far below what it costs to promote mission work in the average city. Here is a great work to be done by the Brethren church in this community. But it will require some time, some outside help, and a lot of hard work. But it takes that to get results anywhere. We raised $90.00 at Accident. If that looks small to any of my readers just let me remind you that that result is far bigger according to size and ability than I have received in many much larger and stronger churches. The Keller home was my home while at Accident and it was a true home. May God bless all the good people of the Accident church, and I hope that some of the fine young people I saw there will eventually find their way to Ashland College. I believe some of them will. During my stay at Accident I also received some genuine Christian kindnesses from Brother Henry Hostetler and wife who live near Oakland, Maryland, and whose membership is in the Summit Mills, Pennsylvania, church.

The results of this trip puts Pennsylvania above the $40,000 mark. I want to say it right here that I love old Pennsylvania and her many good people. With a record to her credit of $40,000 for permanent endowment nobody can very well call Pennsylvania slow. Pennsylvania is not slow and anybody who says she is will have me to settle with. I want to thank the Pennsylvania preachers again for the tireless co-operation they gave me. And I also want to thank Brother Edward Byers again for the splendid assistance he gave me as endowment secretary of Pennsylvania in getting the work lined up. While Brother Byers has been eminently successful as a builder and promoter in his own college at Martinsburg, yet his heart has beat true to Ashland College every minute since he left there. I thank him again and again for his valuable assistance.

We go back now to Illiokota, not to finish, for it will not be timely at present to put across the canvass in some of the Illiokota churches, but we are going back to finish all that can be done for the present. That will likely include Milledgeville, Cerro Cerdo, Millersburg, Dallas Center and Udell. The mercury shows a steadily rising temperature. The actual results of this present campaign are now a little better than $101,000. Surely we ought to thank God for this result and for the bright future that opens up for Ashland College! Pray for the continued success of the campaign.

Campaign Secretary.

COLLEGE NOTES

Now that the regular college work is over, the Summer School is the center of interest. The enrollment is not yet complete but will not be far from one hundred. When complete, full enrollment will be stated.

Miss Marie Lichty, teacher of modern languages, is taking work at the University of Wisconsin this summer. Some others from Ashland are there also.

Miss Amy Paterbaugh is taking Voice in Chicago. Prof. J. A. Garber is spending two weeks at the Y. M. C. A. training conference at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin. Professor A. C. Hendrickson is busy taking care of the finances of the college and helping in other ways to get things ready for the fall opening, which will be Tuesday, September 16th.

Dr. J. A. Miller will go to the California Bible Conference in July.

Dr. L. L. Garber is teaching in the Summer School.

The place made vacant in the department of Physics and Chemistry by the resignation of Professor Grubb, has not yet been filled but several men are under consideration. Miss Wilma Lichty has resigned from the Piano department. Her place has been very satisfactorily filled by the selection of Miss Lucy Cowan Wimer, of Lanark, Illinois, for the coming year.

Mrs. Sarah Griffith has been secured to teach shorthand for the coming year. The College will use the Gregg system.

Rev. W. H. Beachler, field secretary, is at home now, after having a successful canvass in the East. He is planning on starting out again soon.

Notes regarding the College will appear from time to time in the Evangelist. It is the intention to give general publicity to the affairs of the school. A mailing list is being made out so that the friends of the College may know what we are doing. I have had mailed recently over a thousand copies of the Purple and Gold. The catalog is on the press. Ministers, former students, and friends may expect a copy soon. If you are interested in the affairs of the school, write and let us put you on our mailing list. Next College Quarterly is due in October. It will list the names, congregations, and addresses of all the members of the Seminary. Information in regard to the finances will be given in this number also.

Ministers, former students, and others are asked to communicate with the college in regard to those who may be interesting in attending Ashland College this fall. The enrollment MUST be doubled. There are many reasons why this is true for on the enrollment in the regular college courses much depends. There are now on my desk several extended questionnaires relative to our enrollment, finances, faculty etc. The day is forever past when anything about a college may be done in a corner. So let us hasten to make all departments of the college meet all standard requirements.

Ministerial Echoes Concerning the World Covenant

The world is thinking about one thing more than any other. It is the instrument resulting from the Peace Conference. The covenant for a League of Nations is formulated and completed by the Conference and is now before the various nations represented for their ratification or rejection. It is a new thing in the history of the world. It is not only new but it has to do with certain great problems in which every Christian man and woman cannot but be vitally interested. Anything that presumes to affect the peace conditions of the world cannot fail to come under the most careful scrutiny of the church of Christ and its ministerial leaders. The world has a right to listen to the prophets of God in matters of such vital importance to all people as a league of the nations of the world. And the world has never been without its seers in such times of crisis as the present.

In this day there are those who have been and are keeping faithful watch and are able to tell to their brethren "What of the night" and the dawning day. And in the League of Nations they see the will of God being worked out in larger measure than has ever been done before in the history of international relations. They see what many anxious hearts have hoped for and some of the strong sons of God have believed would come,—the overruling of the selfish plans and wicked and destructive devices of men to the bringing about of great good for mankind and the promoting of the interests of his kingdom. Men have attempted to conquer the world for selfish purposes but it has turned out to the enlarging of Christ's control. Men's hearts have been awakened to a new and more intense desire for the reign of righteousness and peace. The principles of Jesus have been adopted in a larger measure as the standard of conduct of nation with nation. Nations are losing their narrow visions, though slowly yet surely, and are ceasing to live entirely for self. They are becoming more willing to exercise charity and toleration, in their relations with fellow-nations, and to give reason and right a place above passion and might. This is the trend of affairs, as the students and messengers of God's will and way read to us the signs of the times. Note what they say concerning the significance of the League of Nations:

Dr. F. B. Meyer, the secretary of the Free Church Council of England and Wales, was interviewed on the subject and he is quoted as having said: "The League of Nations is doomed to failure unless it has the whole-hearted backing of the churches, and unless the churches create a feeling of fellowship among the peoples that will give substance to the ideals of the League. I want for one thing to help towards the realization of this object. I believe that God has got some great purpose waiting for us to work out. The old order has failed and broken down. We must start afresh on God's own lines."

Dr. Hamilton Holt, speaking of the necessity of the League's adoption by the nations, and especially by our nation, says, "The sentence imposed upon Germany was an indeterminate one, to borrow a term from the criminologists. Can there be the slightest ground for hope that such a sentence can be carried out except by a powerful League of Nations always on the job as probation officer to see that Germany keeps disarmed and pays her fines and continues to keep on her good behavior? And then how about disarmament? Is there the slightest chance that one single nation will disarm unless all do the same, and is there any chance that all will disarm if some can rearm again at their pleasure? Is not the League of Nations the only organization strong enough to maintain the general disarmament so passionately desired by the war-weary peoples of the world?"

The Church Peace Union, through its trustees, among which are such eminent religious leaders as Dr. John R. Mott, Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, Dr. Francis E. Clark and Dr. Robert E. Speer, has endorsed the League as follows, "It is the first attempt to establish the principles of the kingdom of God among nations. Its covenant demands the same high and honorable standards of conduct among the nations in their mutual relationships as those which pertain among high-minded, honorable men."

Still more interesting than the foregoing, are the following commendations from some of the leading men of the larger branch of the church of our own faith, the Church of the Brethren:

Elder H. C. Early, president of the General Mission Board, says, "The strong point of appeal to the church in a League of peace is its background in moral conviction. It is a move to base peace on moral conviction,—the conviction that war is wrong and out of harmony with the best interests of the nations and of the world,—such as the world has never known. The nations are coming to the point where they appreciate the fact that moral conviction is stronger than legislation, and no law can be maintained without moral conviction in its favor on the part of those whom it is intended to serve. The League of Nations with a Court of Arbitration for the nations of the world will open the way for the disarmament of the nations. Instead of spending huge sums to build up arms and arsenals, and maintaining big standing armies, taxing the nations almost beyond endurance, the strength of the nation can be turned into channels of constructive industry and progress."

One of the leading evangelists of the Church of the Brethren, Elder Jacob Funk, says, "I heartily endorse the Covenant for a League of Nations. Of course it is not a perfect document; neither was the Constitution of the United States, and many even believe now that it might be improved. The Covenant rightly binds all Nations to a sane and Christian method of settling disputes. Only the wilful blind or the man with an axe to grind will oppose it."

Elder Ezra Flory, of the Sunday School Board, says, "I heartily welcome the League of Nations as it now stands. It may not be perfect, but it is more than could have been expected and is so framed that it can apply to the fundamental principles applying to such a course. We are a great brotherhood of nations having interests in common more than any time in history and such a compact is positively essential to our welfare and the progress of the nations. It will foster the dissemination of such teaching as is necessary for the world's moral reconstruction."

The Chairman of the Central Service Committee, Elder W. J. Swigart urges its adoption in the following words, "The Central Service Committee and the Church of the Brethren which this Committee represents anxiously await the acceptance of this instrument with the belief that the men who have had the matter in care have viewed it from all angles; and doubtless have brought forth the best that can be hoped for. Believing also that further delay and controversy will aggravate the minds of the people and provoke more unrest and increase the confusion now upon the earth, we think it should be adopted without further waiting."

Elder J. H. B. Williams, secretary of the General Mission Board, declares the church should favor it: "It is my opinion that the church should favor this covenant in its present revised form, not because it is free from imperfections, nor with the understanding that it may never need revision, but because of its being a great step in the direction of insuring the safety of the weaker nations of the world and the security of all from the ravages of the war."

"In behalf of the individuals of the world, the church should favor this covenant which has been evolved through the patient study of many experts and which is secured by the baptism of the blood of millions of patriotic men."

With such an array of leaders of the church speaking so warmly in behalf of this covenant of the nations, we as a church should be made to consider seriously our duty in regard to the matter. If it is right, it is of God and should receive the endorsement of every Christian. If it is not, the minds of many good men ought to be disillusioned. If it is right, the Christian citizen can perform a service to humanity and the kingdom of God by wielding every legitimate influence for its adoption.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother A. B. Cover, the steady builder of Hagerstown, Maryland, is still pushing the Sunday school work to the front. Missions are being emphasized and local obligations are being met in a splendid way.

Brother Cone, pastor of the Hamlin, Kansas, church, is very faithful in making reports to the Evangelist, and we are sure that his own people appreciate it. His report in this issue shows that he and his people are faithful to every interest of the church.

There is something doing at the First Brethren church of Johnson, and it looks as if the "doings" were destined to increase until a new church is erected on the fine new lots purchased recently. The plan for the payment of the lots is a splendid one and makes the task well and fairly distributed. Every one ought to get in on a plan like that.

The La Verne, California, congregation has experienced a refreshing from the Lord and have added to the church several new members. Their prayer meeting attendance shows up remarkably well; there must be something there worth going to get. It is usually true that people will go where there is something worth going after, even to a prayer meeting. The various departments of the work are "going forward," just as the Lord commanded the children of Israel to do.

Long Beach, California, has experienced another glorious revival and received—(I was about to say how many, but will let you read it for yourself) confessions, and a goodly number have already been received into the church. It was a union campaign followed by a denominational effort in the Brethren church, led by Brother Bell. A largely attended communion followed the meetings. There was also a reception to the new members, in which two preachers took a prominent part; the Baumans are back and the Bells are leaving.

Brother Cobb gives a very interesting description of the place and characteristics of our Tennessee church. Doubtless nearly all who read his article will receive information concerning the Brethren church at Limestone that will change their conception of the place. Brother Cobb again shows himself a keen observer and does a real service to the church he visited as well as to the brotherhood by his description. He found there a most loyal hearted and generous people and they thoroughly appreciated his services.

Brother Trout of Berlin as well as others have suggested running the splendid addresses of the Brethren Day program in the Evangelist. The patronage of the program was more than was anticipated, but still there are many Evangelist readers who would never have the benefit of those stirring words of Brethren Miller, Bame and Garber if we should not publish them in the church paper, and so we gladly comply with the request. Dr. Miller's was run last week. Dr. Bame's this week and Prof. Garber's will appear next week.

Brother Carpenter writes some very interesting news this week about our Kentucky Mission work. Brother Cook has certainly been very busy and his report shows that he is not only busy but effective. His various mission points seem to be realizing a commendable growth. Everybody will be anxiously awaiting the surprise call that may come from Happy and we will all be "happy" over it when it comes. Brother Carpenter also mentions the splendid revival held at Limestone (Take notice, Brother Carpenter, it is not Telford), Tennessee by Brother Cobb and the ordination of Sister Mary Pence to the ministry.

Say, Brother Pastor, if you happen to know of anybody who isn't taking the paper, will you try to place a subscription there, or even put that person on your church budget, and thus help Brother Teeter run the subscription list up to the coveted 5000. The churches that have really tried the budget system have found without exception, that it is a paying investment. It makes more intelligent, more loyal and active Brethren to put the Evangelist into every home, as the pastors are continually testifying. The Evangelist belongs to us all and it is everybody's business and to everybody's interest to boost it. And a splendid spirit of boosting has thus far been manifested, for which we are thankful. We are confident, too, of the future. We believe we can count on the loyalty of every Brethren.

When you want a subscription changed or want to pay a bill, write to E. E. Teeter, Business Manager. When you want something published, send it to Geo. S. Baer, Editor, 145 College Avenue.

I am sure our good contributors will accept this remark very kindly. The operator has found difficulty at times in reading manuscripts and sometimes the editor is compelled to copy them before he can set them. This means more extra work in the editor's office than you might imagine, taking all the manuscripts into consideration, and since he is compelled to depend upon a borrowed typewriter, the copying is usually done by the pen and ink process. Just a little extra care in writing will help us wonderfully. Thank you, for your good spirit and please accept our sincere thanks for the splendid co-operation in the past. You are helping to make the paper what it is. Many people are expressing their appreciation of the quality of the Brethren Evangelist. We are indebted to you for your loyalty in making the paper what it is. We ever remember that we are your servants and we are seeking to serve you in the best way we can.

It is a great pleasure to learn of the splendid evangelistic campaign held at Garwin, Iowa, by Brother F. W. Coleman as evangelist and Brother Freeman Ankrum as pastor. When the weather didn't behave they hung on one week longer than they had planned rather than being brought to a close sooner than anticipated. But in spite of weather difficulties and others they reaped a large harvest. When the converts number a half a hundred and over, it is an unusually successful meeting. Brother Ankrum in his report speaks in high terms of Brother Coleman as an evangelist and Brother Coleman speaks favorably of the pastor and his work. It is a splendid spirit

Putting Life Into Our Forms. By J. L. Kimmel

Whatever we may say or think about it, when it comes to the final analysis of the situation, life is the only thing that counts in religion, or in anything else for that matter. Everything depends upon life, and life-giving power.

God is the Author of life, both physical and spiritual. He spoke the word and the planets came into space, the worlds were made; he breathed into man the breath of life, and man became a living soul. When man defaced that image through disobedience, God sent his only begotten Son into the world, so that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have eternal life. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." John says, "He that hath not the Son of God, hath not life."

This is a very simple, yet a very emphatic statement, one which every one should readily understand. Nevertheless it is a profound truth and many a worldly wise man has been confounded and hath not been able to fathom its depth.

When Jesus unfolded to Nicodemus the doctrine of the new birth, this old sage cried out and said, How can these things be? But Jesus said, A man must be born again. Without life he is dead as a stone.

As in the physical, so in the spiritual world, it takes life to beget life. All life comes from God. We cannot create life of ourselves. How to put life into our forms, is a very simple proposition.

We must enter into the worship of God with such faith and sincerity, that our worship will ascend to the throne of God and bring the blessings of heaven upon us. God is a spirit, and those that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.

Having spiritual life depends upon certain conditions, on which such life is based. To have spiritual life it is necessary to comply with certain immutable laws of God that will not, and cannot be changed—for our convenience. God, through Jesus Christ our Lord, has established his church in the world and has given to us in the church means of grace for our spiritual good.

The worship of God is supposed to draw our minds away from the secular things of life, and fix them upon Christ our Lord. It is only by coming in touch with God that we get the spiritual life. This then is the secret of it all,—to enter into the service of God with such a spirit of devotion and consecration, that will commend us in God's sight.

Jesus said, In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines, the commandments of men. This is no doubt true even today; men substitute their own commandments for the commandments of God. "If ye love me keep my commandments," said Jesus. And yet men object to keeping Christ's commandments, because as they put it, they are simply formalities. They tell us that these outward forms mean nothing in the sight of God. But God created man with a form. He gave him a body, and breathed into that body life, and it is only when the life goes out of this form, that it becomes useless, and we have to bury it. God gave to the Mosaic dispensation many rites and ceremonies, which were of the greatest significance. The fact is that the form is all right, so long as the form has life in it. It is only when the life ceases, the form becomes useless.

We are told that Michigan was the first state in the Union to complete the formalities necessary to ratify the Woman's Suffrage Bill, as an amendment to the Constitution. Formalities under the Old Covenant, were absolutely essential. In civil law they mean everything; and in the Christian dispensation we cannot set them aside by merely saying, they are formalities.

As a church we are blamed for taking the Bible literally, and as a consequence, we believe in obeying the commandments of the New Testament. We are told that all this is outward formalism and means nothing. But I think all churches have these outward formalities. The Quakers at one time were an exception. They tried it, at least, and went to church and sat down and absolutely did nothing, only when the Spirit moved them. But unfortunately for them, the Spirit too often did not move them, and so they had no services. At least they found this manner of worship impracticable, and today they have their preacher and their public services, much as other churches have them. When it comes to baptism and the other ordinances they draw the line, for they would call these formalities. But the fact remains that preaching may become mechanical and altogether formal, and that even singing and praying may become mere formalisms. And mind you, there is a vast difference between formalities, and mere formalities. The former is an active agency and should be a power for good. The latter, of course, means nothing when it comes to religion. The first is the form filled with life, spirit, substance; the latter is the form lacking all these, and thus is a mere shell.

The Apostolic church had the life, the Spirit. Indeed on the day of Pentecost the Holy Spirit seemed to overshadow everything. If the church had continued these apostle's teachings, and given the Holy Spirit his rightful place, there never would have been any room for a reformation and there would be but one church today. If the Church of England had not lost the substance and crushed the very life in her services, there never would have been any room for John Fox and the Quaker movement. Nor would there be for John Wesley and his followers. If the Methodist church had continued to preach as John Wesley preached, there would not have been any need of the Salvation Army. If the churches in Germany, had not lost all life and power, and crushed out the very Spirit of God, there would have been no room for Alexander Mack and his followers. If the Church of the Brethren had exalted the word of God and given the Holy Spirit the foremost place in their church instead of contending about the combing of the hair, and the coat-collar and the head dress of the good sisters, there never would have been any need for the Brethren church, and it never would have had a place in the world.

Now then you should be able to see the necessity of the Brethren church putting life into her forms, and giving the Holy Spirit his place in all our services. We have churches and churches, with magnificent buildings and wealthy congregations but are dead; they have no life, no spirit, no conversions, no salvation, no Christ,—nothing left but mere formalism. Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life and I will raise him up at the last day. You may talk about transubstantiation, and consubstantiation all you please, but Jesus never for one moment means that priest or pope or any church dignitary, could take common bread or common wine, and convert them into the literal flesh and blood of Jesus Christ. He never meant that sinful men and women could go to the communion table, and drink the life of Christ into their souls. It is simply too bad, that such an absurdity was ever taught by ministers of the gospel.

The plain meaning of this passage is that by his bloody death, his body and his blood offered in sacrifice for sin—he would procure pardon and life for man so that they who partook of that sacrifice or had an interest in it should obtain eternal life. May the Brethren church never be satisfied with anything less than the real life of the blessed Christ, and the power that comes from on high, and God shall use us mightily in his service.

Choosing and Preparing for a Life Work. By Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph. D.

In this present day when the financial considerations of life are uppermost, young people need to consider more carefully than ever what pursuits they intend to follow for life. The different religious denominations, moreover, need in this day to lay it increasingly upon the hearts of their young people to choose wisely and deliberately, for the work of the churches cannot go forward unless they have an increasing number of young men and women who are willing to invest their lives in the cause of right.

Next to the choice of Jesus Christ as a personal Savior and Friend, are these questions, "Where can I best invest my life? Where can I be of most service to God and man? Where will the results be most satisfying, largest and most permanent?" When one stops to consider that one has but a single life-time in which to work, when one sees the greatness of the opportunities, and when one realizes the dearth of consecrated workers, one must become serious.

So far as our own denomination is concerned, it is perfectly evident that pastors, parents, and all those interested in its advancement, must give this matter the most heartfelt consideration. At the college here, we want an increasing number of young men and women to enter from year to year who are willing to undergo some hardships and undertake some definite thing for God and the church. I do not mean that we want all the young people from the different local churches to enter the ministry. That would be a very great calamity but I do mean that the young people from our different local churches ought to come here to school and get their lives enthused for God. What would it not mean to our church if any considerable number of our people should take just this attitude, viz., that of being perfectly willing to be used for the advancement of the church? Farmers then would be willing helpers in the church. Business men would plan with the church in mind. Professional men would offer their talents for the work of their church. Young people would not take the easiest and shortest road to apparent success, but they would rise to that heroic frame of mind where they would be willing to lay out a large program for their lives. They would be unwilling to enter upon the work of this age when preparation is necessary, without some adequate preparation. They would be unwilling to enter any calling without some college training. And after they had spent some time here or elsewhere, they would return to their home congregations both anxious and prepared to be of the greatest service to the church. By that way, as you will readily see, there would be no one who could not be of some real use in spreading the Gospel and extending the power of the Cross. The laity, then, would not be composed of a host of "do nothings" but it would be a reservoir of power both for men and money.

The appeal of this article is to the young people of the church to join in and help the Brethren church hasten towards the realization of this high ideal, the realization of which would empower both the individual and the organization. It seems wholly unpardonable for so many of our young people to enter life intellectually halt and lame, when the church has made such fine provision for their training.

May the college make an appeal here for young people to enter this fall along with a splendid body of enthusiastic, fine-spirited men and women, and be energized, inspired, and equipped for a larger service for both individual satisfaction and for organized service.

Two Hundred Years of Brethren History. By Charles A. Bame, D. D.

Two centuries ago to the year, there came to this country a small company of strange people—a peculiar people. Persecuted, prosecuted and driven from place to place in their mother country, they crossed the Atlantic to find for themselves and their progeny, a refuge and a place to worship God according to the faith "once for all delivered to the saints." Perhaps it was not in their minds that the movement should ever become a separate church. Indeed not many church houses were built for many years after they arrived. Little did they dream, perhaps, that their deeds were being indelibly written on the beginning pages of a nation which in 200 years was destined to be the greatest force for righteousness in all the world, or that their followers were to become the most sturdy of its population.

Great movements are not always heralded by trumpets. As the Lord for whom they had sacrificed friends and home, was cradled in a manger 1700 years before and as he organized no propaganda for the advancement of his precepts, so the little company from across the sea, seemed content simply to plant a church here and there among the hills of Pennsylvania and try to live over, humbly and consistently, the life of him who was at once their Savior and their Lord.

But though movements sometimes have small and insignificant beginnings they live and grow because they have in them the elements of greatness. Gideon's 300 were more than a match for 32,000 Midianites because they had the elements of faith and courage. The message of Jesus of Nazareth has outrun that of Confucius because it was a better message—more virile and saving. So, if that little company of Brethren of 1719 could return and note in this year of 1919 how by the most natural of processes their faith has spread to every state of the Union and leaped across the seas, or how this country has accepted their simple unpropagated beliefs held by so few at that time, they could rejoice with great joy. But shall not we who have had the heritage of that belief rejoice and be glad for them? That is the purpose of this special day in the Brethren Calendar. That is why we have Brethren Day.

Shall we not here stop to recount what are some of the elements of the greatness of this message? We shall not forget that they took the word of God at face value. While other preachers were explaining and expostulating about the meaning of the scripture message, they were saying, "It means what it says, it is to be taken seriously." "Whatever he saith unto you, do it," was repeated in every Brethren pulpit. This led them to profess their belief in the Bible as the all-sufficient creed which they preached with all earnestness. How impressibly are we learning today, that no generation can speak for another. God alone can speak for all time. Divine right of any one unless he proves he is God's has forever passed from the thought of man. The creeds of yesterday fed those of that day but are husks to him that lives with God. The Bible lives.

For Brethren, therefore, this simplified both creed and conduct. Whatever was contrary to the word of God was displeasing to him and must not be countenanced even though indulged in by priest, Pope or other dignitary. Whatever was commanded was to be obeyed; nothing too great to be attempted; nothing too small and insignificant.

Thus, self-denial, self-renunciation and self-sacrifice were written on every page of the church's history. When the makers of the Constitution were compromising about slavery and thus forfeiting the noble blood of a million of her best sons of the future, and laying on the backs of others the burdens of excessive taxation for decades, the Brethren were sacrificing members who failed to exemplify that equality of man guaranteed in the Declaration of Independence. When other priests and preachers were sipping wine with the rich and voluptuous, humble Brethren ministers were organizing the first temperance societies of the world, in their little congregations. Thus, on this Two Hundredth Anniversary, we have just reason to rejoice that they the vanguard calling others to come on and dare to follow where our forbears had dared to lead.

Brethren of every fold, our duty is clear: A new spirit is working. The principles of the Master are written for the first time in a world covenant for peace. The spirit of a new brotherhood is abroad. Let us be the leaders still as were our fathers. In the not distant future,—may it not be this wonderful year of 1919—let the church founded two hundred years ago, take her true place. Let her exemplify true brotherhood by a reunion and go forward in our Elder Brother's name to Power, Honor and Victory. Let the Bible never be attacked without a resentment worthy of the men who held fast to it 200 years. Let no reform made in the Master's name wait for helpers nor wait for the leadership that our fathers would have given. Make the cause of the Kingdom the real business of your life; for thus, and thus alone shall we prove ourselves worthy children of the founders of the Brethren church and the heroic followers of the Man of Galilee.

Harmony the Spirit That Makes for Strength. By E. L. Miller

In the seventeenth chapter of the Gospel according to John we are treated to a most memorable prayer of the Master. This prayer revolves around the theme of unity. Particularly is this theme stressed in the twenty-first verse where he uses the words, "That they may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, THAT THE WORLD MAY BELIEVE THAT THOU HAST SENT ME." The last clause of that verse shows what unity (harmony) will do for the work. The greatest testimony to the efficacy of the Gospel to do its intended work is for the professing body of believers to move up close to one another and to harmoniously apply themselves to the task at hand. Daniel Webster recognized the truth of the Gospel in this connection when he applied it to the government by saying, "United we stand, divided we fall." And how can any two walk together except they be agreed? That means that there must be harmony in order that there may be union, and without both there can be no strength. Very forcibly was the truth of this demonstrated during the late war. So long as the Allies continued their inefficient individual method of "carrying on," that is, each nation fighting as an individual unit, just so long could the Kaiser laugh at their attempts to dislodge him. But when the Americans with their everlasting organization and efficiency insisted that there should be a central command, then the doom of the Hun was written on the Hindenburg line. The wicked are wise in their own generation, and the warriors of earthly battles know that harmony does bring unity and strength, but it remains for the hosts of God to try the old time every-fellow-for-himself manner of attacking the bulwarks of the enemy with the consequent result of a stalemate if not defeat for the time being at least.

We are sometimes called the heavenly band, and I like the name. I think of the term BAND not only as a body of folks, but also as a body much like an instrumental band. The analogy between the Christian body and a band of music is close indeed. Imagine a band in which each fellow would take any key to suit himself, or pitch his instrument after the desires of his own heart. And to make matters worse each would insist upon playing his own selection regardless of what the leader or other members might say. Now comes the time for them to begin playing. Unless you are an aborigine of the lowest type the resultant discord, crash, bang, and all the rest of it would drive you to the woods, or to some effort to stop the assault upon your sense of harmony, not to say of the aesthetic. Yet do not the members of the heavenly orchestra try that very thing in the work of the church, and then wonder why folks will not stand for their tactics, and deplore the empty seats and poor response to appeals for assistance? The good of the band of music consists in its being in tune, keyed up to some mas-believed in the might of right which has, in this very year, driven old Demon Rum out of our land. When other preachers were glorifying in the force of arms and lauding the value of war, ours were preaching peace and arbitration—the very principles that have promulgated in a Covenant by the leaders of the greatest nations of the earth, for its future happiness. What a wonderful day is this for the Brethren church! The little seed that was dropped on this free soil two hundred years ago has produced such a wonderful harvest that we may well say in the words of another, "What hath God wrought?" Freedom of slaves; freedom from war; freedom from rum! God speed the day when all men may be ready to follow the teachings of the Man of Galilee whose keen foresight into the needs of man set in motion the movements to reform. God bless every man who has had a part however small, either by gift of money, speech or prayer in bringing to a whole world, this glorious day of freedom in which today we glory. Not all the credit do we take to ourselves; we rejoice only that we stood in ter instrument or key, and then at given signal playing the same tune to time set by the leader. Likewise the good of the band of Christians will consist in and come from a united, harmonious doing of the will of the Master Leader, and playing together as he commands.

The second chapter of the Acts tells of a wonderful demonstration from God. The Holy Spirit came down upon the band of believers, but surely you have not overlooked what preceded the great event. The word says that, "They were all with one accord in one place." Now we cannot all be in the same place, but let me say that we can be with one accord. Indeed it is possible for us as a church to be in one accord better than we have, and in order to develop our greatest strength we must pull unitedly. Imagine the oarsmen on a college eight pulling each one as he pleases, paying no attention to the coxswain, where do you think they would be at the end of the race? So it will be with us, and I am persuaded so it is with us because of our inability to agree in larger degree. I do not mean to preach oneness of ideas but I do wish to stress oneness of ideals. Our democratic church government is the only kind that appeals to me, but you can see that unless we are careful, and unless we tie ourselves up to some ideal we will get far away from one another to the hurt of the cause we profess to love. Can we not be broad enough to assimilate the slogan of our church—"In essentials unity, in non-essentials liberty?" Perhaps one of the leading reasons for our being such a small body after over two hundred years of existence is our bickerings over the lesser things and neglecting the weightier matters. I am jealous for the church of which I am a member, and since we take the stand upon a whole Gospel like we do, I see no reason why we should not grow in numbers, but first I am convinced we must grow in the spirit of unity, harmony, love, peace.

Just a few words more and I close. One more thing for your imagination, and we are troubled much along this line. Imagine an orchestra in which when the time for play arrived the cornet player would insist upon having a try at the traps, the drummer would not do a turn unless they let him attempt the violin, the violinist would fight rather than be denied the privilege of playing the piano, and so on. Wouldn't that be an orchestra worthy of a Sousa? You say that is too ridiculous even to think of, for no musicians would act like that, especially when there would be no possibility of their being such all-around musicians. And I heartily agree with you. But do you not find much of that kind of "tom-foolery" in the church? The eye insists upon doing the hearing, the arm will not agree to anything but walking for the body, the heart must do the thinking and the brain has its own way and it resolves to do the digesting. Much of the efficiency of the church is destroyed because we do not take the lesson from the analogy that Paul drew us, of which the above is a paraphrase. When teaching I used to give my pupils the keynotes of success as I saw them, and I will introduce them here. They are, "B natural, C sharp, and never B flat." These will be of use in our harmonizing for the Master's work, and to them I would add, "Keep my commandments" and surely there will be no danger of the discord that so often mars our efforts, and vitiates our teaching. May God give us his spirit of harmony.

Worldwide Propaganda to Save Beer and Wine

The world having about concluded that some sort of prohibition must be adopted to reduce the admitted evils flowing from the liquor traffic, the brewers are making a desperate campaign in many lands to have the prohibition stop with distilled liquors, sparing beer and wine as relatively harmless. Their propaganda is intended in part to blaze the way for new and enlarged markets for beer. The same amount of the intoxicant, alcohol, is one pint of wine, two pints of beer and three ounces of whiskey, making the problem of their family relation as simple as counting one, two, three. It is a case of three burglars breaking into the human system. We are told the fellow with the biggest pistol is the only one to blame, though the other two more than make up by rapid fire, and, besides, they always pry open the window or the big fellow could never get in.

It is most absurdly assumed that only complete intoxication harms, whereas, partial intoxication from one glass of any alcoholic drink dulls eye and ear and hand to a measurable extent as shown in tests of lifting, climbing, shooting, typesetting, punctuation. Prof. Irving Fisher, foremost of American economists, reckons the money loss to the "wet" half of the nation from lowered efficiency through mostly moderate drinking at two billion dollars a year.

Notwithstanding these element facts, Michigan one year after going "dry," was put to the trouble and expense of voting whether light wines and beers should not be excepted from the prohibition, and although the State as a whole voted itself "bone dry" again by an increased vote, the wet majority in Detroit was increased from ten to thirty-five thousand.

The Providence of Quebec, in 1919, gave a majority for sparing beer and wine. In France, the main temperance league takes that stand. Only a little handful campaign with Dr. Legrain for complete prohibition.

It is ominous that our returned soldiers, gathered in St. Louis, May 9, 1919, to organize the American Legion, voted the resolution the pro-German brewers have long promoted, "that the sale of beer and light wines be continued until members of American expeditionary force can voice their opinion in the matter." This is not so much a sign that our soldiers have been Frenchified as that they can be exploited by such foxy tricks as were exposed before Senate Committee that investigated the brewers. It is more a peril to democracy and Christianity than to prohibition that such manipulation of the "soldier vote" portends. Are the soldiers such an "easy mark" that they can be led to assume that an article already in the Constitution can be changed by their "opinion"? Are they so uninformed that they do not know, that the major part of the nation, and that a majority part of the House of Representatives (only 2 short of two-thirds), had voted for submission of Constitutional prohibition before the war?

This action set aside by side with the defeat of New Zealand prohibition by the "soldier vote," may perhaps bring down to earth some of those who have assumed that campaigning in France has made angels of those who were quite human young men when they left us. We must "show" these soldiers what science and history have proved as to the industrial and moral curse of beer and wine.

In New York and Pennsylvania and some other states prohibition enforcement bills have been offered that would allow sale of beer containing from 2% to 4% percent of alcohol and wine up to 10 percent. All this and the buttons "No beer, no work," put on by many workmen in New Jersey and New York, proclaim a determined propaganda, heavily financed by the brewers, whose purpose is to save beer and wine, either by a false definition in the law or by nullification of the enforcement.

When the brewers first began to stir up workmen and legislators to defy the newest article in the Constitution, all temperance forces should have fired great broadsides of literature immediately showing the harmfulness of beer to the body, and of brewers to the body politic, so that the brewers would have been kept too busy on the defensive to have any chance to continue their offensive. For this purpose the editor of the Twentieth Century Quarterly, Rev. W. F. Crafts, condensed the thirteen hundred pages of the Senate investigation of the brewers' crooked political activities into seventy-two pages and sent it out with "Scientific Testimony on Beer" to the key men of this and many other lands; and paid for the printing in half a dozen languages of the booklet, "Shall We Save Beer and Wine?" prepared for the International Reform Bureau by the Scientific Temperance Federation. The most telling experiments of great doctors and chemists, described in that booklet, showing how a beer and wine quantity of alcohol lowers efficiency of hand and brain, were printed in a smaller leaflet and given out by hundreds and thousands at the close of illustrated speeches on the same subject, to men's Bible classes in big city churches. Supplies of all this literary ammunition at cost were offered to other reform bodies, but only six reform organizations up to date, in the absence of any council of war or co-operative plan, have availed themselves of the offer. It is now "way late" for such a barrage, but not too late. Let us all unite to show what beer and brewers have done to us, that we may remove the greatest obstacle to prohibition enforcement at home, and save China and South America and other lands from invasion by our banished brewers.

to manifest toward one another in the ministry. There are always so many good things to say about our fellow-workers in Christ that it never pays to waste the time speaking of the other things. The work at Garwin is in a very healthy condition and the future is promising. Both pastor and evangelist give us a hint as to what we may expect of the Carlton church in the coming days.

One of our most careful as well as interesting correspondents is Sister Mary Pence, the new pastor of the Limestone, Tennessee, congregation. From her report in this issue you will notice that our Tennessee Brethren are alive to every interest of the church. Not only The Brethren Evangelist is placed in every home, but The Brethren Missionary also. This insures intelligence as well as encourages consecration on the part of the congregation. It is a praying people; they prayed for an evangelist and God sent them one in the person of Brother Cobb of Dayton, and then prayed for a pastor and God answered their prayer by calling one of their own talented and trained young ladies to the ministry and to their pastorate. Sister Pence is the latest ordained minister of the church and we wish to say to her, Welcome into the ranks of the ministry, Sister Pence, and may God richly bless you in all the coming days.

Whether some experiences are good or evil cannot be told until their final result in character building is seen.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Christian Athletics. By A. L. DeLozier

TEXT: And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things.—I Cor. 9:25.

In this chapter Paul sets forth his example. He also vindicates his apostleship. In the course of his remarks as to how he had been all things to all men, etc., he finds it convenient to refer to the Greek games. He says (Twentieth Century Testament): Do you know that on a race course, though all run, yet only one wins the prize? Run in such a way that you may win. Every athlete exercises self-restraint in everything. This last sentence reads in our authorized version, Every man that striveth for the mastery. The Greek word is agonidzomenos, it means literally Striveth in the games or agonizes. It is the regular term for contending in the arena or on the stage.

This word does not mean ATHLETE, but it very strongly suggests the word ATHLETE because an ATHLETE is one who strives in the games. So it is really about the ATHLETE that Paul speaks. The appeal that Paul makes in this connection is not to weaklings, sissies and the like, but to men and women with good red blood.

Christianity is something worthy of the athletic type of individual. It appeals to men like "Billy" Sunday and "Bob" Fitzsimmons. You perhaps read where shortly before his death the great prize fighter was planning to enter the ministry and do evangelistic work.

The man or the woman who can and is willing to do things, the person who has real backbone and courage will sooner or later want to be a Christian because Christianity challenges the best that is in us.

Let it not be later however, but sooner if possible. Indeed the sooner one becomes a Christian the better.

WARFARE

The Italian, French and German versions use the word "fight" in this verse. Something like this: Now whoever exercises himself in the fights is temperate in all things. This suggests warfare, the thing that for four years was the chief concern of the world. We could almost render it: Every man desiring to be a fit (efficient or good) soldier.

This would be quite in harmony with Paul's thought anyway, because he spoke of a good soldier of Jesus Christ, when he wrote to Timothy. In the great war just passed a man had to measure up to some high physical requirements before he was considered an efficient soldier. In our camp (Camp Crane) men had been in the service for more than six months and had gone through various tests, when finally some little defect was discovered and they were forthwith discharged. Furthermore the men were carefully shadowed day and night lest they through intemperance of some sort become inefficient. And so Paul tells us that those who strive in the games are temperate in all things. They exercise self-restraint in everything.

CONTINENT

The Latin version gives us the word continent. This word has been used extensively by eugenists during the past years. They have been applying it to the sex life and showing the vast possibilities to the man and woman who is thus continent. Through this continence one not only makes one's own life better and stronger, but the coming generations are to benefit immensely by it. Thus can we see something of the almost immeasurable result and benefit of self-restraint.

EGKRATEUOMAI

The Greek verb translated "is temperate" means to exercise self-control. It comes from en and krates which denotes the idea of having a firm hold, having the mastery over, having possession of.

The athlete who wins is the man who has a firm hold upon himself. He has possession of himself, he was himself quite under control. The wise man pays his tribute to the real athlete when he says: He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city. The real athlete knows first how to rule his own spirit. The real king or ruler is he who first rules well in his own little world. The Kaiser seems to have been at one time a great man, a man of wisdom and self-control. But he lost control of himself and it was only a matter of a little time until he lost his empire and became an outcast on this planet. Such has been the history of many a ruler.

Such has been the history of many a statesman, preacher, orator and who not. A man could sway great audiences because in those days he could sway "the man who walked around under his own hat." But one day he lost control of himself and then his power was gone just as surely as Samson's power went on one occasion. Paul's constant fear was that he might lose this control, that having preached the Gospel to others he might himself become a castaway.

It is like the old story of the hawk that was flying high in the sky and seemed to have perfect mastery over gravitation, when suddenly it was making a nose dive toward mother earth. What was the matter? Upon examination it was found that the hawk had a snake in its bosom and the reptile had done its deadly work. And so there are a lot of people who through their lack of self control and intemperance are trifling with serpents and are liable at any moment to do the nose dive to destruction.

APPLIED TO STRONG DRINK

This matter of self-control has its most conspicuous application just now as concerns strong drink. Our eyes were opened when Russia went dry a few years ago. Some one wrote in the Chicago Tribune at the time a little article which proved to be quite a prophecy. This is it: In advising his subjects to quit drinking the Czar of Russia is trifling with his luck. If they stop drinking they will begin thinking, and bang will go autocracy. Of course we know that this is precisely what happened. The Russians have been unfortunate in falling into the hands of the Bolsheviks at this stage of their transition, but they are headed for better days because they are more sober than ever before. I am not a prophet nor am I the son of a prophet, but I predict that if national prohibition becomes a reality in the U. S. A., we may expect this republic to just enter upon her greatest days.

IN THE INDUSTRIAL WORLD

Why is it that employers of labor are anxious to have their men not only sober, but free from disease and dissipation of all sorts? It is because they know that a man will turn out more work if he is temperate in all things.

Investigations have long since been conducted relative to accidents in factories. It was found that they were most numerous on Mondays, due to the abuse of alcohol and other evils on Sunday. Capitalists do not theorize along these lines, but they have all sorts of facts at their command sufficient to convince them that it pays to have sober and efficient men.

THE POLICY OF THE ARMY

Some months ago during the war, General Barry submitted to the war department with his approval a recommendation of an army board to locate the camp for the thirtieth division of the national army (including the states of Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska and the two Dakotas) near Minneapolis. But a flood of "dry" telegrams soon induced Secretary Baker to reverse the decision of the board as all the states of the division were dry with the exception of Minnesota. And so Des Moines enjoyed the business prosperity that came from the millions spent in and around a cantonment. This is only one incident typical of what our war department did in many places. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. This is true in the individual life, it is true in the industrial world and in the army.

Efficiency and self-control exercise a mutual influence the one over the other, or rather self-control or lack of it determines efficiency.

EFFICIENCY

In reality Paul is talking about efficiency. Striving for the mastery, translated into twentieth century business terms means working toward efficiency.

We have been learning much of efficiency for several years, but this war demanded a maximum of sufficiency, a super-efficiency if such a term is permissible. Being obliged to thus strive for the mastery, alcoholism had to go. But our text says, Temperate in all things. So no matter if the editors over the country do cry FANATIC, we will help to rid the world of some other evils. This has almost become a temperance address. But what difference, if the truth is being told?

ALL ARE ATHLETES

You say, "Well, what has the text to do with me?" It refers to athletes, soldiers and industrial work. Yes, but I want here to remind you that we are all athletes in the kingdom of God. We are put here and especially in the church to do our BEST. Anything short of the best possible from every one of us insults God and wrecks his program. We are in a race. We must lay aside every weight and run with patience the race that is set before us. Now if that isn't athletics, then what is?

SOLDIERS TOO

Or, if you prefer, we are all a part of his army. Each one is a soldier. We have just as stiff a conflict as the Allies had some months ago. If they had to demand efficiency, all the more we who have Jesus as our Captain.

If we are willing to co-operate for efficiency in all these other realms, why can't we all the more strive for the mastery for his sake and the Kingdom's?

This is what we mean by "Christian Athletics."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Jesus Our Example. By Mrs. A. B. Cover

OUR SCRIPTURE

For I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done unto you (John 13:17). As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth, that they all may be one; as thou Father art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us that the world may believe that thou hast sent me (John 17:18, 19, 21).

OUR MEDITATIONS

That Christ may become a reality in our lives and dwell in our midst we must search his Word for an example of his perfection for daily living.

One of the perfect characteristics of his perfect life is that of boundless joy. In John 17:13, this joy is exemplified. But now I come to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they may have my joy made full in themselves. What a blessed joy is here assured us; a joy that no human being or misfortune can take away. Are we in possession of such joy that will overcome our earthly cares and carry us to that blessed hope beyond? In (John 15:11) that upper chamber, at the last supper, just before making the supreme sacrifice, Christ again shows his joyousness. "These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy may be in you and that your joy may be full." What blessed assurance, and joyful hope of that great joyful life in a perfect world without end, is here revealed to us. These instances are but a few of the many joyous passages found in the Book of books. In fact, the whole New Testament is the most joyous book of all books. It begins with joy over our Savior's birth and closes with a superb picture of a countless multitude singing halleluiah chorus. No matter where you open it, amid fortunate or discouraging circumstances, you always find a note of joy. Even when Christ had gone, the sorrowful followers took their food with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God (Acts 2:46). When an apostle is thrown into prison overnight he passes his time in singing (Acts 16:25). And if you listen to him in a Roman prison, you will hear him say, "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I will say, rejoice" (Phil. 4:4). There is enough tragedy in the New Testament to make it the saddest book in the world but instead it is the most joyful. Let us therefore, like our Master, strive daily to find joy in serving him.

Another admirable characteristic in our Master's life which we should develop is that of loyalty to his cause. "No man can serve two masters, for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Let us look into our own lives today and determine where we stand. Are we neutral, lukewarm, indifferent, or are we standing on the firm foundation with Christ, always ready to denounce sin, and to uphold righteousness? Upon which are we standing? In John 7:17, Christ tells us how we may stand firm and loyal to his cause. "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching." Let us consider how we may discover just how God wants our lives to be. The surrendering of our lives to him is the first requirement. We must be loyal to as much of God's will as we know, and we must ask constantly, not once in a while, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" We must test all our choices by the principles set forth by Jesus. We must tune our consciences and our intelligences by prayer until God can speak clearly to us through them. Are we willing to obey?

Last but not least, we must consider the Master's spirit in which he lived. "And it came to pass in those days that he went out into a mountain to pray; and he continued all night in prayer to God" (Luke 6:12). "And in the morning a great while before day, he arose up and went out and departed into a desert place and there prayed." These are typical passages revealing the source of his power and obedience. His own words tell us that his work was done by the power of God's spirit and we find him here seeking in prayer a refreshing for further service. How are we serving today? Are we depending upon our own self-sufficiency and spiritual pride, or are we depending on our Lord and Master for strength and guidance? All the best in us, is God in us, and our endeavor must always be to use his power. Great souls always depend upon God for strength. Consider Jesus, "I am of myself nothing." Consider Paul, "I live yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Such consciousness makes noble humble lives willing to serve according to the Master's will. Then together let us strive and say with St. Paul, "By the Grace of God I am what I am."

OUR PRAYER

Kind heavenly Father we thank thee for thy blessed Word, wherein is revealed thy will through the ministry of thy dear Son, Christ Jesus. We thank thee for his beautiful perfect life given to us as a beacon light to direct us in thy service. Lord, help us in our weaknesses, that we may daily live in the spirit of humility which, he manifested to us in surrendering his will to thine. Help us from time to time to become more loyal, more joyful, more willing in service for thee. Forgive us Lord, for wherein we have fallen short. Lead us to higher and purer living. Help us to so live that thy dear Son may dwell in our own hearts, and his exemplary life be radiated in a world of darkness by his followers. Amen.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Baptism. By J. L. Gillin

The ordinance of baptism appeals to different people variously. To some it has no significance. To others it is of vital importance. To still others it appeals differently at different periods of life. At one period in the experience of this last named class baptism is the door into the Christian life. At another period it may appeal to them as the sign of obedience to God. At still another period it may appeal as the visible sign of a spiritual fact.

Fortunately the New Testament presents all these conceptions of baptism. Thus, in 1 Pet. 3:21 baptism is the means whereby the Christians are saved, since it does not signify the washing away of the filth of the flesh but the interrogation of a good conscience toward God through the resurrection of Jesus Christ, i. e., it is the sign of obedience and the entrance into the benefits of salvation secured by Jesus' resurrection. In John 3:5 baptism with the Spirit are the twin agencies through which the new birth is accomplished by which one becomes a Christian. While in Rom. 6:4 Paul conceives baptism as the means whereby the Christian is mystically buried with Christ to the death of the old life of the flesh and rises to walk in the new life of the spirit. In Eph. 5:26 baptism is the means whereby Christ cleansed the church and in 1 Cor. 6:11 baptism is the means by which the Corinthian Christians were washed from the sins of corrupt Grecian society. What a treasure of conception! No soul need turn away from Christ and no one need plead that the Christian experience as revealed in the Bible does not meet his conception of what baptism is for. In one period of one's development one conception will appeal and in another period another reason will have force.

Baptism as a Test of Obedience

Jesus said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Baptism as the first formal act the new Christian takes signifies one's willingness to obey Christ. Baptism is a striking method of confessing Jesus as the Savior. This is especially true of baptism performed in the way it was practiced in the first Christian centuries.

Baptism as a Cleansing

Many passages, some of them referred to above, made it easy for minds less penetrating than the minds of Paul or John to understand the terms "washing" and "doth now save you" (1 Pet. 3:21) literally rather than figuratively. Hence, in every age there have been people who have looked upon baptism as a saving ordinance. That is they have felt that if they were baptized they were saved,—sometimes they entertained the idea that nothing else was necessary, and no matter what they did afterwards of evil, they were "saved" by reason of having been baptized.

There is a certain stage in many persons' development when they need the evidence of some visible sign to give them assurance of forgiveness of sin and of "salvation." At that stage of spiritual development baptism provides a particularly striking evidence. To the sin-stricken conscience baptism without doubt performs a most salutary function. It is the outward sign of an inward change.

Baptism as the Mystical Means of Union With Christ

To those of somewhat mystical tendencies baptism may serve, as with Paul, to signify the burial of the old man of the flesh and the resurrection of the new man of the spirit to live in newness of life in Christ Jesus. To one who feels keenly the corruption of the flesh and the bondage of the spirit to the flesh, as pictured by Paul in Romans 7, some striking sign of the change from bondage to the flesh and freedom in the spirit through Christ's death and resurrection is needed. Baptism with its burial in water and its rising out of the water signified such a change to Paul. Baptism was the sign of the Christian's mystical union with Christ in his death to the flesh and his rising in the Spirit. Like as Christ was subject to the flesh before his death, but was free from the flesh and all its weaknesses after his resurrection, so the Christian, who was in bondage to the flesh before baptism was by baptism freed from the bondage to the flesh and was made partaker in Christ's resurrection life. To Paul and to many another mystic through the ages baptism has served as the sign of that freedom from the flesh which they have experienced through Christ.

Social Significance of Baptism

Baptism has meaning not only for the individual, but also for society. In the formula of baptism, "into the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit," we have the teaching of three great truths of the most importance to society.

"Into the name of the Father." What great social truth does that teach? "Father." No other word could have been used which has such social significance. The family is the fundamental social unit. The father is the head of the family. Every social virtue, such as pity, discipline, subordination to an authority which is not only feared but revered, love and confidence is called up by the name father. Then when the name is applied specifically to God, as Jesus applied it, religion and filial affection are wedded together. This union of religious motive and social virtues is the unique idea of Jesus. The trouble with social reform today too often is that it is divorced from the religious motive. What a tremendous appeal religion can add to the movement for social righteousness! Baptism links our social passions and aims up with the religion that conceives of God as the Father of men.

"And of the Son." Here we have the converse of the idea just mentioned. Fine as was the conception of "Father" so the name of God, finer was the exemplification given by Jesus in his filial attitude to God. "Father" was a living reality to him. "Father" was by his side always. Jesus had the consciousness of his eternal presence. Jesus' attitude was that of filial, reverent sonship. Perfect understanding between them, perfect confidence!

Out of that consciousness of sonship Jesus drew the strength of his courageous convictions concerning the social sins of his day. Why did the Pharisees call out Jesus' fiercest invective? Because lacking the consciousness of that intimate relationship to God signified by Jesus in the terms "Father" and "Son," they were unbrotherly towards their fellows. No pity possessed their souls. "Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for ye bind burdens grievous to be borne upon men's shoulders and ye yourselves will not touch them with one of your fingers." Selfish and hateful towards their fellows—and all in the name of religion! No wonder Jesus burned with indignation at such a caricature of religion.

Baptism signifies sonship and sonship socially signifies brotherhood. No one can conceive of God as "Father" as did Jesus, and of sonship as Jesus conceived of it, and refuse to see that he must have pity for his fellowmen, that he must look upon them as brothers, and therefore be interested in every piece of social injustice that binds them down. Baptism "into the name of the Son" therefore, is the pledge of one's interest in his fellows and of an earnest effort to give his efforts in Christian service to them and the society in which they live.

"And of the Holy Spirit." Both in the Old Testament and the New the Spirit is the representative of God sometimes to individuals and sometimes to groups. Assuming the Spirit's ministry to the individual, I wish to call your attention to a fact sometimes overlooked, that the Spirit had a social mission as well as a mission to the individual. In the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth chapters of John's Gospel the Spirit is the comforter or advocate of the disciples, as a group. He will teach them all things, even the things that could not be taught them by Jesus himself. He will guide the blind disciples into all the truth in the days of the developing organization.

Moreover, the Spirit was to be sent to the group of disciples and was to play a part which Jesus himself could not play in convicting "the world of sin, and of righteousness and of judgment." Certainly that was a task which had to do with society outside the group of disciples. Thus, the Spirit was the representative of God and of Jesus with the disciples after Jesus was taken away to teach them and encourage them in their endeavor to bring in a new world order and also to "convict the world,"—a synonym of the existing social order,—of sin and righteousness and judgment.

Did space permit it would be easy to show that the Spirit first after Jesus' departure manifested himself in a group; that Paul conceived of the Spirit's activities being manifested often in the Christian groups; and that the gifts of the Spirit are social virtues. Perhaps, it is sufficient to point out that baptism "into the name of the Holy Spirit" is the sign of acceptance both of the Spirit's work in the heart of the individual, in the Christian society and in the world, or the social order which ultimately passed away under the influence of the Gospel. In other words baptism pledges one to accept the Spirit's guidance both for his individual life and also to bring about a new society "wherein dwelleth righteousness."

I have tried briefly to show that baptism has not only an individual significance but also a meaning for society. He who is baptized in the solemn and ancient manner of immersion, and a triune immersion has had a most striking and dramatic acted parable of the cardinal teachings of Jesus both for the individual and for society. The more he ponders upon its meaning the richer it becomes.

Our Church In East Tennessee. By E. M. Cobb

In the first place, our church is not at Telford, nor do any members live at Telford, nor is the name of the church Telford, and it is quite distasteful to our members who live at Limestone, and who live on the Limestone River, and most of whom get their mail at Limestone, and have called the name of their church Limestone, to have the name Limestone to be wholly disregarded and another name substituted, which means nothing relatively or geographically; and I am asked by these brethren and sisters to request the brotherhood to make their records read Limestone instead of Telford.

In the second place the region is often referred to as being "in the mountains of Tennessee." On the contrary, this church is located near the middle of the great valley of east Tennessee, which extends from Chattanooga to Harper's Ferry, Virginia, by way of Bristol, Tennessee. It is a number of miles from where the Brethren live to the Iron mountains on the south, or the Cumberland mountains on the north. This fertile valley of the Nolla Chucky river is unsurpassed in beauty and fertility of soil in the South. At the present time there is being constructed by the State of Tennessee and the United States government combined, a Memphis to Bristol highway, which runs immediately through Limestone. Limestone is also on the main line of the Southern Railroad from Knoxville to Bristol.

In the third place the people of this valley are not to be classed with the people of mountainous regions who have never been reached by school systems. On the contrary, within three miles of our church there is located a Presbyterian school called Washington College, which was established in 1796 by Rev. Samuel Doak, and has been more or less successful and prosperous since its organization, and enjoys a student body of from 1000 to 3000 according to conditions. Tusculum College of the same kind and nature is only a few miles away at Greenville. To the east a few miles at Johnson City I saw 1200 young men and women in the Normal School there. Our pastor and a number of other people in the vicinity are graduates of the first named institution.

In the fourth place these people are not paupers, nor even poor, but are possessors of large acreages of this red fertile soil, which at the time I was there was covered with waving fields of golden grain and green meadows covering the beautiful undulating hills, decorated by wooded landscapes, penetrated by free limestone water streamlets fed by springs. Most of the planters have from 500 to 3000 hens, and they are shipping daily hundreds of cases of No. 1 eggs directly to New York, where they secure the top price.

In the fifth place, this vicinity is not unknown to the world. A few miles to the right and you may behold the birthplace of Andrew Johnson. A few miles to the northeast and you see the home of Governor Taylor (Fighting Bob). A few miles to the east you are shown a large oak tree where Andrew Jackson held his first United States Court, and also a tree bearing the inscription "Here is whar D. Poone killed a b'ar." At Jonesboro, the county seat, formerly was located the capital of the state of Franklin before there was a Tennessee.

In the sixth place, between Greenville and Johnson City, a distance of practically 40 miles, and within a radius of the same distance the other way, there are 22 Dunkard churches and mission points which, as much as it may be regretted, on account of local conditions are not occupying the field and conserving to the Brethren faith their children and the people of their country as they should.

The Brethren church at Limestone, so far as I know, is our only church in Tennessee. It was organized a few years ago by Brother Drushal of Lost Creek, Kentucky, and enjoyed for a short time the pastorates of Brethren Allen and Ronk; but for two years they have been without a pastor, yet they have been very persistent and aggressive in their Sunday school and prayer meeting work under the leadership of Miss Mary Pence, who was born and raised there, but who for five years past has been teaching at Lost Creek, Kentucky.

The writer began an evangelistic campaign at Limestone, June 1st, and continued till the 18th. After preaching a week on doctrine to crowded houses in the middle of harvest, and observing surrounding conditions to be as the above paragraphs indicate, a business meeting of the church was called and Miss Mary Pence, by unanimous vote of the membership was ordained to the full ministry and elected pastor for one year, and by the same ballot John Mongold was elected to the deacon's office, and the wives of three deacons installed in their respective offices. Some very aggressive work was planned, such as a basement for the church, electric lights, a coat of paint, a tithing system of finance, and many other artful touches of tact and discretion which plainly showed the masterful hand of the new pastor, as well as the unbounded confidence of her parishioners who have been her neighbors from childhood. At Limestone I found one Brethren church where they do not owe a cent, where each and every member may be called upon to lead in public prayer, and where the members stand as a unit with their pastor. When the Mission Board sent me to hold this meeting they kindly informed me that my expenses would be cared for, and I so reported the same to the pastor, whereupon she kindly but firmly replied that they would look after that themselves. There was no wool pulling or wire working, nor a continuous campaign of collections and offerings; but almost at the very last she made the simple statement in public that an offering would be taken for the evangelist, and I want to say in behalf of their confidence in prayer, that the offering they received allowed me the best gift I ever received for a three weeks' meeting, and there were $18.00 left in the basket. When these people want anything they tell their troubles to the Lord, and they stand four square on the Word of God. And I want to kindly suggest to any evangelist who might chance to go there, that he better stay pretty close to the written Word of God or he may have troubles of his own. Our meetings resulted in nineteen confessions, just one of which was made by a member of a Brethren family. Their children are already members. We closed our meeting with a very spiritual Love-feast. I think every resident member except four were at the tables, and two of these by position, were compelled to be away.

MISSIONS

Kentucky Mission Notes. By G. C. Carpenter

The Krypton Field

Brother Cook writes: "I am glad to report that the work here and around Krypton has a far better outlook than ever before. And you do not know how grateful we feel for that."

The following from Brother Cook's April and May report sent to our Mission Board will be of interest to the whole brotherhood and will give all a better understanding of what is being done in that field. Besides a good financial report, the following service report was sent:

1. Krypton

Pastoral calls about 100.

Confessions, 4.

Baptisms, 4.

Sunday school—April average attendance

50 1-3.

Sunday school—May average attendance,

54 1-3.

(Rained very hard one Sunday in May which cut the average down).

Prayer meeting average, 60.

2. Chavies

Sunday school (the best yet) average, 50.

(Had revival meetings scheduled but two cases of smallpox caused us to postpone the meetings).

3. Beach Fork

Spent one week up there preaching.

Confessions, 1.

Baptisms, 1.

Sunday school average, 40.

(This work is carried on by some of our members moving back there. The field is ours with a little work. No one from the outside is doing work there).

4. Napford

This is our other point and we are expecting to begin meetings there the first of July. The work has started up again. There has been so much sickness there all spring we had to wait.

The above portion of Brother Cooks' report shows that the Brethren cause is on the way to permanence in several places around Krypton which fact is indeed encouraging.

Happy

Brethren Drushal and Cook are both helping to direct the new work at Happy where Miss Elizabeth Haddix and Miss Hattie Cope are working. The brotherhood may receive a surprise call one of these days to help erect a building at Happy where it is hoped we may build another work similar to that at Krypton. The Coal company at Happy are making a proposition that will stir the whole Brethren church to action if the details of the matter can be satisfactorily arranged. Watch for further announcement.

Telford

Telford is not in Kentucky, but is just over the line in sunny Tennessee. Brother E. M. Cobb, pastor at Dayton, Ohio, has been holding a splendid revival there. While there he wrote us this rapid fire message: "Having large crowds and good interest. Held a business meeting June 7 and organized the church more fully. Ordained Miss Mary Pence to the full ministry. She received the unanimous vote of the church, and then they unanimously called her as pastor for next year. I ordained one deacon and three deaconesses. Established a tithing system of finance on the envelope plan. And appointed a love feast for June 18 when I will close the meeting. Have consecrated five babies and have nine persons awaiting baptism. Having a glorious meeting."

Surely there is something doing at Telford. All who know Sister Mary Pence will rejoice that she has been ordained and accepted a place in the active ministry of the church. She was already "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." May, the Lord bless pastor and people and lead to victory in his name. Watch for Brother Cobb's report.

Brother Cobb wrote to his church at Dayton an account of the happenings at Telford and added, "How am I standing it? Oh, fine, I ate dinner yesterday with a brother who served young fried chicken and he kept saying: 'Have another piece, I have 2700 more just like this one,' but I'll say no more or Evans, Schell and Dr. Long will be down here!" The writer feels it his duty to warn Miss Pence to be on guard, lest some Brethren preacher, other than the writer of course, after reading about that 2700 be found seeking her place. Brother Cobb's friends hope for his survival.

LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

In my last report, I stated that we had to change the time of our revival meeting because of the Union meeting to be held close to our church. This meeting began the last Sunday of March and lasted four weeks. Mr. John Brown was the evangelist; he preached the same old gospel he preached four years ago when he was here. He had not changed a particle to this new "after the war gospel" we "used" to hear so much about, but preached the good old gospel of salvation by the atoning blood of Christ. The attendance was good from the beginning although the first sermon he delivered was on "Tithing and Giving." He told men and women of their sins and the remedy,—faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and many confessed Christ especially, boys and girls from the Sunday school.

Brother Brown, as he generally calls himself, had however, changed his method in this,—formerly personal work was done promiscuously through the congregation; this time he had an inquiry room and the seekers of salvation were urged to go there where personal workers were in attendance to give light and leading to sinners concerning the true Light. It was a very successful meeting.

We began our meeting the first Sunday in May with Brother W. S. Bell as the evangelist and Prof. B. P. Stout to lead the singing. The attendance was good. Long Beach was the tenth city in America in erecting buildings last year, and a lot of people living in new houses around the church that had no church home, attended. The Brown revival really started a revival spirit in the neighborhood, as well as in our own church, and especially in our Sunday school. Brother Bell continued to preach the glad tidings with power a good deal on the same line as Brother Brown with the addition of what we call doctrine. However, Brother Bell did not preach much on doctrine, but during the day went about to lead people to Christ and indoctrinate them. Many of them did not know anything of our doctrine as a denomination. And several of the members assisted Brother Bell in doing personal work. Prof. Stout can preach the gospel in song as few have the gift of doing and people were delighted to hear him. He has songs appropriate for any subject the preacher may use. With these special efforts and the faithfulness of the church the Lord gave us the joy, of seeing 24 make the great confession of the Christ as their Savior, 65 of whom have been baptized. Four had previously been baptized. Most of these have joined the church. There were 39 from the Sunday school ranging in age from eight years to nineteen years, besides several adults.

On Thursday evening the 29th of May, we held a very enjoyable communion service. About 225 surrounded the tables. The next evening we had a get-acquainted social and reception for the new members, also reception for the Baumans after their long absence and farewell for the Bells. The evening was spent with several songs by Prof. Stout, recitations and speeches. Brethren Bell and Bauman exchanged bouquets for good deeds in regard to church work and also reminiscences of stunts during their acquaintance for many years. Refreshments were served and everybody seemed to be happy so we had a pleasant and profitable time together.

Arrangement has been made with Evangelist Brown to return to Long Beach again the 22d of June to hold another meeting in the west part, or business district of town. I suppose our church will have some part in this and of course, if we do our part we get our share of the ingathering.

N. C. NIELSEN.

JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

It might be of interest to the Brethren to note that the First church, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, has under way extensive plans for the erection of a new edifice in the same district only about two blocks from the present location. In the opinion of the officials of the congregation it is the finest location in the city for a church, being entirely in the residential section of one of the finest parts of the city, on a corner of two prominent streets which are asphalt paved, have shade trees and every other feature that would tend to make the location ideal and really beautiful. The plot covers 15000 square feet and was purchased about two months ago when the congregation was at a high pitch of enthusiasm for a new house in which to worship. The enthusiasm seems to be growing which is manifested by the way the funds are rolling in to pay off the debt. The plan adopted for the payment of the lots is very unique and simple, it being simply this; that each wage earner of the congregation contribute each month a day's wages to this fund. This equalizes the payments almost perfectly, with respect to the financial standing of the different persons. With very few exceptions every wage earner has taken hold of the proposition and those who have not yet fallen in line will be drawn into the work in the near future by the strong current which is moving rapidly toward a higher goal for the Johnstown church. A large chart in the shape of the new lots has been placed on the wall of the Sunday school room and has been divided into 15000 squares each representing a square foot and as fast as any one contributes the price of a square foot his or her number which is designated on another chart, is placed in the square so that, at any time, it can be seen who has contributed and how much. To date over $4,000.00 has been contributed and if the interest keeps up the paying off of the lots will soon be history.

Under the direction of Brother John Bole, the ground has been leveled up and the finest kind of a sod produced, on which the various Sunday school classes and organizations are conducting festivals, lawn fetes, etc., the proceeds of which are being applied to this work. The results thus far in this line are more than gratifying.

We have long felt the need of better facilities for our church and Sunday school activities, and for the purpose of affording better and more pleasing environments for our young people and we feel now that we are going to be blessed with an answer to our prayers. The spirit of co-operation and kindly feeling toward each other, with a determination to do more in the Master's vineyard is at a higher pitch at present than it has been for quite a while and with this feeling carried through we are sure to succeed.

We asked the prayers of the loyal Brethren everywhere.

H. W. DARR.

HAMLIN, KANSAS

Since the last report from Hamlin there has been a great deal taking place. Beachler has been here and received the subscriptions to the Permanent Endowment Fund. We feel that the brethren here did well in subscribing a little over two thousand.

We have observed the special days of the church and have found them helpful to us. We find that it has not been a task, but rather a pleasure, to observe these days and take the required offerings at each one. We do not exceed our goal by a large margin often but so far have always a little more than made the per capita amount to reach the goal.

At times the weather has been bad but we seldom lose a service since the 'flu' has let up on its ravages.

We shall have the Brethren Day service on June 15th and we expect a good attendance and feel sure they will be well repaid for attending.

The congregation here has been real fortunate in not having losses by death during the scourge which swept our fair land. We now have one loss by death however.

Some time in the near future we expect to hold our love-feast. This one service has been twice hindered by excessive rains just before we were to have observed it. We covet your interest in the work here as well as all other points in the brotherhood.

Fraternally,

GEO. E. CONE.

LA VERNE, CALIFORNIA

We have added interest and activity in every department of our church to report.

A feast in the way of a soul-searching series of revival meetings has been ours, and although Satan, has been dying hard in our church, glorious victories have been and are being gained. Rev. W. P. Nicholson of the Los Angeles Bible Institute was with us for three weeks and we all feel the result of his sound gospel preaching in our lives. As a result of these special services we received seven by baptism into the church. Since then nine have been received by baptism and two on confession of faith. We are glad to be able to report a live prayer meeting with an attendance of about seventy-five. As to the finances we have almost surprised ourselves. The Easter offering was over three hundred dollars. Then we lifted an eighteen hundred dollar church debt with Brother Kimmel of Whittier here to assist us and we oversubscribed it so that we have a nucleus for a new church building which must come sometime in the near future. A substantial raise in the pastor's salary has been recommended; and if any church ever had a sincere, consistent, God-fearing pastor, it is ours. He is ever found about the community on some mission of love and mercy and is beloved generally and sought by all.

The Sunday school continues to grow. We are seeing 150 up on the attendance chart oftener nowadays. Just now our faithful superintendent is planning an airship flight over the hot summer months with Sundays as the landing places. We feel quite certain of having another summer of good attendance. A different Sunday school class is responsible for the opening exercises of the session each Sunday. Interesting programs are being rendered on all special occasions.

The Christian Endeavor is forging ahead with about fifty members. There is an interesting meeting each Sunday evening. An Expert class with an enrollment of thirteen members has just been launched—and judging from the spirit of earnestness among the members we will expect to report, thirteen graduates at the end of the six months' course.

May we all struggle on unceasingly with the desire to please our blessed Redeemer as the incentive for all our labors.

RESULTS FROM GARWIN, IOWA

Our three weeks' meeting became one of four weeks as we were interfered with by the weather. Our meeting commenced May 18 and closed June 15, with the communion service the next evening. There was much gasoline burned in this four weeks of service. Coleman and myself are acquainted with all roads in the community and practically all people. We met many excuses, real and fancied. As this was the first campaign either he or I had been in here, we met with many teachings that should have been Brethren teachings but they were far from it. If there is another campaign here in my pastorate, there will be probably less difficulties to be met with the next time. Sometimes I am forced to acknowledge that the Brethren doctrines are endangered from sources we would least expect.

Our attendance was good when the weather permitted. A number of times the church was unable to accommodate the people. Coleman preached the Old Time Gospel in a fearless way. He is as strong on the Brethren principles as could be desired. Even though he has been a member of the Brethren church for only four years, he is more strongly indoctrinated than some who were supposed to have been indoctrinated at the Fountain of Knowledge. He preaches logical, convincing sermons, with no intent to play unduly upon the emotions. There are a number of others who might have enlisted with us, if we had coaxed them, but we were not after numbers as much as results. Coleman's success does not depend upon numbers, and he does not sacrifice one principle for numbers. Surely the Lord led him to Garwin. Oh yes, results! We got them. There were 53 confessions and two coming by relation making 55 in all. Forty-five out of this number have been received into the church and there are others contemplating the step, who are not included in the 55. We boast of a larger attendance than the churches in the nearby towns, not even excepting Marshalltown. What is more, this church has room to expand and we are not near our limit. The future of this church is exceedingly bright. The campaign with Coleman will be remembered a long time. Did we like him? Well, we gave him over half a thousand dollars for a free will offering and it was raised in practically twenty minutes. This was the largest offering he had received in his evangelistic work. We have now in round numbers 200 active members, and what is equally good, they have the means to back up their religion. If some of the things go through that are contemplated this will be one of the best churches in the brotherhood to serve as pastor.

We held our communion service last Monday evening. Our new tables were used and we had a splendid service. Each seat in the main room was filled with communicants, except the back one which did not have a table upon it. It will have to be equipped before our next communion, and after that I do not know what we will do to accommodate the folks. Looks at the present time as though sometime we might have to do some building.

Preparations are now being made for children's service. We have other affairs planned that will be given from time to time. There are improvements planned that will be welcomed. We are very thankful to our God and Father for the numbers he gave us, and for the lives he made new. We ask the prayers of the brotherhood in behalf of the work here, as we remember the cause at large.

Yours in his name,
FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

THE EVANGELIST'S REPORT OF THE GARWIN REVIVAL

You no doubt will be interested in a report of the meeting held at our Carlton church. I have heretofore left all reports of my meetings to others more proficient in this line. However on May 18th, we opened the meeting according to schedule. Brother Ankrum had things in fine shape when I arrived, as he has been working toward this end for two years. He had plowed deep, planted early and all there was to do was to harvest the crop. Brother Ankrum has some fine folks that are worthy of personal mention, but space and time will not permit. I found every one ready to work and all arrangements made. The fact that I put on several pounds avoirdupois speaks for the entertainment at the home of Brother Harvey Richards.

The weather for the first two weeks was fine, after that it rained every day but two till the close of the meeting. The harder it rained the more determined we were to win. Like Jacob of old we wrestled till the blessing came. However the rain was not our worst foe but some very peculiar teachings of years gone by. I am moved here to sound a warning to the church. Hold fast to the things which you have heard lest at any time you let them slip. Christian latitude is a fine thing when properly used but the history of the religious status of the church shows, that when doctrinal points are strictly adhered to, the spiritual life is always deepened. Do not misunderstand me, I do not mean that narrow bigoted denominational difference, but the strict holding to the unmistakable teachings of the New Testament. Jesus never lowered the standards, nor made it easier for one than another to come in. "Teach them to observe," is as much of a command today as the day he uttered it. I believe in the Brethren church, that is why I am not a member of some other. When the time comes, if it ever does, that I can pass lightly over the teaching of the Brethren church, then I will preach in some other church. I usually hold union meetings but I always preach Brethren doctrine. Why? Because I use the teaching of Christ Jesus in every sermon. I find that folks are hungry for the whole Word.

Brother Ankrum's work is best described by saying, "He is a good servant of Jesus Christ." The new members are even now planning some big things for the work in general at the Carlton church. I expect big things of them and I know I will not be mistaken, watch them.

Fraternally,
F. G. COLEMAN.

HAGERSPTOWN, MARYLAND

We are still striving to steer clear of the "summer slump," although we are having exceedingly warm weather south of the Mason and Dixon line. On Sunday, June 8th, we held our Children's Day exercises. We used a service entitled "Others," which was suggestive of service. The program was well rendered, the children doing themselves credit. We had a fine audience and their appreciation was manifested in close attention. Sometimes folks say that these special services require too much work and question whether the work is appreciated. I believe that the value lies in the training of the growing minds to do things for the Master, and seed may be sown that eternity only will reveal. We, as one pastor, emphasize the work of the Sunday school as much as possible. We see there the church engaged in the study of God's word, which is the best preaching. Our school did not enter the contest, but if we had we should have made Milledgeville look little. Brother Snyder may doubt this statement, but our records show that we had forty-five with a perfect record of attendance, i. e., attended every Sunday during the year. The list is growing each year. We use the Robert Raikes Diploma system to stimulate this feature of the work.

Our Foreign Missionary offering on Easter Sunday amounted to two hundred dollars; but that is not the extent of our entire offering to foreign missions, as we use the Duplex system and send in regular contributions besides the special offering mentioned above.

We launched a campaign for raising the balance of the church indebtedness. We did not "go over the top," nor did we reach our goal, but we tried. The result is indicated that we were $2266.92 farther toward our goal than before the drive. We rejoice for this success and know that God will bless those who have made possible this decrease of the debt. By next year, we are confident that we can clear this debt and then secure a parsonage which is greatly needed, since houses are hard to get in the city.

Since our last report another soul, a man, the head of a family, made the great confession and united with us in the work of the coming Kingdom.

NEWS FROM LIMESTONE, TENNESSEE

If we remember correctly, the last news from this field extended to about the end of the "flu" season. Not one of our members was taken by the "flu" for which we are thankful. Since then we have been privileged to have our regular sessions of Sunday school, prayer meeting, and S. S. C. E. meetings. Our Sunday school deserves special notice because the regular attendance has been better than at any time since this church was organized. Both students and teachers have shown a decided interest in the work of the school and that of course makes things up and coming.

Easter night a very interesting program was given, mainly by the boys and girls, interspersed with songs by the school, a male quartette and a solo. A good introduction to the service was given on "Profits of the Resurrection" and the program closed with a blackboard talk on "Our Bodies and the Resurrection." Two of the young men contributed much to the joy of the occasion by appropriate banners and decorations. At the back and also the front of the platform were banks of fresh dog-wood blossoms—the exquisite Tennessee variety. The house was packed to overflowing. The offering was about forty-seven dollars. The best part of the occasion was the beautiful spirit manifested by all concerned even to the audience.

The next move of the Sunday school was to relieve the Presbyterian church of the support of a French orphan for a year.

The S. S. C. E. observed Woman's Day, May 18. The whole program was rendered by women and girls, except a quartette in which two men were asked to sing, that peace might obtain in our family and jealousy be kept down. Many spring flowers were in evidence, the audience attentive, and the offering very liberal.

In addition to placing the Evangelist in reach of all our members at our last members' meeting we decided we needed the "Brethren Missionary" in our business for Jesus also, so that in due time it will be placed in all the homes of members.

Perhaps the thing that is most interesting to you is the Cobb meeting which was the next and last event to date. The church had been praying for months for two definite things, an evangelist to help reap the present harvest and sow seed for a future harvest and for a leader or pastor for this work. And we can now praise God for his answers. Our first petition was answered in the person of Dr. E. M. Cobb of Dayton, Ohio, coming May 31, to preach for us something over two weeks, and meanwhile conduct Bible classes and give lectures on his travels through Palestine. We cannot give all results of these meetings because all results are not visible and those that are visible are more than the editor would care to print. But we want to mention a few of these. The membership was strengthened in the most holy faith and in its "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works" (Titus 2:13, 14). A deacon and three deaconesses were ordained; five children dedicated to the Lord; the confessions of nineteen young people were taken which broke into nineteen different families. Fifteen of these have been baptized and received into the church. These represent six new families. In spite of hindrances, we think some of the others will yet be baptized. It could not be avoided that Brother Cobb had to leave with so many under conviction. Will you not pray with us that they may yield their lives to Christ?

Brother Cobb was very much appreciated by the members and the people generally. He made many friends. In answer to prayer he came among us and was almost a total stranger. We naturally felt anxious to have the whole Word preached and so it came to pass that we got it just like we members had been digging it out of the Bible for ourselves. So we found ourselves one in Christ Jesus.

We are thankful to God for sending his servant and we thank Brother Cobb for his untiring service while here and insist that he come again. In the meantime our prayers are for him and his.

During the meeting our second petition was answered in a way least thought of by some of us in that one of our own number was ordained to the ministry and was given a call by the church to serve as pastor this year. You Brethren who would not come here to help us out, need not use your good stamps to apply for the place just now. We are laying plans for the future but we thought you would enjoy hearing what has already been done.

We covet your daily prayers that our eyes may be opened to really see and grasp the opportunity at last opened to this church, and that we have the grace of God to obey his every call.

MARY PENCE.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

LOWRY-DEETER—At 3:00 P. M., on Wednesday, May 21, 1919, J. S. Lowry and Emma Deeter were united in marriage by the writer, in the Brethren parsonage, in Berlin, Pennsylvania. Both parties were brought up in Berlin, and are highly respected by a large circle of friends.

JOHNSON-KNEPPER—At two o'clock in the afternoon of June 11, 1919, in the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Knepper, in Berlin, Pennsylvania, Walter A. Johnson and Elizabeth May Knepper, of Berlin, were united in marriage by the writer in the presence of a circle of admiring friends. After the ceremony a very sumptuous dinner was served. The contracting parties shortly took their departure for a tour of the western part of the state.

IN THE SHADOW

PECHT—Amelia Anne Pecht was born in Holt county, Missouri, March 24, 1857, and died at Hamlin, Brown county, Kansas, June 7, 1919, at the age of 62 years, 2 months and 13 days.

She had been a member of the Brethren church of this place for a number of years. She leaves to mourn her loss, her husband, Wm. Pecht of Hamlin, Kansas; her son, Merton McGuire of St. Joseph, Missouri; three sisters, one brother and a host of friends.

Services from the Bethany Brethren church by the undersigned.

GEO. E. CONE.

CROUSE—Brother Wm. E. Crouse of the Pike church whose residence was just a short distance from the church, departed this life June 1st, 1919. He was aged 65 years, 2 months and 4 days. He was taken to the Municipal Hospital, suffering from influenza. After an apparent improvement he had a sudden relapse which resulted in pneumonia and death. He leaves to mourn their loss, a wife and four children. Brother Crouse was a hospitable, kind Christian and with his good wife made many of our preachers comfortable during a visit to the Pike church. With many kind memories we laid his body away to await the resurrection of the faithful in Christ. Funeral services conducted by the undersigned.

G. H. JONES.

DISHONG—Sister Martha Eash Dishong was born November 13th, 1850, died June 14th, 1919, aged 68 years, 7 months and 1 day. She was a faithful member of the Morrellville Mission church for many years and though living at a distance from the church still remained faithful to its doctrines and associations. Her husband, Brother Henry C. Cassel, well known to the Brethren church, Brother Cassel Tregear, as he was known to the church here, became a Christian at the age of eight and united with the Brethren church at 10th and Dauphin Streets, and has always been a faithful attendant. When our country became involved in the war, he was in the Mount Vernon Hospital, and with the intention of eventually entering upon the study of Medicine at the University of Pennsylvania. In October of 1917, he entered the army as first aid in the Hospital Corps. While rescuing wounded comrades on the battlefields of France he was severely wounded in the side after having passed through four gas attacks. Last March he returned home apparently in good health, but with reduced vitality on account of the experiences and exposure through which he had passed. In May he was seized with a violent attack of influenza, which finally so affected the heart that he succumbed. Before leaving for the army he had said to his grandfather, "I am not going to kill, but to help the poor fellows that are hurt," and it can be truly said that he laid down his life helping the other fellow. Only a few hours before he passed away, it became the hard task of his pastor to tell him that he could not live. His last words to me were, "If he wants to take me, it's all right with me. I want his will to be done." These words fittingly indicate his lifelong recognition of and submission to the Lordship of Jesus. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor and the body was laid to rest in the old Germantown cemetery. Let the church pray for the father and sister.

G. H. JONES, Pastor.

TREGEAR—Harry Cassel Tregear "fell asleep" Friday morning, June 20th, 1919, aged 23 years. He leaves a father and sister to sorrow because of his departure, his mother having preceded him several years ago. He was the grandson of Brother Henry C. Cassel, well known to the Brethren church. Brother Cassel Tregear, as he was known to the church here, became a Christian at the age of eight and united with the Brethren church at 10th and Dauphin Streets, and has always been a faithful attendant. When our country became involved in the war, he was in the Mount Vernon Hospital, and with the intention of eventually entering upon the study of Medicine at the University of Pennsylvania. In October of 1917, he entered the army as first aid in the Hospital Corps. While rescuing wounded comrades on the battlefields of France he was severely wounded in the side after having passed through four gas attacks. Last March he returned home apparently in good health, but with reduced vitality on account of the experiences and exposure through which he had passed. In May he was seized with a violent attack of influenza, which finally so affected the heart that he succumbed. Before leaving for the army he had said to his grandfather, "I am not going to kill, but to help the poor fellows that are hurt," and it can be truly said that he laid down his life helping the other fellow. Only a few hours before he passed away, it became the hard task of his pastor to tell him that he could not live. His last words to me were, "If he wants to take me, it's all right with me. I want his will to be done." These words fittingly indicate his lifelong recognition of and submission to the Lordship of Jesus. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor and the body was laid to rest in the old Germantown cemetery. Let the church pray for the father and sister.

ALVA J. MCCLAIN.

MOOMAW—Daniel Clavis Moomaw, youngest son of D. C. and R. A. Moomaw, of Roanoke, Virginia, died of shell shock in an American Forest, October 13th, 1918, aged 32 years and 25 days. Soon after the conscription law was passed in 1917, he volunteered and went to Fort Myer, Washington, D. C., to train for official service and was assigned to 1st Lieutenant and assigned to Co. D, 31st Infantry, 80th Division and went to France in May, 1918. His division was engaged in the Argonne sector, beginning September 26th. On November 20th, he was officially reported missing or killed in action. A large measure of uncertainty seemed to surround his condition and after some effort to get to the front, Dr. B. C. Moomaw went to France to make a thorough search for his missing brother. On April 5th, seven months after Lieutenant Moomaw had been killed, the doctor found him where he felt unburied. It is our purpose to have him brought home at the proper time and let him sleep in the family burial place.

He was of the most lovable and peaceful disposition and of the highest and purest moral and religious standards. He was a graduate of the University of Virginia, received a degree from the Washington and Lee University and attended the school of law in the Lexington Institution. He was baptized into the Brethren church by Brother A. B. Duncan of West Virginia, 16 years ago.

A Problem in Mathematics

Many years ago, as we remember it, one of the problems we were asked to solve in mental arithmetic ran something like this: If a frog falls into a well thirty-six feet deep and in trying to get out jumps three feet high each jump, but falls back two feet each time, how many jumps will it have to make to get out of the well?

The above problem illustrates the situation of the Brethren Evangelist subscription list exactly. About a year and a half ago we found ourselves 2250 feet up the side of a subscription well 5000 feet deep. We have been jumping strenuously ever since, and if it were not for the "slipping back" after every jump we would have been "way over the top" long ago. During these eighteen months we have jumped and slid and jumped and slid until we found ourselves 3000 feet up, then 3200 feet up, then 3500 feet up, then 4000 feet up, then 4500 feet up and lastly about 4800 feet up and we had begun to think that about "a yump and a yump and a half a yump" would land us out of the well "slick and clean." But there is "many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip," or between the bottom and the top of a well, and just as we could peek over the top we began to slip, slip, SLIP, and we are not sure the slipping has stopped. We have dug our toes and fingers into the side of the wall, but the stones are slippery, and moss-grown in some instances and the climbing goes hard. We thought we had two churches lined up for the Honor Roll that would land us safely, but they have been a little slow in action and now we have slipped back.

Last week we were compelled to remove ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY, think of it, ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY NAMES from our subscription list. Do you know what that means? It means that the people in the pews are not the only ones who go to sleep. Sometimes a pastor feels hurt when he sees a number of the members of his congregation sleeping while he preaches. But why shouldn't they sleep on Sunday when the pastor has been sleeping all week? Surely a number of pastors have been sleeping a great deal of the time the last six months, or they would not have permitted their congregations to become so delinquent with their subscriptions to the Evangelist.

We have just mailed cards to all these whose names have been taken from the list begging them for the sake of the cause to renew their subscriptions, and we have faith to believe that most of them will. But what of the pastors who give so little heed to the matter in their own churches?

Good News

Yet we have good news to report and we are not nearly so "blue" as the above statements might suggest. We have preached too many sermons from the text: "Be not weary in well doing, for in due season ye shall reap, if ye faint not," to give up just yet, and if there are any signs of fainting we have not been able to recognize the symptoms. Since our last report four or five churches that have already been on the Honor Roll from one to two years have reported that they will continue to hold their places. Among the number are Ankenytown and Fairview, Ohio and Elkhart and Loree, Indiana. The pastor at Loree wrote, "The returns from the first year's experience in having the Evangelist in every Brethren family have been too great to give up the plan now." O, you brethren who are standing on the banks, afraid to come in because you think the water is cold, do like we used to do at the "old swimmin' hole," just take a "header" off that old sycamore stump leaning from the shore out over the water and you will find the "shock" all over in a moment and you will enjoy the "swim" so much that only an "urgent call" can get you out again.

But, how about those two big churches that are coming in, do you say? Well, they are coming in all right, and they will make some splash when they do come in; but they will hardly put us over the top, unless we regain some of the ground we lost last week, and the time is short, O, so short! Only FOUR WEEKS more and our Conference year will be over, then it will be too late to make the goal this year, if it has not been done by that time. Brethren, will you HELP US DO IT?

Doubling the salaries of public school teachers within the next five years, and an addition of 50 percent before another ten years have passed, so that the minimum average salary for teachers would be $1,500, was the program urged by Commissioner of Education Claxton, in a recent statement. How will this influence the effort to recruit the ministry without a like increase in pastors' salaries?

A STRANGE REQUEST

A Sunday school teacher in the upper end of town is a great favorite with her girl pupils. The teacher frequently asks the pupils to commit to memory various bits of verse and scripture. The other day the teacher got this note from the mother of one of her pupils:

"Dear Teacher: Please don't teach my Mary any more prayers, as I can hardly get her to bed now."—Town and Country.

Vitalizing Religion a Means of Combating the "Summer Slump"

"The 'summer slump' is an annual malady in the lives of most churches. Everywhere there is a tendency toward relaxing interest and effort in the work of the kingdom during the hot summer months, and the churches are few that are able to wholly overcome the tendency. Some make no strenuous efforts in that line but meekly yield to what they believe to be the inevitable. Others bewail the tendency, but content themselves by scolding the members who contribute to the slump; they put forth no special efforts to prevent it. Still others recognize the harm of the tendency, but with that recognition launch varied and shrewdly conceived plans for escaping the malady. And happy is that church or minister, who, awake to the gravity and needlessness of the situation sets about wisely to prevent it before the first symptoms begin to show themselves.

There is no desire to discount or belittle any of the many more or less successful schemes devised and employed by churches here and there throughout the land. The normal and even increased interest resulting from some of these unique plans bear witness to their worth. But however shrewdly conceived and wisely executed any device or plan may be, if it is not calculated to cultivate vital religion; if it does not turn the minds of men toward Jesus Christ, it has failed. It is possible to get a crowd of people inside our churches and not add an ounce of strength to our churches. It is possible to attract people to our churches and send them away with a lower conception of the real work the churches are doing. If the masses are drawn to our churches as they are drawn to movie shows or a street performer and sent away with no more serious thoughts concerning the vital things of life than they receive at such places, the people will go away disappointed and prejudiced against the churches and will finally be driven from them. The church that so completely deserts its divine mission will not long maintain itself. It will soon find itself bereft of both the Holy Spirit and the crowds.

Our church services should be as entertaining and attractive as possible, but entertainment without devout purpose, holy zeal and sincere worship turns the temple of God into an amusement house. Every possible inducement should be thrown out to people to come to God's house, but when they come they should not be left in doubt as to whether they had really entered God's house or not. Everything that enters into the church's program should be in harmony with the hallowed spirit and high purpose of its divine Head. And the spirit of the participants should be that of one rendering humble service unto the most high God. Every song, prayer, Bible reading and special number should be given with reverent zeal, sincere humility and genuine worshipfulness. Such a spirit should characterize the services of God's house at all times, but the time above all times when it should be intensified is at the very season when regular attendance is hardest to be maintained. That is the time, the sweltering summer season, when most church leaders are searching for methods and devising schemes that will induce the indifferent folks, those who are inclined to take a vacation in their religious activities during the disagreeable summer days, to attend church sufficiently to keep up a fairly decent congregation. And fortunate is that church which has leaders alive, progressive and resourceful enough to devise effective ways and means of maintaining a respectable attendance during the "slump" season. But over and above all other plans and schemes I want to suggest the deepening of the spiritual life of the church, and the making of the religious activities more vitalizing and gripping.

The great sinful world is needing life and is just as hungry for it in the summer time as in the winter. In season and out of season men are conscious of a soul hunger that can only be satisfied by the Bread of Life. If Jesus Christ is made very real; if he is portrayed in song, prayer and the preached word; if men coming can sense the very presence of the Lord in the sanctuary and in the lives of the worshippers, there will be no lack of attendance. Men will seek God's holy temple if they have assurance that they will there see the Lord high and lifted up. The ritual, order of service and persons engaging should all be of the type, arrangement or quality that will make possible a clear and gripping vision of him who said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." Where services are characterized by a deeply moving spirituality, that have no sham, no display, no hypocrisy and where there are no boorish attempts to impose its particular type of expression on all those who come, there, as a rule, you will find the hungry souls of men thronging for the satisfaction they desire.

To vitalize the services of God's house care must be taken not to cheapen them. It is not uncommon to observe efforts to popularize church services result in the doing away with all forms and ritual and the introduction of an informality that cheapens the place of worship and robs the worship itself of its dignity, grandeur and sacredness. Bluster, noise and informality do not add vitality to a service, nor are they an indication of the presence of spiritual life. It may be even a hindrance to deep feeling and strong desires. Where religion flows most quietly, unobtrusively and shows least tendency to leap over the banks, there very often it flows most deeply and strongly. Genuine, vital, attractive religion will not bear cheapening. Frivolous innovations, street slang, ragged forms and trashy music are not conducive to the life and power that attract men to the house of God.

On the other hand there must be attention given to prevent forms and ritual from becoming lifeless things that starve the hungry, souls who seek them as the bearers of the bread of life. It is not uncommon to find forms in our worship that are hollow and meaningless. They are unsatisfying and disgusting because of their emptiness. To offer hollow forms to those who seek spiritual life is to give a stone instead of bread. The most perfectly rendered anthem is but the clanging of a cymbal, if it comes not forth from voices that echo the praise of the heart. The most beautiful and sacred ritual will be no more than a form of drama, if hearts do not unite with voices in its reading. The most eloquent sermon will carry no message to the souls of the hearers, if the heart of the speaker is not surcharged with love and sympathy for mankind. There is nothing that must be avoided with greater prayer and fear than the tendency to drift into Pharisaism. Lifeless forms will not only fail to attract, but will drive men away from the church with a bitterness that will be hard to overcome.

If men are becoming indifferent to the appeals of the church, put more life into its forms. Send no man away empty, but give him wholesome, attractive, appetizing food that will meet his spiritual needs. Make the church services such a perfect conductor of the spirit of life that he cannot come in touch with it without feeling a thrill of the Holy Spirit's power in his weak and dying life. See that vital religion so thoroughly permeates the very atmosphere of the sanctuary that no one but him whose heart is wholly immune to divine influence can approach it without being thoroughly inoculated by this good contagion. Vigorous life is always attractive; vitalize more completely your religious services and witness the effect.

Dean Miller is on the Pacific coast now ministering to some of the churches and giving a series of lectures at the Southern California Bible Conference.

We have another brief report from Brother Neher of Nampa, Idaho, telling of some good meetings with his little band that gathers from a wider area than another church in the brotherhood. We are sure the people of the churches more favorably situated are rejoicing in the loyalty of these faithful Brethren.

Brother Herman Roscoe sends another report of the receipts of the Board of Benevolences. Those who have not remitted up to the present have lost the last opportunity to be reported before General Conference. But maybe you can get in on the Conference report. And you, at any rate, can do your duty to the aged ministers.

Noreatur, Kansas, is heard from, and it is a good report that we have. The weather served them very adversely in their revival with Brother Brumbaugh as evangelist but much good was accomplished nevertheless. Brother Dodds is also serving the little group of Brethren at DeVizes. Let us hope that we may hear from Brother Dodds oftener.

Kindly remember to address all matter for publication to George S. Baer, Editor, and all business to R. R. Teeter, Business Manager. The editor will do most of his work at his home a mile away from the Publishing House and if the mails are properly addressed, both the business manager and the editor will get their own mail without delay. Thank you, for remembering and favoring us this way.

We are running in this issue the annual message of Brother E. M. Cobb to his people of Dayton, the first of the year. Because of its length and the crowded condition of our News department we have been unable to run it until now. But we feel sure that its value will not have been lessened by the delay. The message it brings is not for one season, but for all the year.

Sister Detwiler was certainly glad to get back to the work at Spokane, Washington, and the people there were equally delighted to have her return. She reports the new building to be going forward in style and that they expect to dedicate their new church home soon. Read her interesting letter and then send forward your "bond" or whatever size offering you can give. Now is the time they need help.

It is a most promising field and will prove a most profitable investment.

We are in receipt of a new "exchange." "The Herald of Gospel Liberty," the official organ of the Christian church, published at Dayton, Ohio. The newly elected editor is a friend and was a fellow pastor of your humble editor, while he was pastor of the Brethren church at Pleasant Hill, Ohio. He is Rev. Alva Martin Kerr, who has done considerable writing for several religious magazines. Congratulations, Brother Kerr, your first paper is a very bright issue and of splendid quality.

Brother Bame calls for the last report of the year on the Four Year Program. Now is the time to get busy. It will take only a few minutes to make the report, only those few minutes stand between you and a creditable showing of your church in the final report at Conference. Brother Wood issues a call to the Maryland-Virginia churches to get their reports in in good time. The editor also wishes to request the Ohio churches to report to him very promptly. Let every church report on every goal, and everybody on time. Now is the time; "now then do it."

Our readers will be pleased to get a report this week from the pen of Dr. Miller for the Ashland church. Prof. J. A. Garber is pastor and the work is moving along nicely under his care. The church has been realizing a continual growth in membership and spirituality. Brother Garber's right hand man is Prof. A. C. Hendrickson, who is leading the Sunday school forward. Remember Ashland took second place in the Waterloo contest. Sister Amy Puterbaugh also receives well-deserved mention in Dr. Miller's article, as the efficient leader of the church choir.

Brother Lyon favors us with another letter. Judging from present indications, there seems to be no "summer slump" in store for the Capitol City church. Notice their high average Sunday school offering. One thing the brethren there are learning among other things under Brother Lyon's instruction is the grace of giving. It would be a fine thing if our people were more generally taught and encouraged to tithe their incomes. No matter what view you take of it from a scriptural standpoint, it is a good plan for financing the Kingdom's interests.

Brother Ashman and his good people at Sunnyside, Washington, observed not one Brethren Day but a series of them. If any of the people are not thoroughly indoctrinated, it is not likely the fault of the pastor. The members there are interested in beautifying the church and in making the parsonage a very pleasant place for the pastor and his family to live, and the idea of furnishing the parsonage is one that is worthy of consideration, especially in view of the facts that the pastor must often move long distances, and that such moves are very expensive and hard on furniture. Another evidence of the people's appreciation of their pastor's services is the fact that he was given an increase in salary for the new year.

You have been anxiously waiting to learn what the Easter offering amounted to, haven't you? Brother Bauman whets up our appetite still more in this issue. He tells us that we went over the top, but he does not tell us what it was. We cannot blame Brother Bauman however, for he cannot report to us until we all report to him. Who has been keeping him waiting? Well, we will not inquire any more about it, except to say, that we wish you would hurry up, for we are anxious to learn the totals. But we are assured that it was the best ever given,—enough to guarantee all the plans of the mission board.

One of the most interesting sketches we have read for a long time is that from the pen of Brother Cook concerning a certain Mr. Shell, an old man supposed to be 131 years old. How much good one might do, with the vision and education that is possible today and the spirit of Christ to give inspiration to service, if permitted to live as long as this man has lived. We might live longer if we lived more temperately "in all things," but still the length of life is not always measured in years. In a letter from Brother Cook we learn that he is engaged in a revival meeting at Krypton, with Brother Drushal of Lost Creek as evangelist. They ask you to pray for them and the saving of souls.

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

Time To Report

The time for our reckoning with our record has again come. This time it is for another year. It is the last but one for the Four Year Program. The next report asked for will be for the record of 1920.

The Date, July 20th

I want this report to be swift and sweet. I shall ask no petitioning from the District Directors. You have the card that asks for a date in July. This page will reach you about the 4th to the 6th of July. I am going to give the Keymen or pastors to the 20th of July to get their reports to the District Directors. Then, the District Directors will number them in the order that they come to them. That will give each church a rank as to promptness. The District Directors will have till July 31st to mail them to me. Any letter that does not have the July date stamped on it will be in bad for promptness.

No Coaxing

There is to be no coaxing, begging or "tooth-pulling" for this report. This page ought to be read enough by this time that any one interested in the program would not miss this notice and so, it will be wise not to delay or neglect. In the last "call" for reports, there were several that came direct to me. I do not want that sort of thing this time for it mixes up things so much that trouble results. The District Directors all want the full report and the delay causes me to send them to them, and so, we shall not need the emergency relief, this time.

Everybody Help

Some contingency might arise that your Keyman would overlook this and if there seems to be no movement in your church to clear up the records,—if the pastor is not making a buzz about getting all the goals,—it will be a very good thing for you to "nudge" him up a bit and say, "What about our church and the Four Year Program?" For there will be a stir in the churches that really are trying to make the Goals. Last night (June 23) I had a special meeting of my Board of Trustees to enlist their aid in getting all the Goals cleared up before the time this will be demanded. So, officials of the churches everywhere will be doing a real service for the church if they will help to get ready for a clean sheet.

A Hard Year

Sure enough, this has been a hard year for church work. I have been an active pastor for fifteen years and have never had so hard a time getting and keeping things going as this year. I do not at this time know if our church will make all the Goals or not. Indeed, I shall think a miracle has happened if we reach all of them. But that shall in no way deter me from making the best possible report. I hope that you will feel likewise.

No Yellow

I do not know what the thoughtful Secretary will work out for us this year, but already a state director has said to me, "I don't want my state to show yellow, this year." Sure you do not. Yellow is a bad color when it regards neglect. That was what made the yellow last year—neglect. And God's great question is, "How shall we escape if we neglect?" The same answer will be made as will be at the Judgment Bar; there is no escaping the yellow if we neglect. If we do not neglect—if we only report, we shall see no yellow on the sheets this year. Some things can be done and some can not but this all can do: REPORT. If you can not report what you have done, you can at least report what you have not done and then your state will not show any yellow. How many Front Line Churches will we have this year? We ought to have at least fifty. If we do not make a good start at Front Line work this year, of course, we shall not get all churches in Front Line next year. If fifty churches will reach the Front Line this year then, we shall be greatly encouraged to get over the last year of the Program.

Big New Things

Already talk has come to me that we need a new Program when this is over. Well, so be it if we do, but let us keep this one humming till it is across. That we shall need to spend some more money and do some special planning next year to get some of the Goals, is evident. I hope the mission boards will get the vision of the larger work they can do, must do, next year, if we are to make any perceptible gain over the reported membership when this Program was started three years ago. I know more than I shall put on paper but any one who desires information on that point or wishes to know what I have in mind can ask and receive all of it without money and without price. But the very fact that we have made several of the Goals so easily and that some of them are lagging, says that we must concentrate on the slow ones and bring them up—next year. There ought to be some good, sturdy thinking and planning on this matter right now so that we may see big and plan big at this year's conference.

Others Are

The big drives of the large denominations make necessary, if we are to keep on the map, that we likewise make strong efforts. They get large space in the great dailies with their efforts because of the largeness of the results. The Methodist campaign is doing a great thing to keep in the limelight; just yesterday one of the big continental dailies carried a column about what a time they were having in finding wild animals for their big celebration to be held in Columbus, Ohio, sometime this fall. If you attended the conference of the Church of the Brethren, or if you read Brother Baer's editorial comment on it, you will find out that their Five Year Program is gripping them and that they are bound to make a great effort to reach ends worth while. They have set for themselves a great task, but when you remember their devotion to duty, their readiness to sacrifice, their zeal in doing for themselves what they set out to do, you may well address yourself to the task we have set.

We Can—We Have

Some of our Goals seemed to be away ahead of the possibility of attainment. We did not shrink. We have overreached in three years, several of them. Let us go on and finish the task with all the zeal we have. The Lord watches us. "All the world" is still the slogan of the Master while many of us sit around and see a lot of our neighbors unsaved. "All the world" while we too often wiggle out of the small task of getting half of the increase we might out of the very square in which we live in city or town. "All the world," calls the Master, while we pile up treasures "where moth and rust corrupt and thieves break through and steal." Churches, call a halt to the men of our church who are going after the things of the world and the praise of the world and leaving the call of the Master unheeded. Official boards, call a halt to the preachers and say to them, "If it is more money that you need successfully forward your family needs, we offer it to you."

On To Victory

"One step won't take you very far,
You've got to keep on walking.
One word won't tell folks who you are,
You've got to keep on talking.
One inch won't make you very tall;
You've got to keep on growing.
One little seed won't do at all,
You've got to keep on sowing."

BAME.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Value of Hope.

By Dr. Mary A. Laughlin

On a spring morning John Low looked about him and said, "I would like to have a good crop of corn, but I'm afraid it's going to be a dry season and the corn won't grow; or if we should have rains the weeds will grow so fast they will choke out the corn, so I don't believe there is any use in planting any." He had no hope and he got no corn.

His neighbor John Bright said, "I would like to have a good crop of corn and if I do my part I believe it will come." He prepared a good seed-bed and planted well-selected corn; the rains came, he cultivated his field and in due season he harvested a fine crop of golden ears and thus did a man's part in supplying food to the nations. He had hope.

Jennie Doolittle said, "It would be so nice to have an education and do a lot of good in the world, like Frances Willard and the other great women; but it's so hard to study and so nice and easy to read interesting novels and go to picture shows; I don't believe I could ever understand those dry studies, anyway." She had no hope and she never got very far.

Jennie Tryman said, "There are so many things I could do if I only had an education; I am a poor girl and some of the studies are so hard I don't quite see how I can master them, but other girls have done it, so why can't I?" She went to work, overcoming one difficulty after another until she stands at the top of her profession, honored and respected by all, and exerting more influence for good than she ever dreamed of when she was a girl. She had hope.

Most people know that if sick persons have no hope of getting well they often do not recover; whereas if they have a hopeful attitude of mind it helps them, very much. This is the reason why it is so unwise to about unpleasant subjects in the sick-room. John Hunter, a celebrated surgeon, said, "One state of mind is capable of producing disease, another state of mind effects the cure."

Some people have allowed their minds to dwell so much on unpleasant subjects that they have actually made themselves ill. Several years ago I knew quite well a woman who was always talking of the slights she received; of the shortcomings of her acquaintances, how they lacked fervent religion; how her pastor lacked real spirituality; all these thoughts made her unhappy and she grew more and more miserable until she became an inmate of an asylum for the insane. All this could have been prevented if she had accustomed herself to look for the good qualities in the people she knew; she would have had a hopeful outlook and she might now be living a life of usefulness in her community.

What is hope? It is the expectation of good. It is a deep note all through the Old Testament and it rises higher in the New Testament. Therein lies one great distinction between Christianity and the teachings of the heathen; the heathen writers hold out nothing to hope for, the best they can offer is the duty of resignation.

Our religion is a religion of hope, hope both in this life and in the life to come. Hope is a scriptural virtue; it is our duty to be hopeful, as well as our very great privilege.

But how can we have hope when all things look dark to us? These are the times when people sometimes give way to despair; despair is the opposite of hope; it is lack of confidence in God; it is a principle of sin. But we will have hope if we remember this teaching, "All things work together for good to them that love God;" let us remember this promise and be comforted.

And again, it helps very much to meditate on this scripture: "The everlasting God, Jehovah, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary; there is no searching of his understanding. He giveth power to the faint; and to him that hath no might he increaseth strength. . . . They that wait for Jehovah shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint."

And when the sands of life are running low, if we have not much to hope for in this present world, let us remember this: "We know that if the earthly house of our tabernacle be dissolved we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Probably the Oldest Man in the World. By James Cook

Is Thought to Be One Hundred and Thirty-One Years Old

John W. Shell, who lives on a creek called Greasy, in Leslie county, Kentucky, is thought to be the oldest man living. The writer has been hearing about this old man for several years. All the old men say he is considerably over the hundred mark, and that he was an old man when they were boys. This spring while holding a few days meeting over on Beach Fork, a distance of about thirty miles from Krypton, I spent one day calling on this old gentleman, who lives about twelve miles beyond my preaching appointment. I found the old man sitting outside the gate in the sun, he and a little boy, while his wife was plowing on the opposite side of the house. After stating my reasons for coming the old man said, "Well you are looking into a face that has been here a long time." The old man unlike his surroundings, did not deceive his looks. He is very fond of talking which enables one to get any desired information. He is in good health, can eat and sleep well and his eyesight is as good as it ever was. He can beat most of the young men shooting, does some work on the farm and can ride horseback. Four years ago he rode to Hyden, a distance of about twenty-five or thirty miles in answer to a summons to court and was cross when some of the men of the town would not let him return the same day. When I was there he was talking of going to Harland a distance of thirty or forty miles. He thought however that would likely be his last trip away. While the old man has a fairly good memory, he does not know his age. The people who live around there say he has been counting back on his age for several years. He thinks he is about one hundred and fifteen. He and his first wife were the same age, and she has been dead about eight years.

A Mr. Chappel and wife who live near this place, are the wealthiest and the most influential people in the county and are related to Mr. Shell, say that Mr. Shell is much older than he thinks. Mr. and Mrs. Chappel are near seventy years old and they have known Mr. Shell from their childhood, and say he was a very old man when they were children. That is what all the old people say. While the record of his age has been lost they are sure he was twelve or fourteen years old when he came to Kentucky. The town of Harland was unknown at that time and its present sight was then covered with a heavy forest. Harland has been a town for one hundred and ten years which would make the old man at least one hundred and twenty-four years old and there was likely some time elapsed between his coming to Kentucky and the starting of Harland. In the court house at Harland, they have a tax receipt giving the name of John W. Shell, which is believed to be this John W. Shell of which we speak. This would make the old man at least one hundred and thirty-one, counting him twenty-one before paying tax. I met a business man from Jackson, Kentucky, a few days ago, who said he knew an old man in Tennessee, who died a few years ago, and this old man knew Mr. Shell, and said he was an older man than he was, and said that this old man was about one hundred and twelve when he died.

While at this home, the old man showed me some heavy walnut boards he had sawed for his coffin about sixty years ago. Death has tarried so long, that the old man has disposed of the most of this lumber, and if he tarries much longer I am afraid he will have to be satisfied with cotton wood.

It was some pleasure to follow the old man into the attic. Here we found broken and worn out wools, harness, chairs, beds, looms and a number of things the old man had started to make and had never finished. There were ten or a dozen bee gums made from large hollow logs and in these he kept his corn for meal, flour, dried beans, lard, etc.

The Brethren Plea in the New Day. By J. A. Garber

Brethrenism is both timeless and timely. It represents an eternal spirit which was ordained from the beginning. It embodies a vital message applicable to any day that would realize the Christian ideal. Its marked ability to shake off the exorcismes of ecclesiasticism, to incarnate itself in truth-seeking, liberty-loving people, and to be propagated by them under unfavorable or promising conditions attests the pervading elements of eternity and vitality.

The New Day begins with a clean page. The preceding pages of Time's Volume record erroneous teachings, chronicle disappointing fallacies, recite misplaced confidences. Materialistic education, commercial philosophy and superman progress have been reduced to a glaring absurdity. In a world shivered to atoms by the Great War and staggered with a sense of general failure men must be saved from despair with the challenge of faith—invincible faith in the triumph of a kingdom that cannot be shaken.

Man's extremity has afforded God a fresh opportunity. Confronted with the collapse of vaunted civilization and overwhelmed with the terrible destruction of life and treasure

Men were made to reason why
When forced to suffer and die.

Initial and superficial reflection created a critical attitude of mind from which proceeded pronouncements of failure upon education, commerce and law. Exemption was not accorded the church, nor Christianity. Subsequent and saner thought discovered that the fundamental cause of a world catastrophe inhered not in these ideal agencies but centered in the men who had failed to employ them properly. Whence come wars? From the lusts of men, learned twentieth century students. In the school of bitter experience they have learned the unforgettable lesson—let us hope—that the sin of the world is the sin of men who know God but try to exclude him from their knowledge and fail to glorify him as God. Similarly the sin of modern Christendom is the sin of professed Christians who confess Christ but refuse to allow him to rule over them as Christ. German militarists are conspicuous sinners. But who is wholly guiltless? Are Brethren people? Each one must answer for himself to the righteous Judge of all. Our ancestors have answered for themselves and their inspiring history tells how they counted it all joy to endure persecution and suffer death for Christ to whom they had loyally dedicated their lives and fortunes. Whatever may be the shortcomings of their successors in the faith they have a shining record of loyalty to the Deity of Christ. Today when men cry out for God we can fearlessly present the God of revelation and not invention, the

I asked the old man what he considered the secret of his long life. He said he did not know, that he had worked hard all his life, and that he thought he had as much trouble as any one ever had. He said however, that he had been a great hunter and fisher. He claims to be a member of the Baptist church, and like many of our good old people here when once a Baptistist it is settled for ever.

The old man has a son about eighty-nine years old and some time ago he came to his father's home and while putting up his horse the son started to climb up into the mow to throw down some feed for the horses and the old man said, "Son, don't climb up there, you might fall and hurt yourself, now stay down and let me go up there."

Again it is said the old man bought some land not long ago and some one said to him, "What is your object in buying any more land, as old as you are?" and the old man replied, "In twenty-five years that land will double itself in value."

However it is remarkable to note the strength of this old man and the number of years he has lived. It makes one feel as though we were living back in the days of the long ago.

God who has spoken to us through the life, death and resurrection of his only begotten Son.

The coming of him who came to show us the Father and redeem man occasioned the angelic proclamation of glad tidings. It is not surprising that the account of the Person and Ministry of Christ should be called the Gospel. Without seeming to disparage the Old Testament the Brethren church exalts the New Testament as the clearest, safest and most authoritative creed, disallowing the possibility or desirability of wording another in scriptural language. "Ours is an unchanging credal standard, perfect and complete in every detail, whose eternal principles await interpretation in every age in the terms of the life and experience of that day" (Dean Miller). The self-evidencing truth presented therein derives its authority not from an external sanction but its living content. No interpreter is required except the Holy Spirit freely given to those asking of the Father. Those who have received this gift find God for themselves in the Gospel. It is ours and our hearts own its regal sway. Instead of acquiescing in the accumulations or becoming entangled in the speculations of men the founders and propagators of Brethrenism have positively believed, faithfully preached and conscientiously lived his Gospel. The grandeur of their majestic mission changed human weakness into heroic strength and kindled in cold hearts the inextinguishable fires of holy enthusiasm. Oh God

To us may grace be given
To follow in their train.

We, too, must believe, preach and live that Gospel as the single hope of our generation, its only source of light and power and life.

In proclaiming and obeying the gospel we comply with Jesus' law of friendship and help to win other friends for him. Believing on him as Lord, they as quickened believers, enter the brotherhood with a pledge of fidelity to them and him. Brethrenism is a spiritual fellowship whose members are in living union with Christ and one another. It is a theocratic fellowship in which every member has direct access to God and through which God governs all. Ye shall be a royal priesthood. It is a distinctive fellowship whose members become aware of the difference between them and worldly men. Ye shall be a separate people and a holy nation. It is a gifted fellowship in which each one receives of the Christ the measure of grace with which he is to serve and under whose guidance gifts are recognized and leaders set apart. And he gave gifts unto men. It is a didactic fellowship in which each one is instructed and trained to do the will of God which is an open secret to all relying upon the Holy Spirit. He shall guide you in all truth. It is a domestic fellowship in which men and women recognize themselves as brothers and sisters of one family, given to hospitality and benevolence. Being many they are one. It is a social fellowship as suggested by particular tokens, the washing of feet denoting the willingness to serve and eating the common meal expressing equality. He that is greatest let him be your servant. It is a pacific fellowship whose members prefer to adjust differences among themselves rather than share in needless litigation before worldly judges and who regard war as being unchristian and favor arbitration as a sufficient means of settling international difficulties. Brother shall not go to law with brother nor shall he take another's life. It is a realizable fellowship as is evidenced by the continuous embodiment of the spirit of love in community life and common action. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples that ye love one another.

"The Koinohnee-ah." By J. A. McInturff

The communion, the fellowship or agreement of Christian believers is the most sublime experience of life. The Protestant definition of the communion service may vary somewhat because of the dogmatical conception in the early church, but the ethical and spiritual truth is the same in all the views. Luther held that "the church was the body of believers, who, by faith, were saints." Also the Reformed church at first believed the same as taught in its emblems and symbols. Calvin believed that "it excellently expresses the character of the church; as though it had been said that the saints are united in the fellowship of Christ on this condition, that whatever benefits God bestows upon them they should mutually communicate to each other." The Geneva and Heidelberg catechism followed Calvin; the Westminster catechism runs about the same. "All saints * * * being united to one another in love, they have communion in each other's gifts and graces, and are obliged to the performance of such duties, public and private, as do conduce to their mutual good, both in the inward and outward man."

This was the communion service of that day, but as we approach that sublime service we see it in the light of modern education which has recognized the fact that to each we must use symbols. Certain emblems impress us with certain ethical and spiritual truths. Place and condition has much to do in bringing truth to the mind. We hang the pictures of our friends on the wall and as we look at them we bring them back to us. We visit the historic places and bring back the great events. We collect relics of the past, and as we view them we associate the past with us in the present. We read of the great and good men of the past and watch for an opportunity to do great things. We associate with them; their deeds inspire us. We are still hero worshippers. We think of the things the great men of the past did for us and we admire them for it. But what is the means of knowing them? How is it that they live for us? How is it that we go back and find them? How do we make them real to us now? By the use of symbols. By illustration. How do we feel the reality of them? By looking at them and imitating them. We soon feel that they lived for us. Now, when Christ favored his disciples with the communion services he knew that this would be the best way for them to "remember" him; and to feel that he lived and died for them. These emblems relate him to us, and makes his life a reality. Reverently meditate upon his life—the deeds and words of that life. Let the service bring to you the fact that he gave his life for us. That he died for us. Look at the perfect Son of God and then bring him to us through the emblems of his life and death. We will then be in relation to the best and most sublime in life. This is to live in the spirit of Christ. It is to commune with God. This is the most forceful way to teach Christ. It is the best way to experience the living Christ. To live in the spirit of Christ made

Having demonstrated the sterling worth of brotherliness in all walks of life as embodied in a fellowship covering more than two centuries Brethren people are peculiarly fitted to supply the New Day with an adequate message and a fruitful ministry. In this crucial and pivotal hour of human history only one power can save us, the transforming power of the gospel which is sufficient to transform men and nations, who, once transformed, can be unified in a universal fellowship, irrespective of race, nationality and vocation. The demonstration of practical Christianity in Brethren farmers, artisans, educators and the like warrants belief in the Christianization of every human relationship through the application of the Gospel and this is our church's immediate task in an hour of Christian urgency. Let every one say

To serve the present age,
My calling to fulfill;
O may it all my powers engage
To do my Master's will.

new and real through the communion service is to solve all problems of evil. Right communion with Christ will settle the relations of all true disciples. Here is the secret of real character; here is the secret of church unity and success. The Brethren church is the one church which approaches this sacred service by the way Jesus did when he instituted it. We enter upon it by the service of cleansing, and the service of fellowship and hope. What a privilege to commune with the Divine! It is the highest expression of discipleship. For a Christian to neglect it is an act of disobedience bordering on the criminal, because it is to reject that which is essential to character and life.

Cook Stove Apostasy

By Mrs. Ellen Lichty

(Taken from the Travelers' Magazine).

The early church prayed in the upper room, the twentieth century church cooks in the supper room.

Today the supper room has taken the place of the upper room, play has taken the place of prayer, and feasting the place of fasting. There are more full stomachs than there are bended knees and broken hearts. There is more fire in the range in the kitchen than there is in the pulpit. When you build a fire in the church kitchen it often, if not altogether, puts out the fire in the pulpit. Ice cream chills the fervor of spiritual life.

The early Christians were not cooking in the supper room the day the Holy Ghost came, they were praying in the upper room; they were not waiting on tables, they were waiting on God; they were not waiting for the fire from the stove, but the fire from above.

They were detained by the command of God, and not entertained by the cunning of men. They were all filled with the Holy Ghost, not stuffed with a stew or roast.

O, I would like the cooking squad put out less gravy and more grace, less soup and more salvation, less ham and sham and more heaven, less pie and more piety, less use for the cook and more use for the old Book. Put out the fire in the kitchen and build it on the altar.

More love and more life; fewer dinners and get after Sinners. Let us have a church full of waiters on God, a church full of servers, serving God and waiting for his Son from heaven.

Graduation in Christ's school is the glorious commencement of "We shall be like him."

Christ can teach the dullest scholar and make the hardest heart love the truth.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

God's Regard for the Assembly of His People. By Homer Anderson

TEXT: The Lord loves the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob.—Psalms 87:2.

We as a congregation and as a whole Gospel church must realize that we are not living up to the teachings of the whole Bible when we have a desire or a tendency to stay away from the house of God. And if we have our eyes open we can see that this is true wherever we go. Young people and children are constantly wanting to go elsewhere than to church. This may be blamed to the poor quality of the preacher in some cases, but all the churches are not fitted up with poor preachers. This same spirit is in other churches as well as ours. The spirit of the world is entering into the lives of our people so that they are coming to think they do not need to go to church to be good Christians. I believe the trouble lies close to the neglect of Bible reading and prayer. The idea that there is no real need to go to the house of God to worship is suggested to some by the words of Jesus in Matthew 6:6: "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which is in secret shall reward thee openly." But this does not bar us from the public assembly, nor take away the need of such worship. While we are to pray in secret, as Jesus oft resorted to secret places to pray, yet Jesus' example teaches us the need of public worship also because he went to the city and to the temple to read the Bible and to pray and to teach the people. God always kept his people together and he loves to see them together yet; and here is where we are weak and come short of meeting the love of our Lord. The world and the devil never fear Jesus so much when he is in secret prayer. The devil followed Jesus to the mountains where he prayed, but still it was in the assembly of God's people that the devil realized his business was hurt the most, for there is where Jesus was leading souls to God.

Let us remember Israel. God had built the temple for them and they would gather from all parts of Canaan at the time of the passover feast to worship God. Why did they come so far? Because "The Lord loves the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob."

The church is the gate of heaven, but few people think of it that way. While God loves us in the secret chamber, he loves us in the throng. While he loves us in our homes, he loves us in the assembly. While religion should start in the family altar, and it is scarcely found today, yet it should not stop there if we have a way to get to church. You will find this is true, that where a person is in the habit of retiring to the closet for prayer, they are also in the habit of going to the house of God, unless sickness or old age prevents. For the people who do not go to church and Sunday school, do not pray very much at home. Prayer at home would make them realize the value of public worship. We neglect public worship and are weak, because we do not realize that it is the very gate to heaven. And we do not think of the good we could do by going to church on the day set apart for public worship. Our very presence is pleasing to God. Let us consider the matter more deeply and see what good we could be to the world in this way.

There are three assemblies that we want to consider, the local, state and national.

The local church is suffering from lack of attendance. When we think of the fact that many of the churches have only half time services and that so far apart as every other Sunday, the people will not come to church, it is a shame. We surely could afford to give God one Sunday out of every two weeks. We owe God our presence at every service, no matter how often, and when we do not give him that, we are robbing him of time. "The Lord loves the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob." While God loves you in the closet, and he loves you in the family, he loves you more in the assembly. For in the assembly we represent heaven. Here we are seen as the hosts of heaven, and how often have the hosts of God met and you were not present! We ought to support the local church by our regular attendance.

If we neglect the assemblies of the local church, we are interfering with the work and goals of the church at large. And we lose our love for Christ as we neglect his house, and we are untrue to the mission that Christ has given us in the world. We do not realize how much the church needs our presence, and how necessary it is for God's children to come together to consider his business. If it is necessary for Congress to come together to make laws and consider the welfare of the country, is it not equally necessary for God's people to covenene on the Lord's day to consider the Kingdom's interests and to learn God's laws? It is a delightful scene, all the people of God gathered together to worship him. No wonder the Psalmist could say "The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob." When we as a whole Gospel church read our Bibles as we should, we will understand the value of our assemblies. When we understand that we are a part of the gates of Zion, we will avoid or seek to overcome the hindrances that keep us from the house of God.

Let us consider our state or district assemblies, or conferences. Here again let me say that if we understood, as we should, being a whole Gospel church, that the assembly of God's people is the gate of heaven, we would not stay away from our conferences. There would not be a church in this state or in any other district or state, that would be big enough to hold all the people that should come. What great gatherings we should have on these glorious occasions. Indiana alone could fill a wonderfully large building if we all loved the assembling of ourselves together as God's children as we ought. How delightful it would be to see all the people of the state coming together to care for God's work in the state.

But we must hasten to consider the national assembly at Winona Lake. This is the assembly of the whole church in conference. Let us take a look into the temple of the Israelites and see the people of God coming together from all over Canaan. What a sacred assembly! So we should gather at our General Conference. If we cannot be there in person, we should be present in spirit. It seems to me that no eye has looked on a more delightful scene than this assembly that has gathered to worship and to plan the Lord's work. And no man ever met with an association with a greater mission or more important business than those who meet there on the business of the King. It is business that is connected with things eternal, things that shall stand. Let us go back to the days of Christ and his apostles and hear him say, as the Jews and the world fought against the assembly of his people, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." We see Rome in all her power set against the church of God to crush it. There were ten persecutions in succession, and hundreds and thousands of people of both sexes and of all classes and ages martyred. And yet this assembly still exists greatly enlarged and still growing larger. How is it? God has been in the midst of her, and she has not been moved. Jesus said the gates of hell shall not prevail against her, and they did not. God's purposes have always stood while his adversaries have been confounded. Then why should we stay away from the assemblies of God's people in their national work. Here we can get larger conceptions of his grace and have holier feelings stirred within us than anywhere else.

In the world there are peculiar graces cultivated and demanded. It is true also of the closet and of the family. But in public worship there is demanded and cultivated within us every grace of the Spirit. Faith must be exercised from the first to the last. Hope, aspiration, eager longing, affections, gratitude, humility, trust and praise, all are brought out. Here we gather to love and pray. Here are the Lord's consecrated host who are determined to live and die with Christ. "How delightful to see a whole assembly worship thee." "The Lord loves the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Prepared for Suffering. By Melvin Stuckey

OUR SCRIPTURE

And he called unto him the multitude with his disciples, and said unto them, If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. For whosoever would save his life shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's shall save it. For what doth it profit a man, (if he) to gain the whole world and forfeit his life? For what should a man give in exchange for his life? For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation, the Son of man also shall be ashamed of him, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels. And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, There be some here of them that stand by, which shall in no wise taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God come with power (Mark 8:34-9:1).

And there came near unto him James and John, the sons of Zebedee, saying unto him, Master, we would that thou shouldst do for us whatsoever we shall ask of thee. And he said unto them, What would ye that I should do for you? And they said unto him, Grant unto us that we may sit, one on thy right hand, and one on thy left hand, in thy glory. But Jesus said unto them, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink the cup that I drink? or to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? And they said unto him, We are able. And Jesus said unto them, The cup that I drink ye shall drink; and with the baptism that I am baptized withal shall ye be baptized: but to sit on my right hand or on my left hand is not mine to give; but it is for them for whom it hath been prepared. And when the ten heard it, they began to be moved with indignation concerning James and John. And Jesus called them unto him and said unto them, Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles lord it over them; and their great one's exercise authority over them. But it is not so among you; but whosoever would become great among you, shall be your minister; and whosoever would be first among you, shall be servant of all. For verily, the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many (Mark 10:35-45).

OUR MEDITATION

The strange "death and resurrection" parable that Jesus gives is one of discontent. The disciples could not understand why the new age could not come except Jesus should suffer. Jesus answers plainly. He contends that death must be suffered by all those who wished to consort with him. Not only does he tell this to his inner circle of friends, but also to the Galilean multitudes. How true this is of the Christian life. Is it not a life of suffering; of denying one's self of selfish inclinations? Again, the Master sought to keep the spirit of the new age in the minds of the disciples. He asks not for bodily preservation, but bodily sacrifice as a prerequisite to entering the higher order of immortal life. Must we, then, as Christians, make the same sacrifices as the disciples of old? We cannot follow this principle as it was interpreted in those days but we can serve humanity by a life that has been prepared rightly by trial and training. By serving to the utmost and sparing naught that we have we may fulfill the Master's command. It was hard for the disciples to understand its meaning and harder still to accept. We too find it difficult to practice, but it is clear and plain to us.

As true Christian followers, it is not what we do for ourselves that counts, but what we accomplish for others. In dealing with the disciples regarding this ambition Jesus claimed that the man who is really great in the new age must not be wishing for power to bind the lives of others to his own to serve his own pleasure. He must be "everybody's bond-slave." Being everybody's bond-slave does not mean, of course, doing for them what they ought to do for themselves. Jesus protested against that theory. It means working for the common good and summoning others to do the same.

Every Christian life should be spent in doing that which will make for the welfare and happiness of others. It will not be easy, but it should be the plan of his life as it was the plan of the Master. In many ways he may have to lose himself for the sake of such service, but whatever is demanded, that must be done. Not self but service for others we must be concerned about. No ease but suffering for other's good should be our aim. Seeing society suffering from selfishness, greed and avarice our hearts are pained for their freedom and our suffering does not cease until they have found liberty and life and dwell together in brotherly love.

Finally, preparation for sacrifice and suffering requires endurance. If you had been in the Master's stead, how much of patient endurance would you have shown toward the disciples who misunderstood you and who played selfish politics to get first place? And yet Jesus used these very disciples to begin the Christianizing of the world. They became responsible men and bravely endured the tempests that arose and contended against them. They would not give up, but in season and out of season continued to give to the world the message that would save all men. Soul of mine, are you strong enough to endure hardship? Are you willing to say, "Thy will be done" and act it out in daily life? Just in so far as we are willing to be used in the ranks of helping others will this be accomplished. Just in so far as we endure the storms of jealousy, selfishness, hatred and pride will we be able to sacrifice and serve. O for a goodly portion of that old fashioned endurance that we might be able to leave foot prints on the sands of time.

What a parable of this problem so much our very own, is found in the poem by Edward Gill:

"This I beheld, or dreamed it in a dream:—
There spread a cloud of dust along a plain;
And underneath the cloud, or in it, raged
A furious battle, and men yelled, and swords
Clashed upon swords and shields. A prince's banner
Wavered, then staggered backward, hemmed by foes;
A craven hung along the battle's edge,
And thought, "Had I a sword of keener steel,— Blunt thing! He snapt and flung it from his hand.
That blue blade that the king's son bears—but they
And cowering crept away and left the field.
Then came the king's son, wounded sore bested,
And weaponless, and saw the broken sword,
Hilt buried in the dry and trodden sand,
And ran and snatched it, and with battle-shout
Lifted afresh he hewed his enemy down
And saved a great cause that heroic day."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The New Testament Teaching of the Lord's Supper. By G. W. Rench

That the early church regarded the Lord's supper as an evening meal, and observed in connection with the eucharist, or bread and wine, admits of little doubt. "The original Lord's supper was, as every one knows, a supper—a meal at the close, and not in the middle of the day." ("On the Lord's Day," p. 12). This is the general teaching of all writers on the subject. Why has the love-feast of the early Christians been eliminated, and the eucharist been retained? Brethren people have ever been restrained from changing the Lord's appointments, and therefore observe the communion service just as Jesus instituted it.

Let the Holy Scriptures speak, and then let God have his way. Matthew 26:20: "Now when even was come, he was sitting at meat with the twelve disciples; and as they were eating, he said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me." Again in verse 26: "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and break it." They were eating, were they not, before they came to the bread and wine?

Now read Mark 14:17, 18: "And when it was evening he cometh with the twelve. And as they sat and were eating, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me, even he that eateth with me." Also verse 22: "And as they were eating, he took bread and when he had blessed it, he break it, and gave to them, and said, Take ye: this is my body. And he took a cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave to them; and they all drank of it." Observe that they were eating, and that Judas was eating with the Master previous to the giving of the communion of the bread and wine.

Let us read Luke 22:20: "And the cup in like manner after supper, saying, This cup is the new covenant in my blood, even that which is poured out for you." Now, if the cup in like manner as the bread) came after supper, as Luke says, how could the bread and the cup be the Lord's Supper? But we must look at John 13:24: "And during supper, the devil having already put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him, Jesus, knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he came forth from God, and goeth unto God, riseth from supper, and laying aside his garments; and took a towel, and girded himself." Notice the wording, "And during supper," "he riseth from supper;" all this before the betrayer was revealed, as in verse 26, and before the communion of the bread and wine was reached.

"But this supper Jesus ate that night with his disciples was the Jewish passover," says our critics. A careful reading of the New Testament with due regard to the lawful time for this Jewish feast will utterly disprove such a theory. It is true Jesus talked about this passover (yet 24 hours in the future) while engaged in instituting his own ordinances. But let an honest effort be made to harmonize the many, many scriptures which teach differently, as well as the practice of the early church, and one will soon discover the great mass of contradictions in which he will be involved. An example is John 18:28, and 19:14. No, Brethren people have not carried over into the Christian church a Jewish festival and made it an ordinance of the church. This can not be for at least two reasons.

First, because Jesus while at the table with his disciples, said he would not eat the passover. He broke the news to them for the first time that when the time came for the lamb to be sacrificed, (the following afternoon) he himself would be "the Lamb of God to take away the sins of the world." And consequently, the passover preparations (just beginning) were broken up, and the new program inaugurated. The proof text is Luke 22:15, 16. "And he said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer; for I say unto you I will not eat it until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God." Now, why talk about Jesus eating the Jewish passover at the time he introduces the cup and loaf, when he declares "I will not eat it?" Besides, they were just in the beginning of the preparation day, and the lamb for such a feast was not sacrificed until the following afternoon. While he talked about the passover, and expressed a desire to keep it this year as he had other years, "as he sat at meat" (Matthew 26:20) with them, he explains how he would be "sacrificed" that very afternoon, on the cross.

Secondly, that the early church practiced the observance of the love feast in connection with the eucharist as Jesus instituted it. The church did this while under the management of spirit-filled apostles. It seems a waste of words to state that these apostles knew the will of God concerning the love feast. Again, and again, did they defend the observance of this evening meal together, against the abuses which in a corrupt age so easily crept in the churches. St. Paul takes a half chapter (1 Cor. 11:17ff) in setting the Corinthian church right in the proper observance of the Lord's supper and the eucharist. He warns the greedy of putting to shame the poorer brethren by denying them a place at the love feast. He closes the scene with the significant words, "Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, wait one for another." One of the many commentaries on this chapter has this: "The persecuted church of the early ages felt vividly how sitting side by side at a common meal was an avowal of their unity in the face of heathen neighbors and kindred, and a pledging of themselves to love and fidelity each to the other. The little Christian host, warring in an enemy's country, at the supper table join hands, and go forth again to fight (strengthened as with the bread of life), to stand shoulder to shoulder, back to back, four-square to the assault of the world and sin. The club-feast of the Christian society (Ecce Homo); this, though more." Twenty-six years after the last supper of our Lord, here in a church founded by Paul himself, we find the love feast still observed, and expected by Paul to be observed in the future, though in a more orderly way.

Peter, in writing his epistles to all "that have obtained like precious faith with us," thirty-three years after his experience (John 13) at the last supper of our Lord, recognizes that the love feasts were held among the brethren everywhere (2 Peter 2:13). In the general Epistle of Jude, written about thirty-three years after our Lord ascended to glory, says, "These are they who are hidden rocks in our love feasts when they feast with you, shepherds that without fear feed themselves." How can anyone escape the conviction that the love feast is apostolic? Men may ignore the truth, but to deny what is a plain matter of history and Scripture, is but to class one with the ignorant.

Space forbids but a single historical quotation: "They (the early Christians) met in their own place of assembly or in a private house. There they joined in a common meal which concluded with a solemn partaking of bread and wine, the whole being a commemoration of the last supper of the Lord with his disciples. This meal accompanied with prayer and song, which at a later day received the name of agape or love feast, was the original method of celebrating the Lord's supper. It was one great family gathering about a common table and signifying by this means so natural and familiar in all ages, their union with one another and the absent head of the household."—"Beginnings of Christianity," Fisher, p. 546.

Who gave the councils of men the right to tear out of the church's service this apostolic practice? Of course, no one. Dare we take such liberties with the Holy Scriptures as set forth by Christ and his inspired apostles? There is a great cry in certain quarters that the New Testament church, with its primitive apostolic worship, should be restored to the people. But these "restorers" will have to put back in its New Testament place the love feast which the Lord instituted, and the early church observed, in connection with the cup and loaf, before their cry can be taken seriously. South Bend, Indiana.

The Quiet Hour

Comrades are still being enrolled and letters are coming, asking for cards that these Endeavor societies may reach their goals. There are yet a goodly number who have not made a report to the superintendent of this department.

When you read this notice, it will be less than two months until National Conference. I am sure you want to be enlisted in the service of our King as a "Comrade of the Quiet Hour" before that time.

This question and its answer, among others, appear in the Quiet Hour Catechism which may help somebody to decide: "Can others besides Endeavorers become Comrades of the Quiet Hour?"—"Yes, any one who will, young or old." We hope Endeavorers will get as many other Christians as possible to join them as "Comrades." This is the final call before Conference. Let us make a good report.

E. M. RIDDLE,
Superintendent of Quiet Hour.

Louisville, Ohio.

Christian Endeavor in Cleveland

This does not mean that all the Endeavorers were there. The caption merely purports to say that Ohio's largest city was the center of Christian Endeavor interest and activity over June 24-27. Judged by numbers or enthusiasm the late State Convention broke all records in the history of the society.

The results greatly exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the leaders the Sunrise Union who did themselves proud as a host. They had agreed to register a thousand delegates in Cuyahoga county if the other county unions registered a like number from over the entire state. Imagine their surprise when the proposed number was practically doubled. But those Clevelanders were equal to the occasion and made good their part of the agreement. Consequently there were almost four thousand registered delegates, not to mention a considerable number of visitors.

Din An Inadequate Word

They not only consumed the seating capacity of Grays Armory but filled it with an unusual volume of yells, songs and praise. Preceding the regular evening program a period was allowed for spontaneous expression on the part of the young people, and they gave vent to their boundless energies in a variety of ways. One delegation mounted the platform with an invincible determination to tell the world about their county, but they were quickly joined in a counter effort by the delegates of more than a score of counties. These demonstrative performances astonished one onlooker, ostensibly a reporter, who wrote "Din is the word and it is far from adequate" and marvelled at the young people's ability to settle down to serious business when Rhodeaver asked them to unite in singing the songs of Zion. How eager they were to help him sing "Brighten the Corner;" "If Your Heart Keeps Right;" "The King's Business;" "Coronation." Heaven seemed very near because we were engaged in heavenly activity.

Making the New Earth

But there was no undue indulgence in other-worldliness. Without exception the speakers of large caliber confidently called upon the young people to consider the urgent problems of this world, and they frankly faced these with an attentiveness and seriousness that would do credit to maturer minds. In speaking of the "Makers of Democracy" Dr.

Bustard said the world is in the making—not a solid but a fluid—and it never can be what it ought to be unless Christian young people help to make it such. You have the power of imagination to see the actual world in its ideal state and it is your supreme business to idealize it into the kingdom of God. The inspiring vision provokes thought which issues in action. But the enduring quality of both will be determined by your character resulting from salvation through Christ. This clear-cut message formed a fitting prelude to Daniel Poling's fervent appeal entitled "Democracy's Ultimatum," which he defined as Christ or Anarchy. Unless Christianity functions properly in industry, society and government greater confusion and disaster await us. The Christian state is the sisterhood of nations. As thousands of our comrades died to make the world safe for democracy let us live self-sacrificingly to secure and perpetuate democratic principles.

America for the World

Pushing back the horizons of thought Dr. Stephen Corey, the John R. Mott of the Disciple church, complimented Christian Endeavor by saying this society has furnished four-fifths of the leaders and missionaries of the church during the last ten years. Think of that inestimable contribution to the leadership of Christian forces. And now the new opportunities for world conquest lies largely with the Christian Endeavorers. Scarcely a nation remains inaccessible to the missionary and the leaders of all of them are beseeching us to come with the Christian message without further delay. These sentiments were shared by Dr. J. Campbell White who stressed the world's needs physically, intellectually and religiously. A billion minutes after Christ gave his commission there are a billion people who have not heard the gospel. How shall they hear unless you Christian young people of America volunteer your service? Why not invest your lives where the need is greatest?

Spiritual and Practical

While the whole of the convention was deeply spiritual and intensely practical, special emphasis was given these phases of work in particular sessions. During the Quiet Hour for three successive mornings Dr. Wolfkin challenged the young people with the general question: What is your life? He, of course, spoke of life in Christ. In fact he ventured the definition: Life is correspondence with Christ, the soul's environment. By capitalizing the things of life through a right emphasis we invest each with its true spiritual value. The worthy passion of life is not getting but giving. With a living background of spiritual intensity it was easy for the departmental leaders to conduct inspiring conferences on methods. It was most gratifying to see large numbers of enthusiastic young people assembling in a half dozen different rooms with notebook and pencil, sharing in the conference as diligently as students in the class room. Every phase of Christian Endeavor was considered in these meetings. In addition a large fund of information was supplied through the Missionary and Publicity exhibits. These proved to be eye-openers to the inexperienced.

The Days to Come

Delegates and leaders turned their faces homeward with the inescapable conviction that Christian Endeavor has a bright future in Ohio. No thoughtful person could observe the coming in and going out of high school and college people, engaged in business for the King, without feeling that his eyes had seen the future church—trained and consecrated. Just back of them were more than five thousand Intermediates and back of them a few thousand more of Juniors; both of which conducted creditable conventions. The Board of Trustees authorized a budget of almost six thousand dollars. Ohio has four employed officers besides five voluntary superintendents. In the departure of General Secretary Vandersall who becomes Alumni Superintendent of the United Society we lose a faithful leader but his place will be filled with a competent successor. These heartening assurances, arising in favoring local situations, were strengthened with the optimistic messages of Drs. Clark and Poling whose distinguished presence added greatly to the lasting impressions of the epoch making convention. To have shared in it is to have enlarged faith in the enlarging ministry of Christian Endeavor. It belongs to the church that will use it for the training and enlistment of young people.

OUR PRAYER

Almighty God, our Father in heaven, we are unworthy to be called thy disciples and children. We have chosen idleness instead of light at times when the pathway was certain and sure. Forbid that in times of stress we should forget thy life, love and blessed example. Inspire in us a spirit of loyalty and devotion and a willingness to do thy will whenever that will to us is clear. Help us to sacrifice and serve. May we be users of all our talents in fighting the good fight. Consecrate us anew that we might appreciate thy love in its greater fullness. We ask these blessings in the spirit of Jesus our Lord. Amen.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

THE CALL OF SPOKANE

Happy arrival! "Train two hours late," the conductor said: "Over a year late," the waiting friends of Spokane put it. I had left home, Ridgely, Maryland, at half past eight Wednesday morning, and came by the shortest route, no stop off except to change roads in Baltimore and again in Chicago, and was just in time for the Sunday morning sermon. It was good to come and find the faithful band standing at their post, ready with a western welcome, even though I had sorely tried their patience, by my promised return, so long deferred. Their love and loyalty towards me, makes me feel that I have come back home. My little niece gave the suggestion after I was home a few days when she came in to see her grandmother, and said to me, "When are you going home?" Sister Gochenour assured me that my room had been ready over a year, but it was a fresh bouquet of Spokane roses on the dresser that bore the fragrance of the welcome.

It was a fine surprise to find that the season of the famous cherries was not over. They are almost as large as any on the Pacific Coast, and could not be any firmer. They sell in the local market for twenty-five cents a pound.

The church building was another beautiful surprise. It is fast going on to completion, ready for dedication by August. You would wonder how so small a band could have accomplished so much, if you did not remember that it is a great God they depend upon, and if you did not know the consecrated muscle that has been applied. The men after they come home from their day's work, come up to the house of God and work, often till late at night. It isn't dark till after nine. The women of course are not behind in their part, nor the girls, in their Martha and Mary night, sewing and selling to help to furnish the pulpit. The pastor, Brother Paul Miller, has set the pace and the people gladly volunteered their labor. In this they have saved at least $600 in the lumber deal, $1,000 on brooks, $500 in overseeing, and thus have watched for opportunities as well as prayed.

Of course with so much extra work on hand, certain departments of the church had to suffer, such as the prayer meetings and the Sunday school at the out station, Hollywood. The main Sunday school had entered the Sunday school contest started by the Waterloo people, and it is surprising that they gained as many points as the Waterloo Sunday school—72 points. They are in need of more teachers, and that is one call I would send out to some of the eastern schools, who have had generations of workers. For some of you, the sending of one of the $30 bonds, or even two, will not satisfy your conscience, but you will have to bring yourself.

Just before I sent out the hundreds of letters of appeal for the rest of the $2,500 for the building, came from an unexpected direction, a $50 check; a few days later I was sitting next to Mrs. John Duke McFaden in a union service, in an adjoining town at home, when I remembered she had been in the west long enough to appreciate the need of whole Gospel work in the farther west, and a word was all that was necessary. Next day came the $30 for one of the bonds. She is the widow of the first Brethren minister that ever preached in our home town, and her gift meant much to me. How large a share will you take? It gave me courage to send letters to the ministers, which I had hesitated to do before she of her own accord made that gift. I want to say however, to the ministers who have at this time received the letter, if they can not themselves reach so far as Spokane, I wish they would use their influence in this direction, by calling attention of the congregation to this special effort of the northwest, through the month of July. A number of the Maryland and Virginia Conference ministers have promised to give this tangible encouragement to their younger fellow-minister, Brother Paul Miller. I covet for him your co-operation. The call of Spokane is the call of God.

THE EASTER OFFERING

Quite a few churches (some of them our very strongest) have not yet sent in the report of their Easter offering to the Financial Secretary. In most of these churches, we know the offering was taken, and they are likely waiting for some "pledges" to be paid, which is all right. But, we wish to warn them that at this writing (June 20th) we have waited sixty days, and we consider that long enough. We shall extend the time to July 1st, and will then begin figuring up the offering, and getting ready the report. A summary of the report will be sent to The Brethren Evangelist. But the detailed report will be published only in "The Brethren Missionary." (The subscription is 25c per year). The report will appear in the July issue of "The Missionary."

We are glad to say that the church has "gone over the top" with the largest Easter offering in her history. We are unable to give the figures yet, but it will be a pleasant surprise to all. We are just beginning to know the joy of giving to this work. As a result, two more missionaries, Brother and Sister Clarence Sichel, of Los Angeles, will leave for South America, sailing on "The Vasari" from New York, August 5th. We have sent money to South America for the auto coach, and to pay off all indebtedness on our splendid property in Rio Cuarto, and for some alterations for the same. The missionaries now all have their salaries three months in advance, as those in a far-off foreign land, should have. Likewise, we have sent $1,000 to Africa, as an "Emergency Fund," to be held there for use only in emergencies that might come to our loved ones far away from home on the Master's business.

Really, don't you all feel better now? But, if you want that "good offering" of yours to appear in the regular Easter offering report, better see that it is sent in AT ONCE.

Yours in his service,

LOUIS BAUMAN, Financial Secretary,
1905 East Fifth St. Long Beach, Calif.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

For several weeks I have been too busy to write. Surely the times seem increasingly strenuous. But let us rejoice that our God is able to keep that which we have committed unto him against that day!

Since my last report there have been four accessions by baptism. On Children's day ten others confessed Christ,—most of whom will probably be baptized soon. We are now in the "slump" season, and yet we are glad to say that our attendance is far above the most of the churches in this city according to membership.

On Children's Day the offering of our Sunday school was over sixty-five dollars; more than twenty dollars of this amount was from the primary department.

Our average offering for the Sunday school for the last year has been over fifteen dollars per Sunday. We speak of this, not to boast, but that we might glorify our blessed Savior. Many of the wealthy churches of this city with a membership far above ours do not begin to reach that amount. I praise God that I am permitted to serve a people who actually take pleasure in giving. Yes, most of them really enjoy the grace of giving. Why should it not be so? Yes, it is great and I thus speak of it with the hope that it may lead others to find the same blessed experience. You will pardon me for going yet one step farther; Our Easter offering was three hundred dollars! We made no appeal; we simply presented the opportunity and the need, and then let the Holy Spirit do the rest!

Beloved, honor the Spirit and let him have the right of way in our hearts, and see what will happen! God is still saying, "PROVE ME NOW."

I trust that it may not be misapplied if I mention another thing in this connection: A certain brother living in one of the states, upon hearing of the amount of our Easter offering in this city, said, "If they need a church building so badly, I think they had better try to do more for themselves, and use more of their money at home, etc." Ah, my dear brother, we prefer to follow him who said, "Give, and it shall be given you." My people would rather keep on worshipping God in the same old building, and have the privilege of giving liberally to foreign missions, than to spend it on themselves after the usual manner, and give to the Lord (?) some of the bare leavings!

Listen to me: I tell my people that God will give us our church building and that much sooner! "Nothing is too hard for the Lord!" Let us launch out into the deep! He really wants to do "exceedingly abundantly above" all that we ask or think just as soon as we will give him the chance.

Permit me to take one more step and produce still another statement: If some congregations in our brotherhood which some of us happen to know about, would really make an offering unto the Lord according to their actual financial ability, and in proportion to that represented by the Washington City church, the result would be three thousand easily instead of three hundred! Some may question the wisdom of this statement, (I doubt not) but it now remains for me to question even its correctness, and so I hereby offer my apology by saying, "My estimate was much too low, forgive me."

Concerning the financial strength of the membership in this city, let me say that but very few own their homes and most of these are still more or less in debt on their property, holding the average government position which means that they must exercise economy of the strictest type in order to "make ends meet," if at all.

In closing suffer this further reference to the much-needed building. Yes, we still believe that God will in due season, and in his own way, provide the very building needed. "In due season we shall reap, if we faint not," and we don't feel a bit like fainting.

Get the lesson of Matthew 3:9. If God is able to raise up children unto Abraham out of the stones, if necessary, surely he can, when he pleases, raise up even a house of worship, from among his living stones.

Praise his name, we are leaving it all with him. Jer. 33:3 still holds good. How many are praying definitely and daily for God's blessing on our work in this great city? We still need your prayers, we earnestly covet them. Keep on talking over matters with God in our behalf. Thousands of people have left our city within the last few months, but thousands more are coming, so that the city, together with its suburbs, still remains crowded to overflowing. The housing proposition is still a most serious one. We stand on the "tip-toe of expectation" and wonder what will be next?

W. M. LYON.

NORCATUR, KANSAS Maple Grove Brethren Church

A year has passed since any letter has been in the Evangelist from this place. During this year three have been received into the church; two by baptism, and one who had previously been baptized.

In the Sunday school, for the year ending April 1st, the average attendance was ten more than the year previous. This is by no means what it should have been, yet we must consider the difficult winter. Our expectations for this year are greater. During the quarter, which closed last Sunday, the attendance each Sunday was more than the Sunday preceding. Our Home Department so earnestly and efficiently supervised by Mrs. E. O. Nedrow is steadily growing. I find that the Home Department work is creating an interest in the Sunday school among friends and relatives of some Home Department members. Many of these expect to enroll as regular members soon.

May 26th, Brother Roy Brumbaugh, of Portis, came to help in a revival meeting. He was with us eighteen days. During that time we were rained out for eight services. The meetings lasted over two Sundays, but we were rained out for every Sunday service except one, the last Sunday morning. During the entire meeting the last four services were the only consecutive four held. Interest among the unsaved was startling, souls were getting near to the kingdom when Brumbaugh had to leave us. Every sermon was strong, well prepared and ably delivered. Every day that weather and roads permitted, Brumbaugh and the pastor were calling in homes of the community.

One great purpose of the meetings was accomplished. For over thirty years jealousy has existed between the churches of the community. This was a detriment to the churches, a stumbling block to non-Christians, and a hindrance to the growth of the kingdom of God. As the powerful sermons dealing with consistent living and applied to Christian activities were preached, one after the other, the octopus of inconsistency was seen in its true light. This was a great victory. God help that the work may continue. The meetings closed with communion service.

Sunday, June 15th, I went to assist the Beaver City Brethren with the communion.

I preached at the morning hour and the communion services were held in the evening. This church has been pastorless for several months. I hope they will be supplied soon with a true shepherd. There is a fine membership hungry for the gospel, a new modern church building and a parsonage, surely some one can be found to answer the call to feed the flock.

Easter, I took charge of a work at DeVizes, Kansas, in connection with the work at Maple Grove. Monday, June 16th, I began a two weeks' meeting there which resulted in increased interest throughout the community, and one soul reclaimed, a man whose wife also awaits baptism. DeVizes is just a postoffice and school house, ten miles from our church at Maple Grove. Sunday school and preaching services are held every Sunday afternoon in the school house. Then for evening services some of the people come to the church.

The Mission Boards are very kindly helping to support the work at Maple Grove this year. So the entire brotherhood has an interest in the work here. May we have an interest in your prayers also.

J. G. DODDS.

BRETHREN DOWNS AT SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

Instead of just observing one day as Brethren Day, we spent four Sunday evenings in June for that purpose. The themes treated were, "Why I Am a Member of the Brethren Church," "Trine Immersion,—Scriptural and Apostolic Baptism," "The Three Fold Communion,—Why Observe," "Things Seldom Preached." In addition to these, we set aside one week night for Christian sociability; 250 were present on the parsonage lawn. A musical program was rendered and refreshments (brought freely by those present) were served. This is the only kind of a social permitted here; none for raising money.

We are painting the floor of the main auditorium and putting down new aisle carpets. The parsonage is being refinished within. A movement is well on its way to permanently furnish the parsonage. Some pieces have already been secured. This will be an advance in the right direction. The parsonage is just about all paid for now and when furnished will be an inviting home.

At the regular business session, the present pastor was called for another year with a substantial increase in salary. We will be in Long Beach in July for the Bible Conference, delivering six prophetic lectures. Then in August we will have the same responsibility at a Bible Conference at Spokane, preceding the dedication of the church. Then we shall plunge into the work here for the third year. The way is not yet open for us to attend the General Conference.

The Lord is manifesting his matchless love and care for us amid many tests. He has become increasingly precious to us since our little one departed to Paradise. He has seen us safely through a quarantine for smallpox, during which four of the family were afflicted. We are learning the secret of those wonderful words, "All things work together for good to them who love the Lord."

CHARLES H. ASHMAN.

A WINONA BAND IN EVERY CHURCH

Plan Now To Send a Crowd To Winona Lake, Indiana, September 1-7

THE GREATEST GENERAL CONFERENCE YET!

The Bi-Centennial of the Brethren Church in America

FROM ASHLAND, OHIO

The Ashland Brethren church has had no report in the Evangelist for some time but this does not mean that there has been a lack of interest or that we have fallen into inactivity. Since last October, Prof. J. A. Garber has been serving this church as its pastor. In spite of many other duties including his college work he has rendered acceptable service both in the pulpit and in the pastoral relations among the people.

Since his pastorate began we have received into the fellowship of the church 3 by letter, 2 by relation and 18 by baptism, making a total of 23. This we think a very creditable showing.

At our spring communion, we had one of the best services this church ever held. Other special services might be mentioned. Our Easter service was of special interest. The offering was over $300 for foreign missions. On Easter Sunday a vesper service was held and a fine and uplifting one it proved to all. The music was under the direction of Miss Amy Puterbaugh, Director of Voice in the College. The renditions were of a high order and splendidly executed. And that reminds me that the music at the services during the whole college year under the direction of Miss Puterbaugh was most excellent.

In Christian Endeavor work the year also showed splendid results and the meetings were well attended and of a fine spiritual tone.

Our Sunday school is under the superintendence of Prof. A. C. Hendrickson. During the contest with Waterloo and other schools, ours increased fifty members. Our total enrollment is, at the end of the school year, 197. This includes the Home Department and the Cradle Roll of 41 members. Our average attendance for the past year was 109. Our total offerings were $433 of which amount the school gave $260 for missions. We are quite encouraged over the prospects for our school.

If the Ashland church only had a suitable church building we believe our future would be very hopeful. We have a fine lot purchased and we hope by 1920 to be able to build. Pray for the work here.

J. ALLEN MILLER.

MARYLAND-VIRGINIA

Stop!—Look!—Listen!

To the pastors and workers of the Maryland-Virginia district. This is to call your attention to the July report on the work of the Four Year Program. This is the second and final report for this year. If you reported in January, now is the time to check up the Goals gained since that time and make your second and last report for the year.

If you did not report in January, now is the time to save the day by checking up your standing and report. There is a card awaiting your attention in the back part of your Hand Book for this report. If you have misplaced your Hand Book, or failed to receive one, drop me a card and you will receive one by return mail.

A report from every church and mission, before the end of July will do credit to our district.

Please do not pass this by, a little bit of time will be sufficient to check up the goals, and a ONE CENT stamp will bring the card (the first of July the old postage rate is in effect).

For the sake of our common cause both in Christ and our beloved church, please do not fail to send in these reports.

May God richly bless and use us all.

Fraternally and sincerely yours,

L. G. WOOD, District Director.

1118 Gilmer Ave., N. W. Roanoke, Va.

NAMPA, IDAHO

Sunday, June 22nd, the members of the Nampa church and some of the friends met with the family of Brother C. A. Williams in our regular monthly service, having no house of worship except the beautiful shady lawns. Here we spent the day in worship consisting of speeches, prayer and song service after which the well filled baskets were brought forth and their contents partaken of. While these meetings may seem small to some, it means much to our spiritual growth, as well as binding us more closely together in brotherly love, as our membership extends over so large a territory it requires some effort to attend those meetings. While there were only thirty-five at our last meeting, it required the traveling of one thousand two hundred and eighty-eight miles to and from the services, but we feel well paid for the effort put forth. Frontier work is quite different from that in the old established churches.

J. C. NEHER, Pastor.

The Brethren will notice with special interest the splendid amount received from Lake Odessa, Michigan, $65.00, where nothing was reported as having been given last year. Pittsburgh comes to the front this year with an increase of $25.00 over last year which is very fine and altogether worthy of special mention.

Two churches in California have made a very good report namely, Whittier and La Verne, neither one making reports last year. Come on, California, that's fine. Some of the smaller churches in good old Pennsylvania, notably Summit Mills, have established a record which the larger churches would do well to look up to, which speaks well for the Brethren of Summit Mills.

This is the last report that will be published before National Conference. The amount received up to date is nearly $1500.00. Let those churches that have not yet met their obligation to those who are dependent on this fund, do so at the earliest possible opportunity that we may be able to make a report at Conference that includes all the congregations of the Brethren church.

Fraternally yours,

H. E. ROSCOE,

National Secretary Board of Benevolences.

THE PASTOR'S ANNUAL REPORT AND MESSAGE

(NOTE: A few days ago, it was my privilege to be in the home of Brother E. M. Cobb, of Dayton, Ohio, pastor of the First Brethren Church of that city. While there, he handed me the Annual Report that he read to his church at its annual business meeting the first of the year. I at once felt like I was reading a sort of a Pauline epistle that was meant, not for one church alone, but for all the churches. I said, "This must not die here. I want to send it forth for my own church away out in Long Beach, California, to read and heed. I believe it would be well that it should be read in ALL the churches." So, I asked Brother Cobb for permission to offer it to the Brethren Evangelist for publication, which permission he kindly granted me. I therefore am responsible for its appearance, with the kind permission of the editor, here.—Louis S. Bauman.)

1. The Report

Address:

Unto the First Brethren church, which is at Dayton, Ohio, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, also all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord...

Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ:

1. Retrospect.

A glance at my daily calendar since I am among you as pastor, reveals an almost unbelievable record of funerals, visits to the bedside of the sick, anointings, miles upon miles driven in locating the outlying membership, beside the regular pulpit work and the other teaching; one is made to wonder how and when it was ever done, and I am frank to acknowledge that this ministry just enumerated, is made possible by the untiring and unreserved efforts and sacrifice of my yoke-fellow, Elder W. C. Teeter, and others who so ably and nobly assisted in ministering to the sick and bereaved.

Then, too, when it is borne in mind, that the world has been drenched in her own blood; and famine has stalked about upon the face of the earth, and the great black plague has claimed her millions; and the great organized rum traffic, has, of late, redoubled her efforts to defeat the cause of civic righteousness; and with gross false teachings, both in and out of the church, and of every kind and character—after having passed through all this—is it not after all, almost a miracle of grace that we are an organization at all? Retrospective considerations are enough to stagger one. Yet out of it all comes the assurance that the Lord knew all things from the beginning; and he wrote this history in advance.

2. Introspect.

But the heartaches, caused by the conditions from without, are not to be compared with those which are caused by the lethargy, apathy, and the listlessness of those who are numbered with the saints upon the books of the church. It is almost beyond belief (really, one has to meet up with the actual conditions) that a child of the living God can dwell in the land of the free, with common privileges, in proximity of a place of worship, among hundreds of like faith, and yet absent themselves from the services of the house of the Lord, but rather feed upon the offscourings from the devil's table, and mingle with the children of disobedience. Yet we know that Christ died for the ungodly, but, oh how sad to see a precious soul for whom he died, to be enslaved in that sort of a disreputable body; and I strongly recommend to the deacon body that a canvass be made of the roster of this church, and expunge, after carefully visiting or writing such members in question, from the membership list, in order to preserve the morale and Christian standard of the brotherhood. It is true that some do not admire this sort of discipline; neither do I; yet, the good husbandman trims the dead branches from the orchard trees that they may bear more and better fruit; the best physicians amputate infected limbs in order to protect the health of the rest of the body, and so it is with the body of Christ. Some claim fear of destroying, in this manner, one of Christ's own; but this is a false fear, for should he be a real member of the invisible body, he will like Peter, return; but if he has never really belonged to the invisible church, like Judas, he will automatically go out and commit suicide.

Another lamentable condition is that not a few of our members seem to have a very low standard of Christian ethics. Rumor has it that even some attend the dance, some the saloon, while others have some very filthy habits; in such cases it is apparent that the moral judgment has so allowed the conscience to become seared as with a hot iron, until it does not longer reprove them for improper conduct. Such an one is no credit to the organization, and is not idly jeopardizing their own souls, but the souls of others as well; hence it is at once patent, that in all such cases the standard of Christian ethics is entirely too low, and the sad part of it is, that this sort of life not only does not help one to become better, but continually lowers one until the only escape from it is an entire re consecration.

3. Prospect.

It should be borne in mind, however, that there is always the "salt of the earth,"—those clean-cut, straight, fair, loyal, spiritual members who are always at their posts, rain or shine, to worship God, or serve their fellowmen. These are the "Restraining power" spoken of in the Word of God, and remember, Brethren, that one of these days when that class is taken away by the great exalted Christ who is to come for his saints, then, oh then, will come that terrible vengeance of our God.

What a consolation it is that the great commission asks us to evangelize the world instead of reform it. These churches and their pastors who have undertaken to make the world ready for the Millennium are not only, either wittingly or ignorantly trying to cheat the Lord out of his job for it is he "whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved;" but they as well miss their own calling, for it is the function of the real church to call out the Bride of Christ, who is to rule and reign with him one thousand years. And so I want to thank the faithful ones, of the First Brethren church of Dayton, and especially the heads of the various departments, who have continually had in mind the betterment and spiritual training of the flock of God, and to evangelize the ungodly.

While the child of God is naturally vitally interested in the general reform movements and the general betterment of mankind, yet he does not necessarily need to be a politician or propagandist. He will much more speedily reform the world by sticking to the job that God gave him—that of saving sinners. And so it shall be my ministry while I am yet with you to feed the flock of God. It may be that I will be compelled to run a little side line in the way of a crutch factory for the sole purpose of making crutches for cripples; and we may have to have a sanitarium for soreheads, and a hospital for those who are wounded in life's great battle, but my chief work among you by the grace of God shall be to lead you into the green pastures of God's word and by the still waters of his everlasting peace. I heartily thank you for the support, material and spiritual wife and I have received from you as tokens of love and esteem for your chief servants in the service of the master.

2. Message

Introduction.

It may not be known to all that the great work of the Christian ministry naturally falls into three great separate and distinct divisions. To fail in any one of these chief characteristics of the work, is to very greatly impair the other two branches; hence how very important it is to safeguard all three divisions. These branches are poimenics, or shepherdizing; liturgics, or public worship; and archagics, or the general management of the church.

1. Poimenics.

No minister can be a real shepherd of a flock, unless he feels a deep responsibility for their care and keeping. He should direct and lead them to good pastures, where they can get wholesome food, and at the same time, protect them from thieves who would steal them, and from the evil one, who is always lurking about to utterly destroy them. As a good mother protects the health of her child, so I deem it necessary that the pastor not only properly feeds the flock, but likewise sees to it that they do not get improper food to impair their spiritual digestive apparatus. In this connection, allow me to say that it shall be my purpose to preach solid, fundamental doctrinal sermons on Sunday mornings for the perfecting of the saints, and in the evening sermons to evangelize the unconverted, and so rightly to divide the Word of Truth to saint and sinner alike. My programs which are printed and distributed among you will show the course of study of our little private Bible Institute; it is the intention to so conduct these courses of study that each member may find help in his study of the Holy Scriptures. There will be none of this "twentieth century gospel, "social gospel," or "theology of the reconstruction;" on the contrary, I shall teach you the same salvation, same sins of men, same cross of Calvary, same heaven, same hell that was taught by our Lord when he was here on the earth in person. His gospel is good enough for you and me.

Further, it is my purpose to know you personally, and make personal friends of every one of you as far as it is possible without the sacrifice of any principle, because our interests are common, and when we pray together and work together, we will soon be bound together in the bonds of Christian love. It has been a rule of my life to know my people by name and as far as possible partake of their lives and environment to the extent of helping them in their struggles in life.

Perhaps the most difficult thing in the life of a minister is the discipline he is expected to maintain. Some people seem to fail to realize that he is held responsible for the conduct of the church and that the conduct of the church is made up of the conduct of the individual members, and they insist on personal liberty, and want to be allowed to run loose like they allow their children to do. A minister cannot be a true friend to his people, and not point out to them their faults and short-comings as well as their virtues, and show them a better way. In this connection I want to mention, that I would appreciate a more respectful attitude to God's house than is sometimes shown; especially it is uncalled for to allow children to tear and mark books, and run through the church building and for members to collect and visit in the vestibule of the church before and during services. I am confident I shall have the support of a very large majority of the membership in the maintenance of discipline in the work of the church.

2. Liturgics.

Public worship has grown to be no small factor in the work of the church; and the minister is, as a matter of course, held largely responsible for the conduct of that worship, although the preaching itself is the only thing he is called upon to do alone. When it comes to song, prayer, testimony, giving, etc., the membership is expected to assist to the extent of their several ability; but, here again arises various and sundry minor difficulties, because we do not all realize that we are still all men and women and not angels, nor will we ever be; but that we have different gifts and different degrees of the several gifts, and we are so apt to measure ourselves by each other, forgetting that so long as we are here, we are open to the criticism of imperfection. Paul says, "But they measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves are not wise." When the Lord has given one gift, remember that it was his intention that it should be used to his honor and glory. If we could discern the Lord's body and remember that some of us are feet and some hands, and some ears, we might appreciate the fact that each has his own work and should be more interested in that than the work of another. Again, as a recommendation, as soon as it can be arranged, I should like to see a good music director employed whose duty it shall be to drill and lead the singers; however, such an one should be a loyal member of the church and in sympathy with her work. We have a lot of musical talent here that should be cultivated and used to magnify the Lord Jesus. I thank the music committee for the special music rendered from time to time at my request. I am glad to report that by mutual agreement, the pastor is to lecture each Monday evening at the Rescue Mission, in reciprocity for which Brother Peter Quartel will sing for us on Sunday mornings, whose wonderful ministry of song will inspire our singers, as well as the other worshippers, and be the means of saving sinners.

The most vital appointment, perhaps, on the liturgical calendar is the celebration of the sufferings of our Lord; and I think I do not recall a single love feast which I enjoyed more than the last one with you; so very worshipful was the spirit among us in the presence of the empty chair at the head of the table, that during the entire evening there was scarcely a whisper to be heard. May you ever discern the body of the Lord, as you are seated around the mangled form of your unseen guest at the Eucharist, which is the great suspension bridge across the terrific whirlpool rapids of sin, from the blood-stained summit of Calvary, to the glory-crowned summit of Olivet, where we shall be seated with the King when he shall gird himself and serve us.

I note with pleasure, that many more of the members remain after the regular services, on Sunday evenings, to witness the baptismal ceremony. It makes me feel that you are interested in the salvation of souls, and it is a warm welcome to the new convert which he appreciates.

Although we were disappointed in the absence of Brother Stout, and the brevity of Brother Baumann's stay with us, yet good seed was sown, and since then we have been having a continuous revival, which is as it should be. I hope we may have another effort in the spring. Let it be understood henceforth, that each of you will be looked upon as a traveling representative of this firm, and I want you to say a word each day to some one you meet, and encourage him to attend our public services, that he may come under the sound of the gospel, and let the Holy Spirit have an opportunity to operate upon his soul.

3. Archagelos.

The general management of the business end of the church is no small matter. To know just how much to organize, without getting so much machinery as to require all the power of the dynamo to propel the machinery alone, is the work of an expert. First in importance, perhaps, is a clean, live, spiritual corps of deacons as the pastors' aid-camp in the supervision of things spiritual, then as the pastor's cabinet, or advisory board, there should be added to the deacon body, all the officers, elders, and heads of the auxiliary departments, for the supervision of the wider functions of the church; and I thank God for such an efficient body of godly men and women as are responsible for the conduct of this church, and I think when you hear the reports of the committees and officers, you will be gratified at the commendable progress we have been able to make in spite of the existing conditions. Although we still have a few members who do not tithe nor give regularly, yet we have passed the ten thousand mark this year by more than two hundred dollars, praise God.

The auxiliaries—the Sunday school, the Christian Endeavor, and the Sister's Society of Christian Endeavor, and the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha, have, under their respective leaderships, been doing very commendable work. These various auxiliaries furnish the cantonment training for the efficient work of the army of the Lord in the great battle of life; and I pray that we may appreciate these captains and sergeants who have burned the midnight oil pouring over the problems of their departments; that we may stand together as a solid unit in this great work; that the organized classes may continue to boost and push; the teachers, teach good stuff; that the board keep up their fight against our great debt, and make another mighty stride in the spring, as the end is now in sight; that the sisters continue their commendable labors, as well as the younger women. I cannot pass without praising the ladies for starting the decorating fund which I think should be encouraged very materially, a move for which I should like to see made at this meeting. The weekly calendar, our little welcome messenger, is possible by the kindness of J. C. McBride; and there is Brother Ed Smith and his corps of ushers who make the public services a real pleasure by their cheerful and skillful services.

Before I conclude, may I say to my deaconesses that I do not think you receive the recognition you deserve, and henceforth I desire that you are each to consider yourselves a sort of district superintendent, in the neighborhood where you live, and that you keep a strict vigilance for those who need help, either in material or spiritual things, and report the same to me at your earliest opportunity.

Finally, brethren, let us thank God and take courage for the accomplishments of 1918, and "press toward the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all.

Yours in the hope of Eternal Glory,
E. M. COBB, Pastor.

Counsel from Kipling

If you can keep your head when those about you
Are losing theirs and blaming it on you;
If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you,
But make allowance for their doubting too;
If you can wait and not be tired by waiting,
Or being lied about don't deal by waiting,
Or being hated don't give way to hating,
And yet don't look too good or talk too wise;
If you can dream and not make dreams your master;
If you can think and not make thoughts your aim;
If you can meet with triumph and disaster
And treat those two imposters just the same;
If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken
Twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools,
Or watch the things you gave your life to,
And stoop and build them up with worn-out tools;
If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with kings, nor lose the common touch;
If neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you;
If all men count with you but none too much;
If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With sixty seconds' worth of distance run,
Yours is the earth, and everything that's in it,
And—which is more—you'll be a man, my son!

The Old Order Versus the New

The old order dies hard, but it must die and give place to the new, for it is a fight to the death. The old order is one of selfishness, personal advantage and narrowness of vision. It lives in the atmosphere of self-aggrandizement and over-reaching. It thrives on the misfortune, weakness and inability of others. Nation or individual, the principle is the same and is diametrically opposed to the new order instituted by Jesus. He minced no words in consigning the old order in all its varied relations and implications to the scrap-heap. It is condemned by all his wonderful teachings and by the spirit and conduct of his more wonderful life. "Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time. . . but I say unto you," and then he would go on and fill it in. And how lofty were the ideals which he attached to the "I say unto you!" Some said, "Who can hear them?" Others said, "Never man spake like this man." But men heard him and have been hearing him through the centuries because he spake "with authority," as no other man spake. He uttered some radically different teachings from those the Pharisees had been wont to repeat, but the common (or masses) people heard him gladly and grew to love his teachings. Perhaps the most revolutionizing utterance he ever made was to the effect that he that would save his life should lose it and he that should lose his life for his sake and the gospel's would find it, yet the people heard and are hearing it, though slowly yet increasingly. It was the theme of the new order that he came to introduce. He further clarified this principle by saying, "Bear ye one another's burdens;" "Ye that are strong ought to bear the burdens of the weak;" "He that would be greatest, let him become the servant of all." And the motto of his own blessed life was "Not to be ministered unto but to minister," and very definitely stated his life purpose as, "I am among you as he that serveth." Then he said to his disciples "Ye shall be witnesses of me;" "Behold I go before you;" the servant is not above his Lord;" "as the Father hath sent me, even so send I you." "Go ye therefore and disciple the nations." All this he said to make clear to them the character of the new order and to emphasize the importance of its inauguration and propagation. It was not a small exclusive society that was to be characterized by such principles, but the "nations" and the "world." And because of the increasing spread of this heaven there was to spring up a new world wherein dwelleth righteousness. Old things were to pass away, and behold all things were to become new.

This new world order was immediately recognized to be in mortal conflict with the old world order of selfishness and personal and national advantage. That conflict has waged fiercely until the present day. And now there is unmistakable evidence that the most obstinate and bitter enemy of Christ and his new growing world order is the spirit of selfishness and self-seeking. The two cannot long dwell together in the same heart or nation. One must drive the other out. And because God is, we have no doubt about the outcome.

Even now the sky is brightening with the light of the coming day. Never were there such glowing prospects of the universal rule of the new order. Never before was there such boldness exercised in presenting the ideals of unselfishness as the governing principles of nations as well as individuals. Never before were national barriers so nearly broken down when men could think in terms of world interests as impartially as now. We are vitally concerned about world peace now, and not merely American peace. We are planning and working for world prosperity, world righteousness and a world brotherhood as never before. Our vision and interests are broadening to such extent that we stand as citizens not only of America, but of the world.

And yet in the face of this growing popularity of the principles of Christ, there are men high in positions of trust who speak cynically of one who is championing this new order, thus, "He is going to preach national unselfishness. The people are going to ask why the day of national advantage has come to an end." It is not to be expected that every man in high station will have the larger vision nor possess the larger spirit. It is unavoidable that small men get in large places occasionally and fail to be true leaders and representatives of the people. Not all men who have position in our commonwealth have interest in the enthronement of Christ and the adoption of his ideals by the people. But how shrewd men could so far misjudge the standards and desires of the masses as to insinuate that they are primarily concerned about national advantage and selfishness as against national unselfishness is difficult to understand. The popular tone and spirit will likely be found to be in advance of the occasional reactionaries or political manipulators. The new order with its new spirit of unselfishness and service is bound to win because it has higher than human sanction and favor. The new order will gain the ascendancy. The big question is whether it will win with us or against us.

The Gospel Wagon

Some years ago a preacher had the following dream and from what we are able to learn, it seems that the dream had been actually realized in various churches.

The pastor dreamed that the church was a stage-coach at the foot of a hill, up which, in the absence of horse power, it fell his lot to drag it.

Some of his officers and members bade him be of good cheer, for they would help him. He should guide the tongue; some of them would turn the wheels, others would push; and so, together, they would get it up hill.

For a while the coach moved slowly, but surely, up the hill. After a time however, its weight seemed to increase, till the pastor, bringing the coach to a stand on the first ridge, and turning the tongue to prevent it from running back down the hill, went around the coach to see what was the matter. All the helpers had become tired. No one was turning the wheels and no one was pushing. All had jumped in the coach and were riding.

The pastor cannot drag the coach up the hill all alone. Of course, he must be on the job to guide the tongue, or it will not go at all. But work as hard as he may, he cannot make it go, if he is the only one on the job. Everybody should be doing his part to get the gospel wagon up the long hill of worldly opposition. If all will take hold, the heaviest coach can be moved up the roughest hill. Pastors have been encouraged to attempt great things and then have been left to do the task themselves when half way up hill. Every member should be at his post of duty all the time with all his power. The Four Year Program is a big job, too big for the pastors to carry out alone. In every church the pastor must have the help of the members, or he will fall down on the job. The time of the year is come when there will be inclination to loaf on the job, to leave some one else do the work. Let this not be done in any Brethren church. Let us all be at it all the time with all our might. We want no shirkers, but everybody workers. It is staying power that tells.

"Perseverance will win,
Its average is sure;
He wins the most,
Who can most endure."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

In behalf of our operator, permit me to say that when writing for publication, if you use a typewriter, it will be for his convenience in following the lines if you will write double space and not single.

We learn that the Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, Brethren had their largest communion at their recent service in the history of that work. There were 111 members at the tables, so Brother Witter reports.

Brother Garber reports a goodly number of Teacher Training graduates in this issue. Now is the time to begin to plan for the fall class. Read what Professor Garber says about it.

"Spokane," "Muncie," "Peru," "Huntington," these are the mission stations mentioned in Brother Carpenter's "Notes on the Mission Page this week. You will want to know what he says about them.

We have a splendid report from the Long Beach, California, Junior society from the hands of Sister Wall, the superintendent. Her Juniors are certainly being "thoroughly furnished unto all good works" by having the Scripture planted in their young minds where it will spring up and bear fruit many fold in the years to come.

The Welsh evangelist, Brother Thomas, favors us with an interesting report of his evangelistic labors for several months. He has been very successful, and is now serving the Ardmore, Indiana, and Glendora, Michigan, churches as pastor. His address for the summer will be Winona Lake, Indiana.

Brother S. E. Christiansen, pastor of the Columbus mission, reports that the work is growing and becoming more stable. The prayer meetings are especially well attended and the young people seem to be the pastor's most loyal supporters. Brother Christiansen has had his discouragements and misfortunes which make the work difficult, but he is optimistic nevertheless.

Do not fail to read Dr. Jacob's "College Notes." You will be delighted with the attendance at the Summer School. Prospective and former students who are expecting to return this fall will receive gladly the news of the remodeling and modernizing of the college building. Note also that Grant street is to be paved; maybe some one will want to help defray the college's share of the payment. Just a hint to the liberal who are able. Don't forget the college enrollment is to be doubled and the seminary enrollment is to be fifty,—that's the goal. It can be done with the help of all who ought to help.

Ripon, California, reports interestingly through the pastor, Brother Leatherman. They have experienced the blessings of refreshing because of the revival that Brother Kimmell conducted there. Under the efficient leadership of Brother Leatherman the church is being more thoroughly organized and is beginning to show more life.

Brother J. C. Beal, pastor of the Compton Avenue church of Los Angeles, gives a splendid report in this issue. Every line of church work is vigorous and growing. The prayer meeting attendance is very commendable. Christian Endeavor work is at an exceptionally high stage. The Juniors carried away the honors from the State Christian Endeavor convention held at Long Beach. More additions to the church are reported.

You will not want to miss the report of Brother Cook from Krypton. He tells of the giving quality of the Krypton Brethren, and it is certainly refreshing to learn that they have been taught so well concerning this fundamental Christian grace. Besides giving of their money to support the work, they are making frequent gifts of love to their pastor. Brother Cook has certainly won his way into the hearts of those people and has done a noble work among them.

The editor received a little box of fine large cherries from Spokane, picked from trees in the Gochenour orchard. Sister Vianna Detwiler arrived in Spokane just in time to enjoy the ripe cherries, and we are indebted to her for the sample of large luscious fruit which we enjoyed and shared with our co-workers at the Publishing House. There were two kinds among those we received, "Bing" and "Royal Ann," black and red respectively. They were about as large as the "Blue Damsen" plum. Thank you, Sister Detwiler and the Gochenours, we appreciate this little act of kindness and thoughtfulness to your servants.

It is not likely that there will be any further desire to prolong the discussion that has been carried on for several weeks, so far as personalities and direct replies are concerned, and so it will be brought to a close. Since it is our policy to be as fair as we know how, and entirely impartial, we must reserve for the brother whose article was attacked the privilege of a reply of the proper sort, if he desires such. Otherwise the discussion will close with this issue. We do not wish to be understood to be closing discussion on the importance of both the personal and the social phases of Christ's teachings. Articles along such lines will be both welcome and profitable to our large family of readers, if the personalities and the controversial spirit are omitted. This statement is made out of deference to requests from a number of our readers, and upon the recommendation of the editorial committee.

The good work still goes on; Beachler is still at it and the people are still giving of their money for the endowment of Ashland College. Milledgeville, Illinois, is the church reported in this week's notes, and that church need not be ashamed of the record it made. Those people are alive to the interests of our only church school. And who would expect anything else, with a live pastor such as Brother Snyder is to lead them. One of the most promising things about the entire endowment campaign thus far is the universal enthusiastic co-operation of the pastors. All believe in Ashland College, and from the contagion of their loyalty the spirit of loyalty is spreading and permeating the entire membership. With Ashland's loyal sons and daughters being scattered throughout the brotherhood and imparting to their friends a measure of their own love and loyalty to "dear old Ashland," who will doubt that the needs of this most vital part of the church's means of growth shall receive the support that is needful for its efficient service. President Jacob's article will give you an idea of the magnitude and importance of Ashland's needs. Keep these things in mind when making your pledge or gift to the college. By the way, don't forget to notice our new thermometer. It will take $200,000 to put the mercury at the top of this one. But we must not stop till it reaches the top. The elevator man says, "Going up" and Brother Beachler says the same thing regarding the Endowment Fund, "Going up." Watch your chance to get on.

A Man's Minimum Money Obligation to God. By G. C. Carpenter

The Debt

No man can give to God, for God is the owner of all and he needs nothing. The Christian has made a partnership covenant with God but many do not keep their part of the covenant.

It is not reasonable to say that the omniscient God would establish the church on the earth with a great and expensive mission and not make provision for financing the mission. God's plan is the tithe as man's minimum money obligation to him. Whoever pays less is not out of debt to God. If one tenth of man's increase was the extent of his obligation to his grocer then to pay the grocer less than that amount would leave part of the obligation unsatisfied.

The Robber

Will a man rob a grocer? Many men are guilty. What does the grocer do? He places him on the black list and grants him no favors. "Will a man rob God?" the prophet asks. The answer is that many have robbed him. How? "In tithes and offerings." Will God's professed followers rob him today? The universal answer must be, Yes, many have robbed God and are robbing him every day by failing to meet their minimum money obligation described in the partnership covenant. And in robbing God man robs himself the more because he makes it impossible for God to keep his part of the covenant. That may explain why a prominent evangelist recently began a large revival campaign by preaching his first sermon on the subject of tithing.

The Loss and Gain

The loss falls upon the individual first. God promises him if he will be honest with him "a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." God challenges man to prove and test him and see if he will not keep his word, and not one has ever been disappointed. The blessing is both material and spiritual. The two go together, the open purse and the open heart. The church member lacking either lacks both. There may be exceptions but this rule holds.

The loss falls also upon the church. The power and influence of the church is the sum total of the power and influence of her members. If any member robs God he robs himself first and then the church of which he is a part. Thrice fortunate is the church that has a goodly number of tithers. Where is the pastor who would hesitate in choosing between two churches of the same membership, if one was made up entirely of tithers and the other had none at all? If church members would make the tithe the minimum of their money obligation to God then the pastor would not need to serve tables. He would be left free to devote his time and energy to meeting the real mission of the church and the same would be true of the lay members of the church. And no one can measure except by actual test the spiritual power that an all-tithers church would generate.

The loss falls in the third place upon the whole community and finally upon the entire parish of the church, which is the whole wide world. The treasuries of the mission boards would be filled to overflowing and the increased spirituality would mean a full supply of consecrated mission workers and every reader can take these two factors and solve quickly the problem of the evangelization of the world.

The Challenge

God invites man to prove him. Will the members of the Brethren church make the test? Will the Brethren ministers themselves prove the Lord of Hosts and then out of personal experience invite their churches to the last man to try God and "see if he will not open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it?" May the Brethren church, pastors and members be honest with God.

"Need of Christian Charity Among the Brethren." By Roy Brumbaugh

A noted writer has termed love as the greatest thing in the world. Why cannot we go all the way and say that Christian charity is the greatest thing in two worlds or all worlds, for that matter? And if this love is the greatest thing in the world it is the most needed thing in the world. The need of Christian charity among the Brethren at Corinth was what inspired Paul to write the matchless love chapter of the Bible, the thirteenth of First Corinthians. Let us all pray that this need today will help us brethren to live in the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. We must admit with regret that this Christian love is greatly needed today.

Jesus said, "By this shall all men know that you are my disciples if you have love one for another." But I am afraid today all men do not know us as such. Again, we are told to "Love thy neighbor as thyself," but this was not strong enough, and Jesus said, "A new commandment I give unto you that you love one another, as I have loved you." Need I tell you that the love of Jesus for his own was and is devoted, enduring and constant—can your love be placed in the balances with his; remember he said, "Love as I have loved you."

I think this Christian charity is lacking in the church today because men are wrapped and steeped in the greed for gain. I do not believe men as a whole were ever as selfish as they are today. The motto of too many seems to be "Let me get what I can and can what I get at whatever cost to manhood, principle, honesty, respectability, and let the rest of the world live in tattered rags and go to hell." The world is still passing by on the other side of the road. It is not only our business to care for the wounded, distressed and the dying but it is our business through Christian charity to get the robbers off the highway and so far as possible remove the temptations from the pathway of men. Do not tell me so called Christian people believe Jesus meant what he said when he said or meant to convey the idea that one soul was worth more than the whole world, while men in the church are going on piling up bank accounts, buying more land and bigger automobiles, and giving twenty-five or fifty dollars a year toward the upkeep of the church and the spread of the Master's kingdom on earth. Jesus, when he died on the cross, had no material wealth to his credit, no home or farm or bank account. And how a man can die today worth his thousands and millions and claim to be a humble follower of the Nazarene is beyond me. I speak for myself, I would rather have no bank account and stand with Jesus, than be a world-getter and go down to disgrace and destruction. We need Christian charity to teach us HOW TO GIVE.

If I know the mission of a true life, it is service prompted by love, and not criticising and backbiting. This Christian charity is needed among the laity. Do we take offense too readily? Charity taketh no account of evil. Charity does not keep a book account registering therein all the offenses, insults, abuses, maltreatments it receives from others. We need Christian charity. Are we down at the mouth because some one has been appointed or elected to the office we held or wanted? "Charity suffers long and is kind, is not easily provoked." We need Christian charity. Do we only see other's faults to exploit them? Are we tattlers, busy-bodies? Our mouths ought to be stopped. In preaching a sermon a few weeks back to the Portis, High School graduating class, I said they ought to try to be versatile and be good mixers in society, but not to talk themselves out of Christ and his kingdom. Charity thinketh no evil. It does not invent or devise evil; believes no evil where no evil seems; believeth all things,—is ever ready to believe the truth and the very best about all people. It hopeth all things,—when there is no room for believing good about people, it will hope for the better. O, how grand; And it will not exploit faults for trouble's sake. Are you wont to criticize the preacher? Remember he is only human like yourself and pray for him. What say ye, Brethren, do we need Christian charity?

Then we preachers need Christian charity perhaps more than we think. Are we jealous of our fellow-pastors, of their success, of their charges, of their salary? I feel quite sure (I shall speak plainly not to criticize but to help) that there have been times when one pastor has militated against a fellow-pastor to keep him from getting a charge that would pay his brother a bigger salary than he was getting. Such things are to be regretted. Charity won't do them. We ought to be big enough to let a fellow-minister follow us or secure another church at a larger salary than we are getting, if he can do so, and rejoice with him. If any church is paying a brother minister double the salary that I am getting, I will say from the depth of my heart, the Lord bless him and them. Because I do not think any of our preachers are as yet getting too much money. If you are, come across and let us divide the surplus. There have been times when men have tried to stir up strife in the congregation of a brother minister and cause him to lose his job. There have been men who underbid a fellow-pastor simply to get his church or one he was considering. Are we ever guilty of such things now? In order to keep from it brethren in the ministry, we need Christian charity.

Have we formed "cliques" at our conferences? Some one says, "Glad to see you," but away he is gone no more to speak to you and to look for better company. It's a big wonder they do not choke as they try to say it. Have you known any ministerial brethren on the conference grounds that you could not get acquainted with or out of whom you could not get a conversation? Have you met laity of the same type? There are folks that you have to pinch or push like a pig before they will grunt. Some are timid, some are selfish and some are too much puffed up. We want no men in our ministerial association who wear a No. 6 shoe and a No. 10 hat. Nor do we want that kind in the laity. Something ought to be done to jar them loose from their "riggings." Brethren in the ministry, and the laity what say ye, do we need Christian charity?

"The life of love is an eternal life. There is no worse fault that can befall a man, than to live and grow old, alone, unloving and unloved. To be lost is to live in an unregenerate condition, loveless and unloved; and to be saved is to love, for God is Love. In Matthew 25 the test at the judgment was not how a person believed but how he loved. "We love him because he first loved us."

What makes a man a good musician, telegrapher, stenographer? Sometimes talent helps, but it is always practice that puts on the finishing touches. What will make a man a good, true-hearted Christian, always faithful in doing his duty in this world? Simply this, the practising of Christian charity among the brethren and in the world. God make us all true and earnest lovers of men, with our hearts filled with Christian charity, for this we need above everything else in this world.

Standardizing Colleges. By Edwin E. Jacobs

The general reader of this paper may not know just what forces have been set going looking towards the standardization of the colleges and universities of America. These forces emanate from three sources, viz., the state governments, certain large benevolent agencies, and voluntary associations. No colleges could escape all of these even if it be so desired.

1. Certain of the state governments have set some legal standard for their colleges. In Ohio a corporation conducting such an institution as passes for a college, must have at least fifty thousand dollars worth of assets. This is very low so far as the monetary standard is concerned. Some states have educational boards which pass upon the colleges of their jurisdiction. Ohio has no board with such a function.

Moreover, both the state department of education and the federal department have from time to time, indicated what they considered as necessary qualifications for institutions of higher learning. There is the Babcock report from the federal office, which defined what was designated as the efficient college as well as the minimum college. These requirements were rather high and while there was no federal enactment to set them up legally, yet colleges have made an effort to meet them. It is policy to do so. These requirements all revolve around (a) endowment and income in money, (b) teaching corps, including their academic degrees, hours engaged in teaching, pay, etc., (c) library facilities, (d) laboratory equipment, (e) entrance requirements, and (f) requirements for graduation. And it is to be noted that all this refers, not to special departments, but to regular college work. So at Ashland the Music, Business and other departments add nothing so far as our ranking is concerned, not even the Seminary, when considered as a seminary. In so far as the members of the Seminary are doing college work, their enrollment would be counted in the college.

It is to be noted here that while some of the standards are not to be enforced by law, yet pressure is constantly being brought to bear upon us so that we must at some early date attempt to meet them more fully than we are now doing.

2. The Carnegie and the Rockefeller Foundations also exercise quite a considerable influence in the college life of America. The first named organization has long ago defined what for it would pass as a college and this is known as the Carnegie standard. Many of the voluntary associations have accepted this and made it their own. This source of standardization also has no legal power to enforce its requirements, but the moral influence it exerts is very powerful and colleges can not afford to maintain standards lower than are set by these sources. To insist upon lower standards, is to admit that the college is not able to meet them and that is to admit a lack of strength that no college covets.

3. But the voluntary associations are more important, at least just now. These consist of state and inter-state associations of colleges. These set the precedent for entrance requirements, graduation, etc. It ought to be known that Ashland has nothing whatever to say as to what shall constitute proper entrance requirements for this has been set for us. So also many other things. But the association with which Ashland has most to do just now, is The Ohio Association of Colleges, and perhaps also the educational branch of the Inter-church World Movement, which, in their own words, seek to assist worthy colleges and to help chloroform those whose life ought to cease. But it is of the Ohio College Association that I want to speak and to do so very plainly.

This association sets conditions in Ohio. The work of these colleges, about fifteen in number, is fully recognized by the medical colleges, and other institutions, while the work of the colleges outside of this group is not fully recognized. Hence it is absolutely necessary for all colleges in Ohio which want to survive, to meet these conditions,

And what is more, any institution which wants to be elated as a college of liberal arts and sciences, ought of its own accord without any outside pressure, meet every requirement and even more. One can not in honor ask young people to continue with a school which does anything less than the best for them.

Here are the conditions to be met. And let it be said they CAN be met and they MUST be met. I am sure that under Brother Beachler's splendid leadership, the churches of our denomination will rally to the support of this college as they have never done before and I am confidently hopeful that the churches yet to be canvassed will not at all fall behind those which have already made their gifts. And let it be said that the money goes to no man or set of men, but to the endowment of what, under God, shall be a great institution. Now for the conditions:

(1) A productive endowment of at least $200,000, no debt, no investments which are sterile. The Brethren church can meet that and more.

(2) A teaching staff of at least eight men who hold the Master's degree or its equivalent from a recognized graduate school.

(3) These teachers are not to teach more than fifteen hours a week in strictly college, not preparatory work.

(4) Fifteen units required for entrance and 124 semester hours for graduation.

(5) Library and laboratories adequate to the student body.

(6) Buildings properly equipped, heated, lighted, etc.

Now, it is evident that this all goes right back to the money basis. Given the endowment, and Ashland will hold her head up with the best of them. She now has a faculty quite above par, but it must be enlarged along sound lines of scholarship. Her physical equipment is good, but is not adequate. Her enrollment in the regular college work is good but must be increased. Her academic standards are now as high as could be wished for, and they need, not so much to be raised, as to be held where they now are amidst keen competition.

I hope it is now quite evident what Ashland has to meet. You must give us eight or more teachers who qualify. You must put the school on a sound basis within the next few years, or the results will not be pleasant to contemplate, for the above conditions are not those of the Ohio Association alone, but are quite representative of those generally set. I pledge myself as president of the college to work to the attainment of these goals, and if they can be met with reasonable speed, marked changes are ahead of Ashland College. My next article will deal with "What Ashland Needs."

The New Religion.

By Charles A. Bame, D. D.

I think there is no more interesting and commanding subject than this one anent the several discussions that have taken place in our EVANGELIST lately, on the subject. I do not think that we have come to the end of it and therefore I venture that more ought to be said and will be said. Doctor Gillin's article set forth one side. My reply set forth another. His "Apologia" defends his former article and defends his position consistently. He faithfully preaches the "Doughboy Religion" when he argues that he ought not to be criticized because of the things he has done for the church. The Doughboy thinks that he will go to heaven because he fought for a great principle and I am willing to let him go to the judgment with that idea if he will do so against all I can teach him differently, but I will not allow anyone in our church to commend that kind of belief as long as I can protest against it. Now, let me apologize to Dr. Gillin if I have misrepresented him. I did not mean to do so nor do I think I did. The fact that I asked him to tell us how to save society without saving the individual and that he wrote so long an article without offering a single suggestion that offered light argues that he has nothing to offer. Perhaps we can intensify our social efforts, but I am sure that we can, should and must intensify our effort for the salvation of the individual or soon be revealed in a light much to our humiliation as a church. That the drift of our learned men is not to encourage the young man to build the larger Brethren church, is not to be questioned. If they are going as fast as the opportunity offers, to other more lucrative or esteemed lines of activity, there can be little doubt that we shall continue to cry for the young men to go and do what the older are not doing. Not the example of our leaders in other days, but the example in the time of crisis is the thing that ought to count toward leadership and power and honor in the church.

In many things Dr. Gillin and myself are in perfect accord. As to our church's position in the matter of creed, I am sure we are. I well remember a number of his interpretations of our position with which I found no objection when others did. Our creed is right and we want to keep it right. Dr. Gillin and myself will be found fighting together on that subject. But going back to his first article, he will have to do a good deal more teaching before he gets me to say it is "something of a travesty that the church is still concerned chiefly with the problem of individual salvation" even though "the world is asking for guidance for its conduct in social affairs." It would not be a travesty but a calamity if the church did not pay attention to the salvation of the individual for that is its main business and no other organization pays attention to that at all. The world "asks for bread" and the church says Jesus is that. "Woe betide the church" anywhere and everywhere when it ceases to function in that holy work; and furthermore I would be doing all the penance that it were possible if my name were attached to any such sentence or if I remained silent when any friend or brother of mine ever got into print with it in any Brethren publication.

Another overstatement that Dr. Gillin makes is when he tries to make out a case of proselytism among us, and then proceeds to berate us for it. Now I think he is very dogmatic in all this. Indeed if we are at fault at all along this line, it is that we are not as diligent as we ought to be in the presentation of the "whole gospel." If the presentation of the whole gospel takes people out of churches that do not preach it, then let us be called proselytizers. But I have been around a great deal in evangelistic work and in other offices of the Brethren church and as sure as I write, I never have found a single pastor among us that ever deliberately sought to get a single person out of another church! Indeed, the more earnestly we present the "whole gospel" the more surely we shall be to receive the applications of those who are members of other churches to unite with ours. But the fact that they do so apply does not make us one whit proselytizers. If we fearlessly present the whole gospel, we shall win in his holy name but if we compromise and let the passing fad of a day cause us to ask for something different than is set forth in the words of Eternal Truth, "Woe betide us!"

The New Religion

We do not live in a new world. We are in the same old world with the same wicked Devil and the same tempted peoples with added selfishness, greed, hate, and egotism. We have conquered the earth, water, and lastly the air with a reasonable degree of success; we have completely changed the industrial and almost completely the social life of the country and now, the church faces a crisis and we are alarmed. The other side of the fact is that we have developed more self sacrifice; more heroism; more devotion. When the Devil fights hard, the Christian grows in grace, strength, and power. In the past four years he unleashed his most hellish demons on the world and it staggered. Isms have grown while inquiring men and women searched for the way they knew not because the church was not ready for the big things it might and ought to have done in the crisis. But the fads, fancies and phantoms will pass and Christianity will remain and be the new religion. The salvation of the world will come through no other agency. It will come through the simple methods of Jesus, by the preaching of his gospel to "every creature." No "salvation of society" has ever yet come by wholesale or ever will because it is not in the BOOK. Christians will ever be the salt of the earth after they have been individually saved and grouping themselves for conquests will go on in their salting by their good conduct binding up the wounds of the suffering, feeding the hungry and giving drink to the thirsty for eternal life. The "Head over all things to the church" is not asleep and out of the crisis will come victory." God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved."

The Newness of Bigness

My candid opinion is that the new religion will be only a bigger application of the old gospel. All the newness that has come to the world is that we are thinking and doing bigger things. We need not change to be in harmony with the new day, we need but to attempt bigger and better things. We shall not berate numbers, for the world and our God moves in numbers. "All the world" is the Master's goal. It must be ours. "Drives" the speed and magnitude of which the world did not dream was the order of the day in America for the last two years. More money was raised for the government than many of us thought existed. The world was amazed at the amount given for religion and the Y. M. C. A. and other agencies. We are thinking in a big way everywhere save, perhaps in the church. While some of us were and are sweating that we may go more swiftly at it, one of our honored men says, perhaps we are too much concerned "with church forms and numbers to be reported in statistics on the Four Year Program"! While other churches are following us in Programs that stagger us in the largeness we say, be careful about numbers. God save the mark!

We must not get our eyes off the goals. The famous Fourteen Points should be of secondary interest to the Sixteen Goals for they were first and they are the business of the KING. WE MUST THINK BIG; ACT BIG; GIVE BIG; BE BIG. If we do, we live in the new day and are in line with the Master. If we do not, we deserve the fate that will most certainly befall us. The early church found themselves facing a crisis. Acts 6. Complaints came in that the church was failing in her welfare work. The preachers had more than they could do. They could not see their way clear to "for-sake the word of God and serve tables," and so, they set to work electing others to take this part of the Lord's work off the shoulders of the ministers so that they might "continue steadfastly in prayer and in the ministry of the word. There is a fine example for today. Some preachers are leaving our ministry for other denominations; some have left for professorships; some have left at the call of the lucrative positions of business. Are we not alarmed? Are not official boards awake enough to sense the situations and at once BE BIG ENOUGH TO CALL THEM BACK TO THE MINISTRY OF PRAYER AND THE WORD? Here is the call of the new day and the old world and of the gospel. Let the men of the boards and of the pew say to the church and the preachers, we are with you. Plan big. Let no preacher go from our ranks who may be kept by anything you can do to keep them in the ministry of the word and prayer and the results will amaze and delight you.

The Last Appeal for Foster Parents for 60,000 French War Orphans

One of the most appealing of the after-the-war campaigns will be launched this month, asking for foster parents for 60,000 little war orphans of France. Mrs. Walter S. Brewster, wife of the Roumanian Consul to Chicago, Chairman of the Chicago Committee and Vice-President of the National Committee of The Fatherless Children of France, has charge of the promotion of this campaign.

Mrs. Brewster has just returned from a tour of investigation through the devastated regions of France.

The highest French officials provided her with military escort and bestowed upon her every courtesy during her visit to the war zone. She lived with the appalling conditions of these children and their mothers—she knows that thousands of children "over there" are undernourished, starving, and succumbing to sickness.

"In all the northern country," says Mrs. Brewster, "there is no village untouched, and scarcely a house with a roof. There is not a bridge that has not been dynamited, a factory that has not been ruined. The tales that are told of the boche invasion are unthinkable—shocking. Still the people of the north tell them dispassionately. They have borne so much they have no energy to show excitement over their suffering. They are coming back into these terrible towns as soon as they are allowed. They bring their possessions with them in two string bags, usually. Possibly they have enough to fill a red cotton tablecloth knotted at the corners. To Cambria, 17,000 out of a pre-war population of 29,000 have returned. They live ten and twelve in a room, and many of the rooms have no roofs.

"For two days we motored over this northern country before we saw a cow, a chicken or a horse. The country is stripped bare of everything that makes it livable. But to the French it is still lovable. As you ride through it your pity for France is infinite. But in your mind are no words to express your feelings toward Germany. There are miles and miles of grayish-brown dust where were fertile farms, pleasant villages, forests and orchards. About Verdun, as far as you can see, are heaps of sand, no sign of life that was, no promise of any life to come.

"Here and there is a cross where some soldier, killed in the last days of the fighting, is buried.

"Those who died in the frightfulness of the earlier battles lie somewhere beneath that awful heap of dust. All along this strip of dead country are soldiers' graves, singly in the middle of plowed fields, in groups along the roads, or row after row in some field cemetery. The fathers of many of the little children for whom we are seeking to care are buried there, and more have left no trace."

Every day of her stay in the war zone it was made vividly clear to Mrs. Brewster that "we must work harder and faster than ever before," for thousands of children are perishing in France.

Under the plan of the campaign being undertaken, each American foster parent pledges ten cents a day, which makes $3 a month, or $36.50 a year, and this added to a tiny allowance of the same amount allowed by the French Government, means saving grace to a French child, allowing it not only to remain in its own country, but with its widowed mother instead of in an institution. Thus are the broken remnants of the little war families kept together. Each foster parent is put in direct touch with the child for whom she has pledged the necessary 10 cents a day, and with the mother through correspondence. Every cent subscribed goes to the child. The expenses of this philanthropy are borne by generous friends of the organization. To adopt a child or to make a donation, large or small, write for information to Mrs. Walter S. Brewster, Room 634, 410 South Michigan avenue, Chicago, Illinois, with whom all local chairmen of The Fatherless Children of France, in every community, are co-operating.

The garden of a Christian man ought to be the most beautiful in the whole district.

A great boon is to learn how to extract sweetness from bitterness.

The man who thinks he can't is usually right.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Grace of Christian Giving. By L. G. Wood

Luke 6:38: "Give and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over, shall they give into your bosom. For with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again."

II Cor. 8:9: "See that ye abound in this grace also."

II Cor. 9:7: "God loveth a cheerful giver."

The subject assigned me assumes that there is a GRACE of Christian Giving. The Bible as the text book of Christianity furnished the abounding basis of that fact.

When we think of Christian Giving we must think of more than money. There are three steps in Christian giving—1 Giving of self—that is for personal salvation. 2 Giving of life—that is in consecration for service. 3 Giving of means—as a proof and pledge of life and of love.

Nothing can so emphasize the dignity of the church of Jesus Christ, as the TASK he has given it. A divine plan which was four thousand years developing before the Savior came, would certainly cause angels to blush and devils to tremble. The wonderful prophecy fulfilling circumstances, which crowded themselves into the birth, life, death, resurrection, commission and ascension of Jesus Christ, certainly prefigures the greatness of the world's need. The saddest fact of all church history is that it required 1800 years for the church to comprehend the meaning of three little words—"GO," "ALL," "NATIONS"—why was the church so long learning its Master and adopting his program? Greed for selfish gain.

Sometimes even today we are made to wonder, is it souls or is it silver the church has a passion for. The TASK of the church is increasingly tremendous, but its equipment and resources are equal to the TASK—Acts. 1:8—"But ye shall receive power when the Holy Spirit is come upon you; and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." Is the church succeeding with her TASK? Yes and No. She is succeeding as no other institution on earth has or can succeed, but she is not succeeding to the full measure of her equipment and resources, neither to the full answer of the world's call and need. No institution or enterprise in all the world, financed by freewill offerings would dare to compare records with the church of Jesus Christ. The Christian forces of our nation last year gave $415,000,000 for home work and $76,500,000 for work among enlisted men, and $21,000,000 for foreign missions and $420,000,000 to charities, the whole church last year gave to world missions, $50,000,000. This is small in comparison with the TASK, but it is not small as an expression of increasing voluntary interest the church has in the world's work. In founding the church Jesus Christ called twelve ordinary men to follow him, in presenting to them the TASK he said some very extraordinary things to them—such as "Ye are the light of the world"—and "Ye are the salt of the earth." These terms represent Christian stewardship, in self, in service and in substance. This stewardship is as really ours as it was theirs. Too many of our people think to put on their best clothes and sit down and shine, but such light (?) will never reveal CHRIST. Even the lighting system on the Ford would teach us the folly of such a course—when you stop the engine the light goes out and the faster you run the brighter it shines. We read in the BOOK—"When there was no open vision the people perished." I fear that some of our people do not desire a vision of present day church work. Two men once paused before a large show window on a down town street: after a few moments, one said to the other, "Isn't that a beautiful window?" "Oh, said the other, "I was looking through the window at the goods." Brethren, are we looking at the Goals of the Four Year Program, or are we looking through these Goals to that efficiency of the work of the Kingdom of Christ? This is a day of large things—this is a day of world visions, are we going to keep abreast with the times that have come to us, in the grace of giving? The world itself will depreciate the importance of the church according to the note of cheapness we sound, and the slow time to which we march.

I am tired of hearing the church referred to as an "Ark of safety," we might just as well call it a "hotel lobby," a "lounging apartment" or a "social club." It is none of these, it should be compared to a "mighty war vessel," a "rescue station" or a "great light house" representing the only hope the old world has. I do not speak disparagingly, but as a matter of fact, for the last twenty-five years of unstinted prosperity, the church has developed a "greed for gain" and self complacency. Parents in the church have been withholding their sons and daughters and dollars from the missionary work of the program of the King of kings. But NOW they have given both sons, daughters and dollars by the million to make the world safe for democracy. In this day of large gifts and supreme sacrifices, the work of the Kingdom must not go begging. Some of the social clubs of New York, not long ago made a great banquet in honor of a French officer who was in the city on business, they sent a very distinguished gentleman to invite the Frenchman to the banquet, who replied, "Thank you sir, but I will not be there for France does not feast when her sons are dying." This is a day in which all Christians must learn a lesson along three lines—penitence—simplicity—and liberality. We will learn these as never before or we will pay the price of having fallen asleep on picket duty in the army of the Lord. The church's great problem today is adaptation, how to fit into the task and meet the problems of the world's great movements. We never faced such tremendous things before, and yet today seems but a foregleam of a new world that is in the making. Our own denominational enterprises—Ashland College and all church extension at home and abroad—these are to us the very breathings of the Holy Spirit in the interest of the Kingdom of Christ—and not only so, but these are worthy of our BEST and LARGEST gifts. Here is the TEST of our love and the CHALLENGE to our faith. Will a man rob God? yet ye rob me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Some one tells the story of an artist who was once asked to paint a picture of a decaying church. To the astonishment of many, instead of putting on the canvass an old, tottering ruin, the artist painted a stately edifice of modern grandeur. Through the open portals could be seen the richly carved pulpit, the magnificent organ, and the beautiful stained glass windows. Within the grand entrance was an offering plate of elaborate design for the offerings of the fashionable worshippers. But—and here the artist's idea of a decaying church was made known—right above the offering plate there hung a square box bearing the legend, "For Foreign Missions," and right over the slot through which the contributions ought to have gone he had painted a huge cobweb. The advantages of giving as an act of worship are many. Our Master said of himself—"I came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Therefore his religion is not based on the "survival of the fittest" but upon the sacrifice of the best. "God loveth a cheerful giver" because cheerful giving is born of love, and therefore it is a lover loving a lover and rejoicing in the communion. GIVING is the language of loving—indeed it has no other speech. "God so loved that he gave." Love finds its very life in giving itself away. Its only pride in possession is the joy of surrender. If love has all things it yet possesses nothing.

The right spirit in Christian giving lifts the whole department of Christian duty to a higher plain—it removes it from the region of beggary. It no longer treats God as if he were some Lazarus seeking the crumbs, that otherwise would be given to the dogs. It makes giving a joyous and worshipful service. It makes giving a means of grace. We are rejoiced at this season because it seems as never before that the spirit of Christian giving is beginning to grip the Brethren church, and when it is allowed to do so, Ashland College will be endowed, the great Northwest will be occupied, our foreign missions will be supported, and our home work will not be lagging. In all religious work in the be lagging. In all religious work in the past there has been a temptation to proceed in practice, upon the assumption that the primary needs are more missionaries, more money and better organization. Today we are coming to know that much more important than any of these things is the power of the gospel of Christ. What we need at this critical hour is not more organization, but a new DYNAMIC; not a new Bible but a new unction from above. The deepest need is a fresh discovery of God, and we shall discover him afresh only as we go back to his WORD and to the secret place. We are coming to know that the source of the spiritual vitality and power of any uplifting movement is prayer. Every great achievement has been begun, continued and concluded in prayer. The command to pray precedes both the command to give and to go. Am I missing the mark when I say there is now a unique place in the world's work for our own fraternity—"Brethrenism?" This unique place is discovered in our common slogan—"A Whole Gospel to the Whole World." May we unitedly and liberally sound forth our slogan until the whole world shall see him coming in his glory.

The library offers a book, the lecture hall offers learning, the gallery offers a picture, travel offers experience. But the fine arts, wisdom and culture can not do everything—culture can beautify the life, lend refinement to reason, lend wings to imagination. But God the soul's father alone can crown life with richness and influence. What the great thinkers can do for the intellect, what the poet can do for imagination, what the heroes can do for aspiration and purpose—that and a thousand fold more, the Christ of the BOOK can do for the soul's life. He alone has mastered the science of right living. He alone can teach the art of character building, freeing the soul from sin, he can crown it with supreme beauty. The hour is now striking, in which we must measure ourselves in world terms and freely take our share of meeting world problems. The challenge of the new world presents to us larger opportunities. We dare not offer any apologies or excuses for inactivity.

Give To the Kingdom Your Best

On Massachusetts's rocky shore, down Cape Cod way, was a little village of fisher folk. They followed the sea for a living, and were strong, hardy men and women. One night a great storm arose. All night long the wind howled, the lightning flashed, and the thunder rolled, while the rain came down in torrents. Toward morning a gun was heard out at sea, the signal of distress. Down to the shore went the men, but in the darkness they could not tell the location of the ship. At last dawn broke, and about a mile from the shore was the wreck of a ship. At first they thought the crew must all have been washed overboard, but as the light grew brighter they saw, by the aid of glasses, one man in the rigging. A young man had for some time been standing near the head of the village. His gaze had been riveted on the wreck. Suddenly he turned to the head man and said quietly: "Cap., if one man will go with me I'll go out to the wreck." Silence fell on the little group, until the young man's chum came up and, shaking his hand, said: "Dick, I will go with you." The older men tried to stop them, but in vain. Then Dick's mother cried out: "Don't go, Dick! Don't go, my son. The sea took your father from me many years ago, and you know, Dick, your brother Bill sailed away over a year ago and he, too, is dead. You're all I've got, Dick—don't go, my darling." Dick answered: "Mother, I must go. I feel something pulling at me, telling me I must try to help that poor fellow. Don't worry mother, Jack and I, with God's help will come back safely." Tears trickled down the cheeks of strong men, who felt that the boys were going to their death. Out of the harbor rowed the boys until the waves hid them from view. Suddenly the straining eyes of the men on the shore saw the sailor fall from the rigging. All thought the sacrifice had been made in vain. Men stood with bated breath, hoping against hope for the return of the boys. All at once the man with the glasses cried out: "I believe I see the boat coming back." Then it was lost to view, but with each incoming wave it drew nearer and nearer. What a shout arose as the boat crossed the bar; and as it came still nearer, another great shout went up when they saw the third man in the boat. Closer and closer came the boat, and when it was near enough for his voice to carry, Dick shouted: "Say, Cap., tell mother it's Bill." The moral, "Give to the Kingdom your biggest and your best and the best will come back to you."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

"Christ Our Completeness"

By C. Delbert Whitmer

OUR SCRIPTURE

For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the God-head bodily, and in him ye are made full, who is the head of all principality and power" (Col. 2:9, 10).

OUR MEDITATION

The revised rendering of this striking scripture, brings out a beautiful and precious thought which is sometimes obscured in the common version. The Greek word rendered made full is the verb form of the same word (pleeroma) rendered fullness in the first clause, showing the apostle's meaning to be that as in Christ there dwells all the fullness of deity, in bodily form (Somathos) so we, likewise by our union with Christ, are partakers of that same fullness. That is to say, every disciple of Christ, in his measure, is to be a divine incarnation—an embodiment of those graces and virtues, and of that quality of life and character which belong to God. This is a most daring and sublime thought, but it is not peculiar to Paul. Peter speaks of our becoming "partakers of the divine nature," and John, declares that "when Christ is manifested we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is," a vision possible only to the pure in heart.

No fact forces itself more frequently on our observation and consciousness than the imperfect and fragmentary character of our lives. Whether we consider the inadequacy of our knowledge of the greatest truths and problems in the universe, our inability to recognize at all times the reality of the spiritual world, or our unsatisfactory efforts to live up to our ideals of life, we see that which is partial incomplete and imperfect. Not only do we "know in part and prophesy in part," we live only "in part." Paul not only tells us of our own incompleteness, but also of the completeness, fullness of our lives in Christ. In him, he sees the remedy for all our imperfections because "in him dwelleth the fullness of the Godhead bodily.

In another significant passage Paul analyzes this divine sufficiency in Christ as a prism separates a ray of light into its constituent colors. He says that Christ is "made unto us wisdom from God, and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption." As "wisdom" from God" Christ supplements all our intellectual deficiencies. What folly to turn away from Christ, to learn of modern science, etc., concerning the great problems of life and death. As our "righteousness," all our sins find pardon in his infinite mercy and our depraved hearts find renewal in his redeeming grace. As our "sanctification," the "law of the spirit of life in him frees us from the law of sin and death," strengthens our weakness, and conforms us into his image. As our "redemp-

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Christian Fellowship.

By Martin Shively, D. D.

One of the constant sources of surprise to the student of early church history is the mighty and rapid spread of the church during those first years of its existence. Its Founder had just suffered death at the hands of the government, accused by the leaders of the people,—leaders in religion, intellectuality, social affairs and in politics. The disciples, upon whom the propagation of the new cult would depend, were absolutely without standing in either of the above fields of achievement, making thus a series of handicaps, which it would seem impossible to overcome. But in spite of all this, from the very day of its birth, the infant church grew with leaps and bounds, until in a marvelously short time, its life giving message had been proclaimed throughout all western Asia, and Southern Europe, and the number of believers had been increased to hundreds of thousands. The persecution which broke upon them, resulting in imprisonment, banishment or death for multitudes of them, preacher and layman alike, did not even check their enthusiasm, nor lessen the number of those who pressed into the Kingdom. The very ashes of the martyrs became the seed of the church.

No one will deny that the power which made this most unusual success at all possible, was the power which comes alone from above. The message which was preached was itself sent to men from God, for "holy men of God spake as the Spirit gave them utterance," and wrote under divine dictation. The marvelous experience which Pentecost brought to them, had filled the disciples with an enthusiasm which nothing could quench. They believed unquestioningly, that they were led by the Holy Ghost, and were laborers together with God, being his husbandry, his building. Without question, these things made a powerful contribution to their success, and without them, they should have failed completely. But the visible agents used of God for the establishing of his church among men, were men "of like passions as we,"—men who had their differences of opinion and found it hard to yield, as was indicated in the separation of Paul and Barnabas on the eve of a second missionary journey. They were men of temper under strong provocation as is shown by Paul's retort to the high priest (Acts 23:3). There were men among them who lacked vision, as is shown by the disaffection of Mark, who failed in the first great missionary journey, but "came back" into the affections of his superior later. Even Peter remained human, as was shown by his behavior at Antioch in Galatians 2. But in spite of the facts just cited, the one thing which made a powerful appeal to those without, was the persistent and unfeigned affection which these disciples had for each other.

There is more fact than sentiment in the lines of a hymn, widely known and sung.

Do you know the world is dying,
For a little bit of love?"

There are almost innumerable expressions of such desire, for the multiplied fraternal organizations, are indications that not a few folks are under the impression, that it may be purchased with money. And a species of fellowship may be so secured, but Christian fellowship belongs to an order which is of an infinitely higher type. It has its origin in the God who "so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him, need not perish." It is related in its spirit to the Christ, "who died for the ungodly." It has found expression on a thousand mission fields, where love for souls in darkness and in danger of death, has led and kept the loyal herald of the cross at his task in good report or evil. It has knelt beside the dying, and recited with trembling lip, but joyful heart, the unfulfilling promises of him who never fails. It has stood beside the sorrowing, pointing to the Healer and praying for the grace to say, "Thy will be done." It has sat beside the penitent, and told him of the "Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world." It found beautiful expression in the ministering kindness of the disciples at Philippi, as they sent to their faithful friend, God's servant, who had brought them hope, a practical token of their love. There in his bonds, as he lay in the Roman prison, their kindness lightened the gloom and his spirit, still unfettered, met their gift with a shout of praise. Like him from whom it sprang, this fellowship has been everywhere, and like him, it is eternal.

Christian fellowship is a product,—the result of something gone before. It is the child of a faith which is held in common. A faith which sees God as men had never seen him before,—a persistently kind and loving friend, who revealed himself in the person and word of his Son, leaving no room for doubt as to his love and his purpose for man. The assurance of forgiveness through the atoning merit of Calvary's sacrifice, filled every heart with joy, as faith stretched out the hand to receive it. The stupendous fact of Jesus' resurrection, was so full of import to them who believed it,—so full of promise of a life with him, beyond the portals of death, that it became an abiding bond of union between all who accepted it. And thus it continues still, and shall ever continue. As the wearer of his country's uniform feels at home at once as he meets another doing so, so do they who love their Lord. There is a common faith, a common purpose, and a common hope.

Suffering too, made its contribution to the quantity of the fellowship which existed in the apostolic church. As life grows easy, men are apt to become selfish. There are plenty of examples to prove this in both homes and churches of our day. As the way is hard and uncertain, those who walk in it are drawn together for counsel and prayer, and the mutual sacrifices then made create bonds of sympathy which are strong as bonds of steel. Only they can sing with fullest meaning.

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love.
The fellowship of kindred minds,
Is like to that above.

The prophet who cried, "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion," saw more than the divine wrath as a cause for the "woe," for he knew that those who were so, would become self-centered and the fellowship, which alone makes life worth the living, would be denied to them. And the prophet might well sound his cry of warning in this day in which we live.

Christian fellowship is to be had and enjoyed only as we comply with the conditions upon which it depends. We must go where it is produced and cultivated,—to the service of God's house, of whatever character the service may be. The meetings for preaching, for prayer or for counsel are all essential. Many years ago, a servant of God said, "We took sweet counsel together and walked unto the house of God in company" (Psalm 55:14). And yet another, in the times before our Lord's coming, said "Then they that feared the Lord, spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it" (Mal. 3:16). I am sure that it is true even now. If one would enjoy this priceless boon, he must make his rightful contribution to it, for "He that would have friends, must show himself friendly," and he must also comply with the other conditions upon which it depends. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Teacher Training Graduates. By J. A. Garber

We are pleased to report another installment of graduates. A part of the report should have been made ere this time.

Allentown, Pa.

Brother DeLozier had organized a small class at this place, but conditions made it impossible to graduate only one member: Alfred Leiser.

Roanoke, Va.

We had hoped to publish an account of the graduation of this class. In its absence we are glad to announce the names of the graduates: Nora A. Cumbie, Gerald P. Wood, Mrs. M. L. Aldridge and Mrs. F. L. Brumbaugh. The pastor, Brother Wood, was the faithful teacher.

Fremont, Ohio

In April we Sundayed with this church, preaching in the morning and addressing the graduating class in the evening. The following persons were graduated: Mrs. John Barringer, Alice Newbould, Mrs. M. E. Croft and Mrs. Karl Oppenheimer. Brother Oberholtzer, the teacher, was not only rejoiced with this commencement, but has been encouraged to organize a new class. They ordered fifteen copies of "The Educative Process in Religion."

North Manchester, Indiana

This class had finished their study of the text last fall. When the stage was set for the commencement the ban incident to the "Flu" delayed the cherished plans. After a long wait we were privileged to fulfil the prior engagement, the class being graduated on the third Sunday of June. Dr. Bame had prepared and conducted an appropriate program. His interest and efforts were seconded by the superintendent, Brother J. W. Dewey. The graduates were: Carrie Swank, Grace Ebbinghaus, Mrs. George Conrad, Mrs. Monroe Arney, Audra Tilman, Carl Kester, Mrs. Marie B. Wertenberger, Pearl Creagor, Mrs. Ruth Baker and Mrs. J. J. Wolfe. The last named was the persevering teacher, who has the distinction of teaching and graduating the largest class of last year. This school plans to have another, perhaps larger, class ere long.

Carry On

We desire to voice our appreciation of the kind consideration accorded by all these good people whose work was of a uniformly high grade. It was a real joy to co-operate with them in their training work. It is a greater joy to know they plan to continue the teacher training business. Let us add "carry on," even in a larger way wherever possible. And this message is intended for all our schools. Now is the time to plan and organize your teacher training class. Prevent flagging interest during the summer months by giving publicity to your educational campaign which you expect to inaugurate in the autumn. To wait until September to secure an enrollment for your training class is to lose the greater part of that month which might be used for study.

Report of Junior C. E. Society of the First Brethren Church, Long Beach, California.

We have an enrollment of thirty-nine members, with an average attendance for the past year of thirty; average number of Juniors carrying their Bibles for the year, thirteen; number of chapters read 3578; number of Bible verses committed to memory, 448; number of Juniors uniting with the church during the year, 4; promoted to the Intermediate Society, 13; new members taken into the society during the year, 14; bouquets taken to the sick and shut-ins, 283. It is our custom to take a verse of Scripture along with the flowers that may comfort or in some way prove a blessing to the sick or sorrowing.

In connection with our regular Junior lessons for the past four months for our memory work we have been memorizing the String of Pearls as put out by the National C. E. Society, which consists of The Books of the Bible, 1st Psalm, 23 Psalm, 67 Psalm, 10 Commandments, the Beatitudes, 13 chapter of 1st Corinthians, 12 chapters of Romans, Apostles Creed, Bible Alphabet which is a verse beginning with each letter of the alphabet. Our society had five girls who had memorized the String of Pearls and were on the Honor Roll at our State C. E. Convention.

One week ahead a Junior is selected to lead the meeting; they meet with the superintendent and arrange the lesson. The Junior has full charge of the program under the direction of the superintendent. They make their requests for prayer with several Juniors always taking part in prayer. We use the Sword Drill which is hunting verses in the Bible, the one finding it first is expected to read it.

I find when we keep them busy they are the happiest and we get the best results. One trouble with us Junior superintendents is, many times we hesitate on giving them hard things to do, but I am convinced since my girls have learned this String of Pearls that at this age they memorize more readily than we older people, therefore we should take advantage of this opportunity to hide God's Word in their hearts while they are young.

We expect to take up the Precious Promises as put out by the National C. E. soon as they complete the String of Pearls. Children are not unlike us older ones, as they like to be rewarded for doing things, and when we give them hard tasks to perform we usually reward them with some reward of merit. These girls who did this memory work are being rewarded with a beautiful gold C. E. pin which they can use as they go on into the Intermediate and even into the Senior Society.

Our aim as Junior Leader is to encourage the children to read the Word of God and hide it in their hearts, as we know the promise is "God's Word shall not return unto him void" and to teach the Juniors to know and love the Lord Jesus Christ as their own personal Savior.

A Convention Echo

Denver, Indiana, July 9, 1919.

Evangelist Editor:

The Sunday school and Christian Endeavor convention of the Southern District of Indiana churches held at Denver June 17 and 18 proved to be very helpful and instructive in suggestions and plans that help to solve the problems confronting the church today. There were practical discussions and addresses that covered well the training and efficiency necessary to Christian growth and education. Means of meeting the needs of the pupil in the various stages of his development, the duties and responsibilities of teachers, superintendents and other officers were outlined in a beneficial way.

The interest and attendance was good and especial credit is due those who were on program in making it a success, tion," he shall "fashion anew" the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory, according to the working whereby he is able to subject all things to himself.

Is there any want of our nature that is not provided for in Christ? O the folly of turning away from Christ, who is the perfection and fullness of our being, to philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the ways of the world. To recognize in him one who is able to harmonize all the contradictions of our nature and to sound out into completeness all the deficiencies of our lives, is the fundamental condition of all true and right living. This is why faith in him is the primal law of spiritual renewal, and the confession of him, in this unique relation, was made the foundation of his church. "For us, therefore, who believe, is the preciousness." That is, faith is the channel by which the blessings in Christ are conveyed to men. It is unbelief, both in church members and non-church members, that impoverishes souls and deprives them of the riches of God's grace in Christ. Once the soul, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, sees in Christ the fulfillment of all its holiest desires and aspirations, he becomes the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely."

But why, since we are "made full" in Christ, and all our emptiness of soul is provided for in his infinite fullness, do we, who believe, experience, so often the consciousness of spiritual leanness, and of weakness in the presence of temptation?

Why must we often say with the Psalmist: "Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me?" The answer to these questions is to be found in the fact that our possession of, and full participation in, this fullness of Christ, is a process which advances towards completion according to the law of spiritual growth. Here, as everywhere else, in God's great universe, it is, "first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear."

Those who expect in one bound to spring into the perfection of Christian character, and the fullness of spiritual life and blessing, have not learned God's method. These provisions for all our needs, in Christ are regarded as ours and intended for us, but they must be appropriated by faith, and made our own through sanctification. He who would find complete soul rest in Christ, must take his voice and learn of him, meaning entire subjection to his will in all things. This involves many sacrifices which many are unwilling to make. Hence the low plane of spiritual life on which so many of us are content to live.

There is no evil which I feel more inclined to warn my young Christian friends against, than the setting up of a low standard of Christian life. Once the glowing and radiant example of Christ is lost sight of, and we settle down into a stereotyped mediocrity between ungodliness and sainthood, Christianity loses all its inspiration. Men must feel the heart throbs of Christ in their own bosoms, and enter into profound sympathy with his thought and life, to undertake, successfully, the great tasks of life.

In conclusion it is pertinent to ask whether God, having made such ample provision for our growth and perfection, will hold us guiltless if we fail to make the most of our opportunities and develop the highest possible type of character. Are we not under the same obligations to do our best, as to strive at all? So it seems to me.

May all who read these pages, inwardly resolve, God helping them, to avail themselves of the infinite treasures of truth and grace in Christ, that, filled with the fullness of God, they may reach forth their strong hands to those who are struggling with evil. May the fullness of grace and truth flow out in life giving streams, to the barren wastes of other lives and make them as fruitful gardens of the Lord.

OUR PRAYER

Our Father, who art in heaven, how great is the love which thou hast shown to the children of men. Not only didst thou so love the world as to give thine only begotten Son to redeem it from sin, but in him thou hast made provision for all our needs. Thou didst make him unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption.

Forbid, almighty God, that I should despise the riches of thy grace, or be satisfied with my present attainments in Christian knowledge and character. Grant unto me and unto all thy children, according to the riches of thy glory, that we may be strengthened with power through thy spirit in the inward man, that Christ may dwell in our hearts through faith, and that we may be filled with the fullness of God.

And now, unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in Christ Jesus, unto all generations forever and ever. Amen!

MISSIONS

Home Mission Notes. By G. C. Carpenter

Spokane

Several views of the Spokane new church building just received from the pastor, Brother Paul Miller, indicate that the Spokane brethren will soon dedicate a new church of which they can justly be proud. We understand that they expect to dedicate early in August, and it is our prediction that they will be pleased to receive a goodly number of dedication gifts from the brethren in various parts of the brotherhood who may be interested in that work. And may we not safely predict that there are a goodly number of brethren who are interested to the extent that they will make an investment as suggested above. Address Brother Paul Miller, 2404 Wall Street, Spokane, Washington. Do it now.

Muncie

Representatives of our General Home board and the Indiana District board met at Muncie, on June 30th and held a conference to consider the plans for the future of the mission work already begun in the Indiana district. Muncie is wide awake and has her wagon hitched to a star. And that is the right course, as some one says, "Hitch your wagon to a star, hold on tight, and there you are." Brother J. L. Kimmel, the efficient pastor, is a real leader and with a loyal church back of him results are assured. Muncie is anxiously looking forward to the erection of a new church building. The need is pressing. Watch Muncie.

Peru

The Summer Booster Campaign is proving a veritable enemy of the proverbial "summer slump," winning a splendid victory in the first round, covering the month of June. It is the hope of the Sunday school that July and August and September will witness similar victories. The fight is on. Peru has set her face toward a permanent church building, and is at work building a fund for that purpose and hoping for more favorable conditions for such an effort. The boosting of prices has been more contagious than the "flu" and even more persistent.

Huntington

Brother Brower, the always-at-it pastor, is optimistic concerning the work of the Brethren church at Huntington. Let the many friends and supporters of the work there stand faithfully by Brother Brower and victory will come. It will take time, but it should be remembered that it takes time to grow an oak.

"Peter and Paul were both conscientious men, and therefore in controversy neither of them could yield," said Mr. Finney; "and therefore either of them could afford to yield," said Rev. Fairchild, Mr. Finney's successor in office.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

COMPTON AVE., LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The work at Compton Avenue continues to go forward. Since the last report Children's Day and Brethren Day have been fittingly observed. The Children's Day program was cared for by Mrs. Pearl Falk, assistant superintendent of the Primary Department of the Sunday school. The program was of a high order and was much enjoyed by those present. The Young People's Bible class of the Sunday school was made responsible for the Brethren Day program. They did their work well and a great deal of information was disseminated that will prove beneficial to our work in the days before us.

Our prayer meeting continues to be well attended. The high mark in attendance was on June 11 when 78 were in attendance. We are averaging around the 60 mark which is but little below 50 percent of our membership. Besides the regular prayer meeting there is held weekly a children's prayer meeting. This meeting convenes one-half hour before the regular Wednesday evening prayer meeting. The spirit of prayer has laid hold on the children and practically all who attend lead in public prayer and publicly testify. What an influence these people will be in the years before us.

There has been manifest such a desire for definite Bible study that Friday evening of each week has been set aside for this purpose. We are now studying Revelation and much interest is being manifested.

The Sunday school and Christian Endeavor societies continue to do commendable work. Another distinguished honor has come to us just recently. The Christian Endeavor Juniors carried away the honors at the State Christian Endeavor convention held in Long Beach, June 28 to July 2. With a delegation of nearly two hundred percent of their enrolled membership they were easily the winners over all others. Those of you who take the Christian Endeavor World may be given an opportunity to see a picture of our "bunch." This victory speaks much for the loyalty of the Juniors and is a fine commentary on the work of those who have care of the Juniors. Brethren A. E. Neher and Wm. Broad have been caring for the Junior work and have been able to prove themselves efficient workmen. The securing of banners has become quite a habit with the Compton Avenue people. The Sunday school has been awarded all the banners offered during the past four years in the South East Sunday School District, the Intermediate Christian Endeavorers were three times winners and now the Juniors are the successful ones. The pastor has a reason to be proud of the work and enthusiasm of these departments of our work.

The Lord continues to bless us with souls. Just recently six more, all adults and heads of families, have been added to our membership. These added to four which have not yet been reported makes a total of ten additions since last report. The continued growth gives us joy and we give God all the praise.

It is the hope of the writer that he may be privileged to attend the National Conference this year. The church voted a vacation for this purpose. The church voted permission for the pastor to hold a short meeting while on the trip if he saw fit to do so. This leads me to say that I might be able to hold a short meeting with some church conveniently located, immediately after conference.

We solicit your prayers for his continued blessing on our work.

THE COLUMBUS BRETHREN

The work here is moving slowly forward. I say slowly because it has not been going forward as fast as I wanted it to. Since Brother Thomas left, we have had five baptisms. Two of these confessed Christ in one of our evening services, two in our regular prayer meetings and one during our January revival. Our congregation is not as fluctuating as a year ago. I think this is due to the activity among our new members. For instance, in our prayer meetings the attendance has more than doubled. It is a great joy to the pastor to see these young Christians work. They do not only come to each service themselves, but urge the older members, which should lead the younger, to become more active. We are encouraged to believe that by the Lord's and these members' help the Columbus work shall go forward with less difficulty. Members and pastor agree in this that if the pastoral work in the community could be attended to as it ought to be, the difficulties would not last so very long. However I am not able to make $21.00 a week cover both ends for life's necessities. Furthermore sickness most of the time since here, the death of a child and Ruth's operation made it still more difficult to manipulate financial problems. Although handicapped in these measures, God has in every respect been very good to us, and we are looking forward to the brighter days.

Brother Horne had several accidents this year and most of us thought his recovery impossible but he is still here and is now attending nearly every service. For Brother and Sister Horne we have nothing but praise; they are always loyal and ready to do their, yes more than their part.

I would not forget to write a few words about Brother Glenn King who so nobly stood by us for months without fail. So many coming to Columbus don't want to find our church. This was not the case with Brother Glenn. His work in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor is much appreciated by pastor and people.

S. E. CHRISTIANSEN.

FROM THE WELSH EVANGELIST

The closing days of my evangelistic work for the season have been very busy ones. My reports this time will come from the places where already, reports have come from the pastors. However the viewpoint of the Evangelist is always acceptable, hence this news.

Peru, Indiana.—We had a splendid meeting here all things considered. This field is by no means an easy one, and Brother Carpenter and his people have big problems ahead. The best outlook at the present time is the Sunday school and under the special direction of the pastor it is growing very nicely. Lively interest is being taken in the different classes which speaks well for the future of the school.

The meeting itself, well, it was full of interest. Delegations came in from Mexico, Denver, Loree, Center Chapel, and North Manchester, and together with some visiting Methodist brethren who were attending their conference being held in Peru at the time, there was plenty of fire and water furnished to make it lively for the forces of evil.

The Little Brown church standing as it does with the Bible as its creed, and with a pastor who is fearless in his ministry, has, I feel sure, a brighter day ahead. Good strong churches are not built in a day, and therefore it may take sometime to do what ought to be done, but success will be theirs, I feel sure, if they stand together as one great army for the right. May God bless the people of Peru.

Huntington, Indiana.—From Peru we came to Huntington. Mexico consented to hold off their meeting until the fall which gave us the chance to enter the second time into a campaign here with Brother Brower and his people. We found a hot reception awaiting us, as the weather suddenly became torrid. However we found pastor and people striving hard to do and dare for the Master. When we look back and see what the people here have gone through, and then the splendid interest now being manifested, we are bound to say that their faith will be rewarded ere long and Huntington will boast in the Lord of her great victory. With their attractive church building, their splendid talent, together with the able leadership of Brother Brower, I am confident that our prediction will come true not many days hence.

Tiosa, Indiana.—When we left Huntington we thought our work in evangelism was over for the summer, but soon there came another call to Tiosa. We were to have held a meeting here in the fall of last year but the deadly "flu" dealt us a blow and we went to other parts. Brother Oxley is pastor here; I found him a fine man who is very willing to do his part in the community and church for the betterment of both. We were only there one week, from Monday until Friday evening, but we had splendid crowds and good interest. Two made the good confession and had the weather conditions been more favorable I think a great revival would have resulted.

Ardmore, Indiana.—Before concluding my article I am sure a word concerning my work for the summer would not be burdensome. We are now engaged in pastoral work at Ardmore, about three miles outside of the South Bend city limits and also at Glendora, Michigan. The Ardmore membership comprises largely those who were formerly members of the old Fairview congregation. While pastor at South Bend we felt the need of a rural church in the surrounding districts. Now we have one, and Fairview though dead yet speaketh. We have a very neat building and a future that looks very encouraging indeed. Recently we had a special Brethren Day and the attendance and interest was fine. Brother Rench brought to us in the afternoon the "History of The Brethren Church in Two Hundred Years." It was a message that carried with it deep conviction of the faith of our fathers. This was followed by a short meeting of a week's duration, preceding the communion. On Friday evening of the communion week we received into the church 15 in all. These were some of the former Fairview members, who came by letter and relation and the others were the converts of the recent meeting held by Brother MacInturf of Goshen, Indiana. Ardmore has a future and is going at things at the start in a great way. We have secured a new Bible and a boys' class presented the church with new hymn books, and this together with a very fine individual communion set, the gift of Brother Frank Garber of Belleville, Ohio, made the services doubly interesting and impressive. We shall write more later of this field.

Glendora, Michigan.—This is one of the neglected fields of Michigan, started by Brother Bame, a number of years ago. However we have a few loyal people who have started out to win. I have made a few trips there and believe that before long we will have something worth while to report.

This is our work for the summer season, and we have every reason to think that God will prosper us because of the faithful people whom we serve. May God bless our work and workers everywhere. After July 1st, our address for the summer will be Winona Lake, Indiana. Please address all letters there.

A. E. THOMAS.

KRYPTON, KENTUCKY

I don't believe the $30.00 that Sister Hood gave last fall to Krypton has ever been reported through the Evangelist. It has been serving a splendid purpose as we added a few more dollars to it and purchased three beautiful pulpit chairs and a rug for the church. Thanks to you and to all others who have remembered the work here with such generous giving.

Perhaps you would be glad to know that we consider the work here in splendid condition, the best of any time in its history. The only thing we lack now to make it complete is a teacher to begin school some time in July. We are still praying that need will be supplied. Will not some conscientious worker say Here am I send me, and will wire

Brother G. C. Carpenter or myself and plan to come at once? Our present need is not money; it is the individual. If it were money, we would get around it some way; we always have. The people here have certainly shown themselves worthy in the way of giving. Have you realized that the work here has been in a large way self-supporting? Our teachers have been paid from the field, and this year we have already raised on the pastor's salary, $211.00. We are going to try hard to raise half the pastor's salary on the field, this coming year, and I believe we can. Preaching GIVING has been one of our hobbies, but it is certainly gospel. We have found that the people here enjoy giving when they once get the habit and the spirit. We received $5 more the other day, on foreign missions which makes us $45.00 for our first offering of this kind. And how the people here enjoy bringing little gifts into the home. There are very few days pass but what some one brings us something, potatoes, beans, meat and occasionally they have some chickens they wish to enter the ministry; fryers are coming in now, one lady today was even kind enough to bring in some young chicken, ready to serve, and this morning a fellow down town sent us twelve or fifteen canteloupes. These people make a pastor love them, regardless of any shortcomings they might have. The writer never expects to find a place where he will be treated with more generosity than here. Our dear Brother and Sister Remple, our successors, will no doubt be interested in this part of the speech.

A couple of weeks ago at our regular prayer meeting service we had four confessions, three fine young ladies and a man about 45 years old. They came out Sunday morning through a hard rain and were baptized after the morning service. Last Sunday morning we had another confession, or rather this was one of our loyal supporters who belonged to the Presbyterian church and expects to be baptized just as soon as his wife is able to come out. We have planned for Brother G. E. Drushal to hold a ten days or two weeks' meeting for us, beginning July second, and we would like to be remembered through the brotherhood, by daily prayer.

JAS. S. COOK.

RIPON, CALIFORNIA

Our evangelistic services concluded here Sunday morning, June 22. We waged war on the forces of evil and indifference for three weeks. We are able to report much good done but not a big showing so far as new converts are concerned. We had one precious addition by baptism. There were four reconsecrations. These reconsecrations were not of the type which join the revival meeting and let the church alone for the other services; but they are already showing splendid fruits of their renewed relationship with their Lord Jesus Christ.

Brother A. V. Kimmel who preached for us during our meetings deserves much credit for his tireless efforts. He taught a class in the study of Revelation every afternoon and preached every evening. There are some preachers who when they would learn what this field is would rather have preached our funeral service, But Brother Kimmel saw a few signs of life and by his devotion was able to add much to that life. We were very much pleased to have had this opportunity to work with our dear brother.

We have recently reorganized a Christian Endeavor society and the young folks are taking hold as they have not done in Ripon for a long time. We believe now there is a reasonable basis for steady growth here.

N. V. LEATHERMAN.

COLLEGE NOTES

The enrollment in the Summer School has been very encouraging, the total being ninety-one. This is the largest enrollment we have ever had in the summer sessions. It is to be hoped that some of these students will select Ashland as the college in which to do their regular college work.

Improvements on the interior of the main building are going forward. Last week the Prudential Committee let the contract for two large hot air furnaces to be installed one on each side of the building. There is already one under the chapel which heats both that room and the library above. Another is to be installed in the Gymnasium. These as well as the one in the Dormitory all burn coal so that the gas situation in Ohio will not interfere with the work of the college in the future as it has very seriously done within the past two years. Those who have passed a winter there will fully appreciate what it will mean to have the buildings warm for once since they were built.

The city council recently voted to pave the street west of the College grounds. Unless some way is found to defray this expense, it will mean an addition to the yearly budget.

The new catalog is off the press and is being mailed as fast as possible.

The Seminary. Those whom we expect to return as members of the Seminary this coming fall number 29 but we want many more than that in the Seminary this year. Dean Miller and I have set fifty as the mark which we must reach. If we could have fifty young men and women here who are preparing for the work of the church, it would be exceedingly encouraging. It is to the interest of all to increase the number in this department. Will not ALL the pastors lend a helping hand? Think what a source of power that would be from which to draw. The October Quarterly is to be devoted to the interest of the Seminary. Let conditions be here so that we can make a good showing in this quarterly. Dr. Miller is now on the Coast assisting the Brethren there. Correspondence relative to the Seminary addressed to me will receive prompt attention in his absence. Let us pray and work for a good year in the Seminary.

As previously announced, it is planned to have some of the ministers of the church come to the Seminary for a series of lectures. While no formal action has yet been taken, we will want our national officers and others to be present. This will acquaint the members of the Seminary with the men of the church and vice versa, and such an arrangement ought to operate to the good of all. The teachers in charge of the Seminary are men of rare spirituality and it is hoped to keep the spiritual state of this department up to high tension.

Opening Tuesday, September 16th, 1919
Plan to enter.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

This report comes after somewhat of a lull. But, when a man is so downright busy doing business that he simply has not time to prepare a report his silence ought to be altogether excusable. To say that I have been busy for the last several weeks does not express it. And besides, our work during most of the time has been amid almost unbearable heat.

We began the canvass at Milledgeville, Sunday morning, June 22nd. Brother Snyder, the pastor, and his wife, both being Ashland residents were both keenly interested in the outcome of the campaign for endowment in their congregation, and ready to co-operate to the fullest possible measure in putting it across. Moreover, Brother Snyder had repeatedly brought the approaching campaign clearly and squarely to the attention of his people, hence I found at Milledgeville not only a pastor, but also his people ready for business. This is always a very pleasant condition to meet when one arrives on a local field.

The Milledgeville result went $4,200. Brother Snyder and I shared the wish that the result might go up to that of Falls City—$5,500; but even though our wish was not realized, yet the Milledgeville result must be considered very good. And it means that Meyersdale must yield fourth place to Milledgeville, which makes the five highest congregations as follows,—Waterloo, Falls City, Conemaugh, Milledgeville and Meyersdale.

I am glad that Milledgeville placed one man in the thousand dollar class. It sure does please me to see how that thousand dollar class is growing: But on the other hand it makes me heavy hearted when I think of all the men and women I have met who refused to get into the thousand dollar class. And yet, from every standpoint, they belong in that class. Milledgeville also had a family to enlist at $600; also there were two enlist-

Watch Illiokota, Steady and Strong She Pushes the Mercury Towards the Top COLLEGE

ments of $250 each. The Milledgeville Sunday school also enlisted at second to top notch place. Conemaugh Sunday school went $500, and Milledgeville school went $350. It was the Milledgeville Sunday school that won the victory in the recent contest. I was in the Sunday school session when the result of the contest was announced, and needless to say, there was many a face beaming with pleasure and satisfaction. The S. S. C. E. in this church also invested in the cause of endowment in a very creditable manner.

My general stopping place while at Milledgeville was in the home of Brother Wilson Miller and his good wife. I was also entertained at different times in the homes of Brethren Wal Fike, Cal Miller, Joe Miller, Samuel Livengood, M. J. Snyder, and Sister Amanda Livengood. All of these good people being of Somerset county extraction, I need only say that Milledgeville hospitality is second to none.

Now then I come to another part of this report, viz, the part the Ford played, and it was truly no small part. It was here at Milledgeville that I struck what was a new combination to me,—I found an Englishman and a Ford hooked up together. My good friend Brother John Brand is an Englishman, and his automobile is a Ford. And Brother Brand placed that Ford at my disposal and with the very finest kind of good cheer drove me wherever I wanted to go. And now from actual observation I am prepared to say that an Englishman and a Ford make a perfectly good combination, which serves to prove once more that it is impossible to hitch a Ford wrong. As for Brother Brand, if I ever go back into a pastorate again I am going to do my best to import him into my congregation. But if Snyder is still at Milledgeville I will have war with him if I try to take John away. Well, thank you again, Brother Brand, for your real kindness to me, and thank you again Brother and Sister Snyder, and thank you again, all you good folks at Milledgeville, and may God richly bless and keep you all.

I will add just this interesting note: All of the Milledgeville result was cash and Liberty Loans but $700. We report next from Cerro Gordo. WM. H. BEACHLER, Campaign Secretary.

MINISTERIAL AND CHURCH EXCHANGE

The Brethren church of Warsaw, Indiana, wishes to employ a pastor to enter upon his services about General Conference time or soon after. Any minister interested may address the undersigned.

OWEN SWITZER, Warsaw, Indiana.

By order of the Board of Deacons.

THE HEATHEN BELIEVE

Amos R. Wells tells the story of a poor woman in the depths of Central Africa, who was drinking in the story of Jesus as the missionary told it to her. At last she broke out in exclamations of joy: "Oh," she said, this is the one that came to me so often in my prayers, I could not find out who he was."

IN THE SHADOW

HAZEN—Jacob C. Hazen died on June 28, 1919, at Fostoria, Ohio, from an illness caused by the infirmities of old age. He had attained the age of 81 years, 2 months and 14 days, having been born April 11, 1838, at Mt. Vernon, Ohio. He was a son of Jacob C. and Margaret Hazen. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted, and followed the flag to the close of the war. He was married to Miss Hattie Ebersole, June 3, 1867, to which union were born eight children, five of whom survive. They are, N. E. Hazen of Muncie, Indiana; Mrs. F. A. Krabill; Mrs. C. B. Newcomer; Mrs. Laura Marvin; and O. D. Hazen, all of Fostoria.

The deceased was a charter member of the Brethren church and was always active in all its work. The writer was intimately acquainted with Brother Hazen for twenty-five years. He was a member of my first pastorate, and to know him was to love and revere him. In all my associations with the family I have never heard an unkind word. I have always found the Bible on the library table and it showed usage. After his sight was gone to the extent that he could not read, I found his wife reading the Bible to him. In many respects he was an exceptional man. His loss will be felt not only by his wife and children but also by the community and the church. The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Brother Oberholtzer and Brother Loose.

M. S. WHITE.

FIKE—Elias D. Fike was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, July 1, 1852. When seventeen years of age he came with his parents to Illinois. In 1873 he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Lichty. He was one of the charter members of the Milledgeville, Illinois, Brethren church, and for many years was an official in the church. He was always loyal to the church and faithful in the Christian life; and all who knew him honored him for his sincerity, uprightness, truthfulness, and integrity. He departed this life June 2, 1919, interment in the Dutchtown cemetery. Funeral service by the writer.

MILES J. SNYDER.

WOOD—Ray Lee, the eleven months old son of Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Wood of near Roanoke, Virginia, died Sunday, June 29th. Funeral Monday at 3 o'clock from the family home, conducted by the writer.

L. G. WOOD.

LAIR—Peter W. Lair was born in Gilead, Indiana, January 26, 1867. He passed out of this life in Los Angeles, California, June 15, 1919, aged 52 years, 4 months and 19 days. Brother Lair was a man of strong convictions. He came from an ancestry strong in the faith of the Brethren church and for years was a member of that organization. Since living in South Los Angeles he has been identified with the Compton Avenue Brethren church. Funeral services held from the church by the undersigned, assisted by Elder T. H. Broad of La Verne, California.

J. C. BEAL.

BAILEY—George Earl Bailey was born near Carleton, Nebraska, October 18, 1893 and died at the family home, March 15, 1919, after a brief illness with influenza and pneumonia.

He had been a faithful member of the Brethren church of Carleton since he was 13 years old.

J. D. KEMPER.

MYERS—John M. Myers was born in Berlin, Somerset county, Pennsylvania in 1850 and died at his home in Enid, Oklahoma, May 7, 1919.

Brother Myers was a member of the Carleton, Nebraska, church and active in the affairs until his removal to Oklahoma several years ago.

Funeral services were held by Rev. Potter of the Baptist church of Enid.

KEIM—Lewis A. Keim, member of the First Brethren church, Los Angeles, California, but residing for the last several years at 2718 Chester Avenue, Bakersfield, California, fell asleep in Jesus June 14, 1919, at the age of 88 years, being born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, February 2, 1831. At the age of 21 he removed to Etina, Ohio, where he married Angelina Essex, March 30, 1854. She died July 16, 1875. December 25, 1876 he married Barbara A. Buechley at Meyersdale, Pennsylvania. She died October 10, 1887. December 23, 1888, he married Mrs. Hannah Giffin, a widow and mother of three children, at Hudson, Iowa, by whom he is survived. To this union was born one son, Lewis Samuel, December 21, 1893. This son enlisted as an engineer in the recent war and spent eight months in France. His father continually prayed he might live to see his son return home and on April 19th this year his prayers were answered by the son's return.

On May 30 he had a stroke of paralysis. He was unable to talk and suffered greatly until the end came on June 14.

He united with the German Baptist church about 1875 and when the Brethren church was organized he was one of the first to identify himself with it. He lived a consistent Christian and always took a warm interest in the work of the church. Both he and his wife were enrolled in the Home Department of our Sunday school and contributed regularly to our work here.

His body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Bakersfield, the funeral being conducted by the Baptist pastor of that place whose church they often attended.

A. P. REED.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

LAW-SPENSER—At the parsonage of the Milledgeville, Illinois, Brethren church, Wilbert Law of Savannah, Illinois, and Della Spenser of Milledgeville were united in marriage by the writer on May 6, 1919. The bride is a member of the Brethren church. The happy couple will make their home on a farm near Savannah, Illinois, and the best wishes of their many friends go with these young people as they begin their wedded life.

MILES J. SNYDER.

BECKNER-OVERSTREET—On Sunday of June 22nd, at the home of the bride's parents in Roanoke, Virginia, occurred the marriage ceremony of Delbert Oscar Beckner and Ethel Catherine Overstreet. Both are members of the First Brethren church of Roanoke, Virginia. Mr. Beckner has recently returned from France, where he served in the American army for more than a year. Mr. and Mrs. Beckner will continue their residence in Roanoke. Ceremony by the writer in the presence of a few invited guests.

L. G. WOOD.

BIRD-CUMBIE—At the parsonage, 1118 Gilmer Avenue, N. W., Roanoke, Virginia, on Thursday evening, June 26th, occurred the marriage ceremony of Miss Nora Cumbie to Mr. John Shannon Bird. The bride is a member of the Brethren church. They will continue their residence in Roanoke. Ceremony by the writer.

L. G. WOOD.

ALDRIDGE-BYERS—At the residence of the writer, in Roanoke, Virginia, on June 11th, occurred the marriage ceremony of Miss Annie Byers of Allegheny county, and Arthur Aldridge of Roanoke, Virginia. The bride is a member of the Brethren church at Buena Vista, Virginia. The groom just recently returned from France where he had served in the American army.

They will make their future residence in Roanoke. Ceremony by the writer.

"JESUS HIMSELF DREW NEAR"

Faint with the heat, and the length of the road,
I was oppressed with a wearisome load;
One came so tenderly, saying to me,
"Give me thy load, 'tis too heavy for thee"—
Jesus himself.

I was so poor: not a penny had I Clothing or food for the journey to buy;
One came and whispered, "Leave that to my care;
Wealth of a kingdom
with thee will I share."
Jesus himself.

I was so lonely for lack of a friend;
One came and offered me love without end,
Love that is mighty to strengthen and save,
Love that can triumph o'er death and the grave—
Jesus himself.

What though the valleys be many and deep;
What if the pathway be stony and steep;
Mountains, or moorland, or valley of death;
"I will be with thee," my Comforter saith—
Jesus himself.

Where Are the Children Who Ought to Be in Church?

At almost any church you may enter at the close of Sunday school and the beginning of the church services, you will find the children leaving for home or elsewhere and the adults (a few of them) taking their places for the hour of worship. When the audience is settled and the services have started you will scarcely see a child, unless it be one here and there who is in from the country and must wait for his parents to return home. The children are almost a wholly minns quantity; so different from the average audience of the church of a half of a century ago and more when the whole family to the smallest child went to church and sat together. Where are the children who ought to be in church? Why are they not in church? How will we get the children in church when they have grown to the age where their presence is really desired if they are not gotten in now? These are some questions that are pressing in upon the minds of the thoughtful church leaders today.

It is not difficult to answer the question, "Where?" There is no secret about it, for growing boys and girls cannot be kept in secret anywhere. They are found almost everywhere except in church. You can see and hear them on the streets and on the playgrounds, on the lawns and in the homes. The boys are playing ball, jumping, wrestling and running, climbing trees, digging in the earth and flying kites. The girls are "playing keeping house," putting dolls "to sleep" and taking them "out walking"; getting together in one another's homes, playing all sorts of games. Many of them are enjoying the out-of-door sports with the boys. Some have their heads buried in books. And many of them, boys and girls both, are poring over the Sunday "funny papers."

Why are they not in church? Here we have various answers. Many are not there because their parents do not encourage their attendance. Some parents think it is too trying on the children's nerves to keep them in church for an hour after they have attended Sunday school. They don't stop to think, however that they send them to day school for six hours a day for five days in the week and the little folks seem to thrive over it. Some parents think their children will cause too much confusion to keep them in church so they turn them loose on the streets where they can work off their surplus energy without annoying them or the pastor. They do not always sit quietly and sedately as older people, but a little disturbance in church occasionally is not to be compared with the disturbance they cause to the hearts of parents and pastors later in life by their refusal to step inside of the church or their congregating at places that influence their lives for evil. Some parents do not wish to go to church themselves and of course they are not concerned about sending their children. If they should send them, their "sending" would not be very effective; for as soon as the children got old enough to know better they would not spend their time at a place that was not worthy of the presence of their parents. Some children are not in church because the pastor and other church leaders do not encourage their attendance. Children are too annoying; they detract too much from the dignity of the worship. Some children are not in church because there is nothing there to interest them. The service is arranged, the music is planned and the sermon is prepared with a view to winning the attention of the adults. Every gun shoots over their heads. There is nothing for them. Why should they go?

But the question, How shall they be gotten in church when they have reached the age where they can be really useful and where everybody wants them, is very difficult to answer. Everybody who knows anything about human nature and presumes to give advice on related problems tells us that the Wise Man of old has given about the best advice that can be given, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Some however, make it stronger and say, Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he cannot depart from it." How in the world we can ever hope to get the young people in church and make of them regular attendants when we discourage or fail to encourage the children to attend is surely a puzzle. If youth is the habit forming period, as they tell us it is, why do we not concern ourselves with the most important task of forming right habits, even at the expense of a little inconvenience, confusion and extra work on our part; yes, and even at the expense of a little unwillingness on the part of the children? The wise parent should prayerfully decide what is best for his child and then religiously and wisely set about to see that that best is brought into the life of his child, and see that the child is directed by his wise, divinely influenced judgment rather than by the child's own whims. The farseeing pastor and church leaders should plan their services so as to appeal to the child when he does come. They should not give out the impression—as is often done more by act than by word—that an unpardonable sin had been committed against the house of God and the holy worship conducted for the old saints in Zion when a little confusion occurs from the restlessness of children. If we were more patient with the children and more concerned about their welfare, we would not need be so much troubled by the waywardness, Godlessness and the non-churchgoing disposition on the part of the adults. Jesus said, "Permit the children to come unto me and do not forbid or discourage them."

GROWING TOWARD GOD

Psa. 84:11.

Plants and vegetation and trees grow toward the sun. Even the heart of a tree trunk is not at the center, as many suppose, but the main body of every tree has an elliptical bulge toward the sun-prevailing side. In garden or grove or thicket, if any plants or trees or shrubs are in the shade, they struggle toward the sun, the source of their life and light and well being. It is in the same way that Christians ought to grow—toward God, the source of their life and light and blessedness. "The Lord God is a sun." It is our privilege and should be our delight to grow toward him.

SPIRITUAL FRAGRANCE

Mark 7:24.

"Why are you sweet?" was asked of the scented clay. "Oh, I was so long in the sweet society of the rose that I partook of the nature of the rose." Be much with Christ and you will partake of the nature of Christ. Prize every opportunity to be with him. Seek communion with him. Being with him, partaking of his nature, like him you cannot be hid. Your influence will be for good. You will live a spiritually fragrant life.

LOVE FOR THE CHURCH

Psa. 84:1, 2.

It is one of the tests of discipleship that if we love God we will love our brethren also. And let us not forget that, notwithstanding all that is said to the contrary by the enemies of Christ, there is a sympathy and a love, there is a spirit of encouragement and of helpfulness found among the members of Christ's church that is not found in the outside world. The church has faults enough, and does not profess to be perfect; but one of the first commendations of her early days was the remark of her enemies: "See how these Christians love one another." And, despite all the flings to the contrary, the time has never come yet when her members cannot truly sing:

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love:
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR?

Luke 10:36.

"Who is my neighbor?" Every one I can help. The whole world our parish, the whole race our neighbors. We should seek to be the friend of every one who is oppressed, or neglected, or afflicted, or sick, or in prison, or poor, or an orphan, or a heathen, or a slave, or an idiot, or starving, or dying—to have a world-wide friendship exercised wisely, discretely, with good sense and in the spirit of both love to God and love to our fellows.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Have YOU paid YOUR Kentucky mission pledge yet? See Brother Carpenter about it.

Brother George W. Kinzie is leaving Clay City, Indiana, where he has done a good work. He speaks a good word for his people whom he is leaving. He is open to a call to another pastorate, or to evangelistic work.

Brother J. A. Garber announces an opportunity on the Sunday School page that ought not to be overlooked by the Sunday schools that are not yet in Front Line position. Organize your class and order your books and you can qualify on point 5. Get busy.

All Miami Valley churches will read with interest the program for the Life Work conference to be held at Gratis. Some fine things are in store for them and there ought to be a large delegation from every church in the Valley. Brother Rowsey is dead in earnest after life work recruits in Ohio.

It has been a long time since we have heard from the Armstrong charge in Pennsylvania, but Brother Smith has been on the job and working hard. Brother H. M. Harley of Pittsburgh, has recently helped him in a revival meeting. The people appreciated Brother Harley's services greatly. Brother Smith is getting his people awake to the importance of teacher training in the Sunday school, especially at Brush Valley.

We have a number of fine young student pastors, and among those who are showing splendid promise and are already doing very creditable work while at the same time earnestly preparing themselves for larger work, is Brother Fred Vanator, a former Warsaw boy. He is pastor of Homerville and Williamstown and the work at these two places is looking up under his care. Both churches are repairing and beautifying their places of worship. Brother and Sister Vanator are both taking school work at Ashland and are making the best possible use of their time.

Some of our Brethren have in times past complained that there were so many "special days," but the Lanark Brethren under the efficient leadership of Brother B. T. Burnworth, seem to delight in and to thrive under the observance of many "special days." Read Brother Burnworth's letter in this issue and see how faithfully they have covered the field. We note they have a special interest in Ashland College; doubtless they have a right to be proud of their representatives on the College faculty; this fact will doubtless make Brother Beachler a welcome and happy guest.

You will be interested in Dr. Jacob's "College Notes," especially in the fact that such a large and active interest is being taken in the college by the pastors who are sending the names of prospective students to the president. Dr. Jacobs told the editor personally that the prospects were exceedingly bright for the coming year. It might be well for the various district conferences as well as General Conference to put before their assemblies in large letters the goal of the college for this fall, "50 STUDENTS IN THE SEMINARY AND 100 ACCREDITED STUDENTS IN THE COLLEGE THIS YEAR." Why not popularize the goal and thus secure a larger co-operation?

Brother M. J. Snyder, pastor of the Milledgeville, Illinois, church writes an interesting letter this week. He tells that the first prize in the Sunday school contest was won against difficulties, and doubtless as a result, they are now reaping a bigger reward than the $100. Milledgeville made a splendid record in the endowment campaign and have generously supported all the various departments of the church, but they have not neglected their pastor, but in calling him to another year of service they gave him an increase in salary. It is a hopeful sign that we see showing itself so generally, the increasing of the salaries of the ministers. Greater justice to the minister will help both toward the efficiency of the ministry that is serving today and towards the recruiting of the ministry of tomorrow.

Our "Campaign Notes" this week are from Cerro Gordo, Illinois, and they show that Brother Beachler is dead in earnest to put across the largest endowment possible for our beloved Ashland College. He finds that most of the people appreciate his earnestness and see the necessity of the project and contribute of their God-given money in a commendable way, and then there are others who have not yet caught the vision. But we will not be hopeless, for surely those who do not yet see the importance of an adequately equipped church school will by and by catch the vision and give in a liberal manner. Brother Beachler found some generous hearts at Cerro Gordo as at other places, and doubtless the contagion of their enthusiasm and interest will sooner or later be imparted to their neighbors. At any rate, Cerro Gordo pushed the mercury up to $107,000. Keep your eye on the mercury and your prayer on your pocket book.

From Brother Carpenter's "Mission Notes" we learn something of the work that another church is doing in Kentucky, and how they are pushing their work. What a challenge that mission board is putting up to its people! Ought we not to rally to the calls of our board and our missionaries more loyally? What a work we might do among our mountain neighbors if we but seized the opportunities that are ours. The work is but begun there, when shall we launch out into the deep? We notice also that our wide-awake mission secretary has been visiting some of the mission stations in Indiana and addressing the missions as he went. Brother Bowman reports his trip in this issue and he speaks some well-deserved commendations for our missionary pastors at Peru and Muncie. The future of both places is bright and it is worth our while to come to the support of these missions in a large way. Muncie needs a new building immediately. Brother Bowman also mentions a pleasant visit of himself and family to his former pastor, Brother Bame, at North Manches-ter.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Supreme Spirit of Sacrifice. By Vianna Detwiler

Jesus set forth the only true teaching on sacrifice when he said "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow me" (Luke 9:23). It is one thing to become saved, quite another to follow Christ and be his disciple. He only is a disciple of Christ who denies himself, and takes up his cross daily whatever that means. To call this self-denial,—doing without that which you most want, in the way of costly apparel, favorite dishes, pleasure trips, etc., is playing on the outer fringes of this great teaching of our Lord. It must be something vitally related to the crucifixion of Jesus, for it follows the verse where Jesus announces his death, "The Son of man must suffer many things—be killed—and the third day he raised up;" and is followed by the significant "For whosoever would save his life shall lose it."

There is only one cross for you to carry—your death. Not the physical death that ends the earthly life, but the living death, that takes up the cross daily. Paul puts it, "I die daily," "I am crucified with Christ," "Reckon yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin." Count your own feelings, preferences and ambitions the same as dead. But be on the alert as to the wishes of the Lord. The spirit of sacrifice is the spirit of renunciation. To "deny himself" is not denying the body or the taste for sweets, but to say "no" to the man, the entire being, to his way of thinking, his opinions. A man's thoughts represent himself. Let him forsake his thoughts. "For my thoughts are not your thoughts" (Isa. 55:8). The spirit of sacrifice is the denying of self. This is more than selfishness, but selflessness, self-effacement.

In the incarnation, Christ emptied himself as God; in the crucifixion, as man. This giving up, erasing of oneself, or suffering which always makes its appeal to the heroic, is the heart of Christ's teaching. Israel read the glory of the Messiah with eyes closed to the suffering.

A Hebrew child in a mission school said, "Isaiah must have written the 53rd chapter after he became a Christian. Christian Science teaches, the main thing is to be well and happy and escape all suffering. The spirit of suffering is the spirit of sacrifice!"

We have thought that the war awoke the people to carry out this teaching of Christ on sacrifice, taking up the cross. We awoke to the fact that the war, as a whole, has worked exactly the opposite. Not that there has not been a giving of life and large sums for the sake of others; but has there not been a spirit of self-exaltation, seeking to outdo others, expecting honor? Has not the natural pride of man been appealed to in the promotion system? In the unparalleled achievements, the making of implements of war, has there not been a spirit of "see what man can do? The need of the hour is the spirit that will do a work which will show "What God has wrought. It is the natural spirit of man to help himself, to accomplish all by himself. Is that why it is hard for some of you to sit still and submit to another washing your feet,—you feel like doing it yourself? For the same reason, you were slow to appreciate being saved by grace,—everything done by another, you felt like having a hand in the securing of salvation for yourself. The spirit of sacrifice is the spirit that works for the glory of another.

Let us have a care that the childish spirit of "see who'll beat" does not fasten its fangs in the effort of enlarging our church borders,—one church trying to outdo another in raising large sums. The amount ought to be larger, provided the motive in giving is for the love of souls, and not to make a good showing. And the sums would be larger, if each member had taken up his cross,—death. Having gone through the death-reckoning process, there is nothing left to hurt in giving a large sum. In all Christ's teachings, he struck at the motive of a deed. We only are Christlike when we do things for the same reason that he did them—always to please the Father. Many a generous heart has given to a noble cause, but left his heart more puffed up than if he had not given, because his motive was selfish, and God could not place it to his credit as it lacked the spirit of Scriptural sacrifice.

Christ called out those willing to follow without money or honor,—the great test of a leader. The spirit of sacrifice is the spirit of true leadership, as expressed in the strong character of Moses, whose meekness never permitted him to seek for honor; he sought rather to evade leadership. Zwemer, through whom such a marvelous work has been accomplished among the Moslems, spoke in the city of Baltimore recently. The impression on the hearers was that he didn't count, but God did everything.

In conclusion we see that man's method of sacrifice is wholly different from God's, as we see in Christ's answer to Peter when he objected to the Messiah as a suffering One,— "Thou savorest not the things of God but the things of men" (Matt. 16:23). Suffering is an essential element of the Christ life, but human nature recoils from it (Isaiah 55:9). "As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." Deny, say "no" to your way of thinking, accept the idea of suffering and you will have solved the problem of sacrifice, with self denial as an outcome. The supreme spirit of sacrifice is indeed the need of the hour.

A Christian Example. By S. S. W. Hammers

For I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you (John 13:15).

When the great evangelist was in Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, he told his audience that if any desired to wash feet they should wash those who needed it most, then he received a snickering response and evidently some of the audience thought what fools mortal men can be. We ask, Does the New Testament say that Jesus washed the disciples' feet because they needed it? If you think their feet were needing washing read the 7th, then the 10th verse of John 13. If a man is tendered 20 gold dollars, will he take nineteen and refuse the twentieth? If so, for what reason? We have heard preachers say that this was "an example," to be duplicated only spiritually; that it was not necessary to actually practice it, just so we are humble in heart. Now if this is true it will also work in other places. Would any man, a Christian, say it is not necessary to practice Luke 6:31? Would a Christian man say such passages as are here referred to, are only to be recognized in a spiritual way? If this should be the case then we are all badly mistaken and the Christian Scientists are nearly right. Are we only to imagine that Christ is the Head of the church? Are we only to imagine that we love one another and never express our compassion for others? See James 2:15-17. What profiteth this? See John 3:18, our love must be practical, which means "practiced." But we heard a preacher say, we do not need our feet washed as often today as they did in the hot climates of the Holy Land. The New Testament gives us but one record of Jesus washing the disciples' feet in three and one-half years. So we see that this could not be an example of necessity, for they surely washed their feet many times during the three and one-half years.

We will say to all professing Christians, If you are saved through the blood of Christ by the power of the Holy Ghost, you do not need to have your feet washed for the necessity of it, but for the obedience to Christ's example and command and for your practice of humility. Christ said, "I have given you an example." This is an example. I have shown you how to do it. If I, your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. Now when were they to wash one another's feet? Not that night, for feet washing was over for that night. He was instructing them for the future. This is proof that it was an ordinance to be observed in the future. If the precepts and examples and commands of Christ are not for observance as set forth in the New Testament, how should they read in order for us to observe them?

Now if the Savior's language as found in John 13:5, 14, does not teach feet washing, how in the name of high heaven should it read to teach it? If in its present plainness, we cannot understand it, how plain and clear must it be that we might understand? Why can Christians understand the instructions on other ordinances and not those on feet washing? If feet washing is not one of the conditions of salvation, what stronger proof have we for observance of the Lord's supper and the communion? If we can get to heaven by not observing feet washing, why can we not reach heaven by not observing the communion, the Lord's supper, prayer and repentance. If we can reach heaven by not observing one command and example of Christ, then why not by neglecting all? In fact, if all the ordinances and commandments are not for our observance, why did Christ give us a whole New Testament? If we can have our own plan of salvation, why have the Word of God? God says we are to obey from the heart the whole form of doctrine which he delivered to the saints. Christ has never left a loophole, by which to escape one of his ordinances or commandments.

We heard a man once say he would never follow Jesus down into the water and be buried with him in baptism when the weather was at the zero mark. But Christ has so arranged that there can be no excuse for not observing any of his ordinances given by precept and example. He gives us July and August, hot months, and warm water in which to be baptised, so that there is always a way if there is any desire. The same is true of feet washing. One man told Christ to his face, that he should never wash his feet. That did not make the law of feet washing void. Christ simply said the man could have no part with him. We were once in a certain church where feet washing was not practiced and feet washing happened to be the Sunday school subject that morning and the preacher taught the Bible class. One of his members asked the question, "Was feet washing intended to be a church ordinance?" The reverend gentleman said, "No. It is only a 'bum' ordinance, the Pope of Rome gathers twelve 'bums' once a year, and washes their feet. It's only a 'bum' ordinance. The Dunkers and Mennonites and a few other sects observe it as a church ordinance." We remarked that in the darkest ages of popery, God never left himself without a witness. And today with a world lying in wickedness it cannot be said that there is not a remnant which keep the commandments of Christ. And I am glad that the reverend gentleman named the Brethren church as one of them.

Gettysburg, Pennsylvania.

We Be Brethren.

"And Abram said unto Lot, Let there be no strife I pray thee between me and thee. . . for we be brethren. . . Is not the whole land before thee?"

The whole land is yet before us. And are we not brethren?

Now that the great world war is ended and as there is likely to be the greatest opportunity for the spreading of the gospel to all nations. Why should there be any dissensions among us of like faith?

The harvest is great and the reapers are few. In our own country there is need of the greatest possible concerted effort to spread the gospel teachings. Foreign fields will be open for the work of the Master as they have never been before.

Brethren day is passed. We have discussed in our various organizations the history of our church and its fathers. We have seen how a few brethren several centuries ago under very discouraging circumstances bound themselves together in an organization to try to learn and teach the gospel in its entirety and its purity without regard to the scorn and torture that the world might thrust upon them. We have seen this little body of the faithful steadily growing until at present there is a mighty working organization using its energy and means to spread the teaching of a full gospel of light to a benighted world.

I think it can truly be said, and that with a degree of pride that would not be displeasing to our Master, that the supreme ambition of this organization has at all times been to stick to the teaching of the Word rather than to make concessions that might help to increase its membership.

It was a little flock that followed the Master when he lived on earth. Considering the multitudes that inhabit the earth at the present time it is still a little flock that follows his teachings as we understand them. There were but a few who gathered in the upper room and participated in the first feet-washing ceremony.

Even though the Master said to one on that occasion, "If I wash thee not, thou hast not part with me," and later to all, "I have given you an example that ye should do as

By Martin R. Goshorn

I have done to you," yet after a lapse of almost two thousand years there are but a comparatively small number who are willing to take him at his word and to do his bidding. Indeed we all rejoice together in our common faith in the literal interpretation of the teachings of the Master. We all accept the same mode of baptism. We have a common faith in the teachings of non-resistance, non-conformity, non-swearing, temperance, and the performances of the various church ordinances. But like Paul found the Corinthian brethren, we too are yet carnal; there is among us envying and strife and divisions.

Though the great fundamental principles of the gospel are believed in common by use all there are divisions among us. We of a common faith now work under separate names and separate organizations. But are we not brethren? Are we not working in a common belief and faith for the same Master? And would it not be more pleasing to him to see us working together in complete harmony?

The Church of the Brethren is raising its hundreds of thousands of dollars to send its missionaries to the foreign land to preach and teach the gospel, and we Brethren are doing our best to send as many missionaries to foreign fields as we can possibly secure and maintain there. And what are they all trying to do? They are trying to teach those in darkness "the faith once delivered to the saints." When they have sown the seed and God has given the increase, who can tell the difference between the child born into the faith through the teaching of the missionaries sent by the Church of the Brethren to India or the one born into the same faith through the teaching of the missionaries sent by our church to South America? "By their fruits ye shall know them." Have they not both "obtained a like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and the Savior, Jesus Christ?" And if the two newly converted brothers of India and South America should meet and talk over their family relationships to God, the Father, and Jesus whom they now know as their elder brother, would they not at once have a family reunion because of the fact that they have found that they were both members of the same household of faith? Would they not immediately love one another as little children of one family and go on arm in arm about their Master's business?

Brethren of America, of whatever name you may be, let there be no strife between us. Let us overlook whatever little differences may exist between us in church government at home and go forth to conquer. We believe that the differences that exists between us in our home churches will never exist between, or be known by our converts in foreign fields. The great light they receive will be so bright and glorious to them that they will be unable to see or understand the little things about which we quibble. What care they whether they be called Brethren, Church of the Brethren, Dunkards, Tunkers or what not, just so they have received that precious faith that makes them one with Christ and heirs of the kingdom. Then why should conditions be such that we could not work together at all times and in all places, at home and in the mission fields, counting our labors mutual, our rewards common, our all Gods? Our sympathies should all be one. Our forces should be united under our commander Christ." The whole world is before us. Let there be no strife between us," and in his name we shall surely conquer.

Let that feeling of charity continue to grow until our mutual love for the Master has become so strong that all else has been forgotten and our common belief and faith will have so knit us together that all our forces may march forward to victory under a common name as well as a common banner in the service of "Our Father which art in heaven."

The Unknown Book. By T. Darley Allen

A Chicago newspaper editorially refers to the Bible as "the unknown book," claiming that although it is found in nearly every home, comparatively few men and women have more than an extremely superficial knowledge of its contents. No doubt there are Christians in every church in the land who are readers of the Book daily and are familiar with its spiritual and moral teachings and its history; but educators and others in a position to know, assert that even among those who have had the advantages of college training, there are not many, comparatively, having a worthwhile acquaintance with this, the greatest of all books, nor thinking the subject of Bible study worth their attention, although they would be ashamed to be thought ignorant of the writings of the leading novelists and poets. An Indiana college president has said that many a university student would not know whether to turn to the Old or the New Testament if asked to find the prophecies of Daniel.

The greatest of all reasons for studying the Bible is found, of course, in the fact that it is able to make us wise unto salvation; but from other standpoints as well it is indeed the Book of books.

No person who is seeking an education can afford to neglect the Bible, which, as has been well said, will excellently prepare all who familiarize themselves with its thought and phraseology for both literature and life. The King James Version more than any other work, not excepting even Shakespeare, has influenced English thought and speech; and as John Richard Green has said, "As a mere literary monument the English of the Bible remains the noblest example of the English tongue, while its perpetual use made it from the instant of its appearance the standard of our language."

Whatever may be thought of Swineburne's statement that the New Testament gained beyond all power of expression in being translated from the original Greek into "divine English," we can feel certain, because of the testimonies of many scholars, that, to quote one of them, our Bible "is not simply a translation, but a living reproduction of the Scriptures in idiomatic English. It reads like an original work, such as the prophets and apostles might have written in the seventeenth century for English readers. It reveals an easy mastery of the rich resources of the English language and blends with singular felicity Saxon force and Latin melody" (Roberts' Companion, page 84). "To the study of the King James Version" says Professor Harwood T. Pattison, "our great writers are largely indebted for the sobriety, the strength and the sweetness which distinguish their best efforts."

Two writers whose style has been highly praised in recent years are Joseph Conrad and Frank T. Bullen, and it was to their study of the Bible that they owed their powers of expression.

Walter Savage Landor, praising the literary style of Charles Dickens, asked him where he got it and was told, "From the New Testament, to be sure."

Stanley, the African explorer, a writer of wonderful charm, had "a style originally deficient in the essentials of distinction," so a critic teases us, but obtained his power to express himself in excellent English from studying the Bible. A writer in the New York Tribune once said of him: "He has read, I will venture to guess, the greater prophets of the Old Testament and the epistles in the New Testament till his mind has become saturated with them. There is no imitation of any of these writers, or no conscious imitation. . . . But they have modified his habits of thought and his methods of expression. He has brooded over them in the recesses of his awful forest till they have become part of his spiritual and part of his intellectual life."

It was a custom of Edmund Burke before speaking in parliament to read a chapter of Isaiah. Edward Everett made a study of the book of Proverbs for theoretical purposes.

To be ignorant of Scripture is to be at a great disadvantage in reading our leading authors, whose writings abound with references and allusions to the sacred book and in many instances have the very words of the Bible woven into their lines.

Indeed, some important contributions to literature would not have been written except for Bible study. To mention only a few, Bryant was indebted to the book of Job for the thought that suggested "Thanatopsis," Byron's "Darkness" was the result of its author's reading Jeremiah, and Wordsworth's "Ode to Immortality" would not have been written had its writer not received the idea from Paul's chapter on the resurrection. Professor Harwood T. Pattison says: "Spenser met his Red Cross Knight in the Ephesians. Milton's genius caught fire in the garden of Eden and on the mountain of temptation. . . . It is difficult to conceive of Cowper apart from the influence which the Bible exerted over him. It stirred the tranquil nature of Wordsworth in his most heroic moments; the early training in Bible text and teaching went far to make a theologian of Robert Browning; while Emerson and Longfellow, Lowell and Whittier are children either of the manse or of the meeting-house."

So, the Bible cannot be an "unknown book" to anyone who aspires to more than a very ordinary educational equipment. And no one who desires to reach the public, either through the voice or pen, can afford to neglect it. Its diligent students lack neither ideas nor the power to express their thoughts in effective English.

Cleveland, Ohio.

The Stars and Stripes, the official publication of the United States army, edited by an army officer, published an outrageous cartoon reflecting upon prohibition amendment to the Constitution which he had sworn to defend with his life. A red-blooded Y. M. C. A. secretary dumped the bundle of papers intended for his hut into a canal, and instead of meekly submitting when charges were brought against him, he brought charges against the editor of the paper on the ground that he had attacked the Constitution he was sworn to uphold. The tribunal in the case took this common sense American view of it and the officer lost his place as editor, and the Y. M. C. A. secretary was exonerated.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Teaching Ministry of the Church—A Plea for its Resumption

By W. D. Furry, A. M., Ph. D.

My people are destroyed because of lack of knowledge.—Hosea.—Go, make disciples of the nations—teach.—Jesus.

Of the various and varied ministries of the Christian church by means of which it has so profoundly and beneficently influenced human life and society, there are two types of ministry, which stand out more prominently than all others and which, if held in rightful relations to one another and fully and faithfully exercised may be expected to fulfill in completest possible manner the task of the church in modern life—the ministry of religious teaching and the ministry of social service. Today the world is making very exacting demands of the church at these two points. Prior to the outbreak of the World War the demand for social service easily took precedence over the demand for religious instruction. Today the demand is predominately the other way round. It is the burden of the present effort to urge the resumption of the ministry of religious instruction upon the part of the church without in any degree discrediting or disparaging the place and importance of the ministry of social service.

A brilliant preacher has recently said that this is not the time of the Ecclesia docens. Certainly no person will question the judgment that the teaching ministry of the church has not been given the emphasis today which was originally given it and which it deserves. We are quite familiar with the preacher-evangelist, the preacher-efficiency expert, and even the preacher-healer. But in the thought and practice of the modern church the preacher-teacher is neither in the foreground nor in demand. In the working programme of the modern church the teaching of religion has not been given a prominent place. Rarely does one receive instruction in a modern church. There is no more damaging criticism of modern preaching than its failure to instruct. At the present hour romantic religion, religion of the sentiments and temperament has largely taken the place of the evangelical and the conscience. That the modern man is both ignorant of the Bible and indifferent to it is no compliment to the Christian ministry. The Gospel of Christ, which we are commissioned to preach, has a distinctive conception of personal and social life. We are fully persuaded today, that what man is to believe concerning God and the duties God requires of man under the present circumstances, are not understood. The world struggle is proof, both positive and patent, that even Christian peoples have confused notions who God is and what He requires of his children. Today as in Hosea's, God's people are destroyed because of lack of knowledge. The industrial and political rivalries and jealousies which brought on the world catastrophe were led and approved by persons who considered themselves children of God and who possessed little idea that he to whom they confessed allegiance taught principles of personal and corporate life which demanded specific courses both in the industrial and political spheres. The church, their presumed teacher, yea, their commissioned teacher, must bear the blame for leaving the nations in ignorance. If, therefore, the world of tomorrow is to be made proof against the experiences of the past four years, the church must resume her teaching ministry on a scale not seen since the days of the Protestant Reformation.

The Church of the Pioneers

The church of the Christian pioneers was primarily an ecclesia docens and its continuance in the world was deemed necessary to the survival of the Christian faith. Our Lord has promised never to forsake the church but the church has it in its power to forsake him. Jesus was the first preacher-teacher. When the multitudes came he taught them and he was recognized as a teacher who taught unlike other men. The first impression of Jesus recorded in the Gospels is that he taught "as one having authority." Nicodemus doubtless voiced the conviction of the more serious minded in his salutation, "We know that thou art a teacher come from God." The addresses of Stephen, Paul and Peter, found in the Acts of the Apostles, were not sheer exhortations, mere sentimental appeals to men to repent but instructions in the truth committed to them by Jesus Christ. They preached Christ, his crucifixion and resurrection, his ascension and his certain return in glorious triumph. They reasoned with men of temperance and righteousness and judgment. The great epochs in the history of the church followed and the method of Christ and the Apostles. The spiritual dynamic of the Protestant Reformation of the sixteenth century was the truths of Christ, which became luminous and invincible in the words of Luther and Melancthon. The secret of John Calvin is to be sought in his devotion to the inspired Word of God; and from thence until now there has never been a new era in the history of the Christian church that has not been preceded and produced by strong, fearless, undisturbed teaching of the great creative truths of God as revealed in Jesus Christ. In many regards the world which the church today faces is very comparable to the world which stretched out before the Apostles. Of them it is written by the most brilliant historian of the church that "they lifted the gates of the empires from off their hinges and turned the stream of history into channels of their own making." For the church facing again a world in complete collapse there is here both a programme and an encouragement.

Conditions Making Teaching Urgent

However important and necessary religious teaching may have been in any other age it is more so today. In consequence of the complete separation of church and state in our own country practically all religious instruction has been eliminated from our public schools. Prior to 1833 the truths of the Christian religion were part of the curricula of the schools. In all colonies except Rhode Island the government made provision for the religious instruction of the youth. But today no religious instruction is given in the public schools. The result is that in the Protestant population there is general neglect of religious training. Precisely here is the peril of the Protestant church. And, while the state has driven religious instruction from the public schools, the church has failed to make adequate provision for religious instruction. The result is that millions of our youth today have practically no religious training. Here is the greatest national peril confronting us. Without minimizing at all the work of the Sunday school the conviction has fastened itself upon us that the Sunday school is not an adequate solution of the problem of religious education. It is both absurd and impossible to expect the Sunday school to repair in one hour or even less each week the damage systematically done to the Christian ideal of life during the other six days of the week. As the matter now stands with us we compel the individual to live during the week in a world from which God is ruthlessly excluded and then seek by threats and bribes to have him attend a school on Sunday for one hour or less in which he is taught that the whole world is full of God's goodness, mercy and wisdom. If the World War has taught the world anything at all it is that the teaching of spiritual truth is far more vital to the character of our citizens and the permanence and peace of the world than all our boasted scientific discoveries or philosophical conclusions. As a consequence of the increasing cleavage of the sacred and the secular, we have to face the fact that the most of us breathe a godless atmosphere today and that ninety percent or more of the interests of our life are thought about without any reference whatever to Jesus Christ. The church today must set a new goal for herself in consequence of the failure of her old goal and this goal will be the rebuilding of the world after the mind of Jesus Christ—and the making of good and faithful members of the church after a conventional standard but the development of believers who like Southey's description of John Wesley are individuals of "great views, great energy and great virtues."

A Corrective of Religious Vagaries

To make converts to Christ and enroll them in the membership of the church is of small consequence unless they are also taught the truths and duties of the Christian life. To vast numbers of persons the call "come to Christ," means little. For an individual to become a disciple of Plato or Eucken means a growing acquaintance with the principles underlying the thought of these scholars. Christ called his followers disciples, that is, learners, and assigned to them the task of making disciples of the nations of the earth. In consequence of the narrow interpretation placed upon the term Christian, the major concerns of our life, such as business, education, commerce, medicine, art and science are discussed on purely and frankly atheistic assumptions. Now it is a notorious fact that the most of the devotees of the various pseudo forms of faith in America today are persons of large affairs and commanding position. The writer knows a brilliant chemist who is a reader in a Christian Science temple. No country has served as host for the growth of so many religious fads as ours. The separation of church and state with the resulting neglect of religious education of the youth of the country and the reaction from the doctrinal preaching of a generation ago has produced a state of religious illiteracy which is both alarming and supplies fertile soil for the development of religious fads and fancies. The church's source of hope for the defeat of all those religious fads which today embarrass and impede her in her conquest of the world and her sole guarantee against the appearance of still other fads of like character is the resumption of her ministry of religious teaching.

The Task of the Church

The creation and maintenance of Christian ideals of personal and corporate life is the task of the church. Only redeemed men can redeem the world. The church is to remake the world rather than be remade by it. She is the deposit as well as the custodian of revealed truth. The church must first of all bring the world to recognize and appreciate her divine nature and vocation. Jesus Christ made it very clear that while in the world the church was not of the world. Today as often in the past both the church and the world seek for independence passing into the supremacy of the one or the other. The times in which we live make true thought touching the nature of the church and its relations to the world urgent. The church, which has frequently been bowed out of existence the past few years as a complete failure in the hour of the world's greatest crisis, is rather the reflection of the minds of the critics than the mind of Christ as mirrored and interpreted in the experience of his disciples. Today the church is generally discredited and to a very great extent people are puzzled and in error about it. One rarely finds a Protestant enthusiastic about his church. The first task of the church is therefore toward herself. Not unlike her Master and Founder her character and mission are unique. But men no longer think of the church. It is not at all uncommon to find even among those who remain loyal to the church in which they learned to know Christ and what Christianity involves individuals who hold that the Christian faith may attain its triumphant conclusion without the church. A few months ago a brilliant writer in the New Republic urged with much plausibility the right as well as the duty of democracy to make its own church. Phenomena like these make evident how necessary and urgent it is for the church to define again its place and task in the purpose of God as revealed in Jesus Christ.

New Definition of the Church Needed

• It is assumed that there has always been a church in Christianity, that there will always be one and that the conception of Christianity detached from the church is both un-Christian and absurd. At all levels religious faith has power to gather those who share its faith into societies and it functions as a social force. The name Jesus is a magnet which which always brings together with one accord and in one place those who recognize him as Master and Lord. At the final analysis the church is the organized confession of faith in Jesus Christ. It is a divine fellowship. It is not a collection of believers but a coalition. (Coffin) The lives of this fellowship combine and cohere and coalesce in a common purpose. There is vastly more in the church than the addition of one member to another. Precisely here is the explanation of the statement so confusing to our ordinary mathematics that if one can chase a thousand two can put ten thousand to flight. It is very evident that the New Testament ideal of the church is not the ideal generally held today. The first responsibility of the church is therefore toward herself. Like the Founder her character and mission are unique. The church of our day needs again possess herself of her divine character and vocation and doubtless her service to the world would be better appreciated and the more effective were she for the time to attend to her own inner life and character. The church is not first of all a working church. Forsyth puts the matter correctly when he urges that the church can do nothing permanent and final for human welfare till the soul gets its own. The primary function of the church is worship—the confession of the Lord Jesus and the Father revealed through him. With worship is closely associated witness—the bearing testimony to others of what God has done for us in Jesus. On its inner side the whole of the Gospel is expressed in the two words of Jesus to the disciples—Come see—Go tell. The church is here, Forsyth writes, first of all to feed the soul with eternal reality, to establish, strengthen and settle the soul upon the Rock of Ages. Ill fed believers can not be expected to devise much wisdom or do much good. Today many in the church are hungry as to the soul. The sheep look up and are not fed or if fed at all are fed upon sentiment rather than revealed truth. To feed the spiritually hungry—this is the one thing that can properly be called preaching, and when the church turns from it to an instrument for educative or ethical or recreative ends it forfeits its right to existence. The church is here primarily for the Gospel which makes it. She is to live not for herself nor for the world on its uninterpreted side but for the Christ and the Gospel. Her first responsibility is to the revealed Word. The church's first duty is not to be up-to-date, but to declare the eternal truth of God; and the minister is not in her pulpit to exhibit his own individuality or culture or idiosyncrasies but as the servant of the Word and the church. To fill those who hunger and thirst after righteousness is both the charge and challenge of the church and its ministry.

The Church in its External Relations

Imperative as it is that the church define itself anew with reference to its eternal relations and obligations it is also imperative that it define itself anew with regard to the great institutions of human society. No person can read the Gospels thoughtfully without reaching the conviction that the church has also responsibilities toward the world. It is not the design of the Master that the church become a self-centered, pietistic clique. She has been made the keeper of the grand vision both for herself and the world. The object of her hope and endeavor is the salvation of the world—the bringing of human society into true communion with God. Her testimony must become a challenge. Her movement toward the world must be the result and expression of her standing before God. Genuine piety always motives aggressive Christian advance. She feels first the possession of her own soul through the acceptance of the Gospel with which she sallies forth to possess the victory of the world already won for her in the Gospel. The church is responsible for the holding and the giving of the mysteries of the Kingdom. If the church's first line of duty is to win men to Christ and perfect their moral character, its second line of duty is to teach men the moral and social ideals of the Kingdom and perfect them in their practice. Current Protestantism with its increasing recognition of the social implications and obligations of the Gospel of Jesus Christ is making for itself a new place in the thought and esteem of the world. It is not implied however that Christianity is nothing more than a social programme or that the church must identify itself completely with any particular social movement. The church has its own motives and weapons as well as its own goal for the reorganization of human society and religious experience abundantly illustrates that the church loses both its own inner consciousness and effectiveness when it adopts the methods and instruments of the world's making and seeks to attain its goal by them rather than by the employment of those provided in her divine charter. Doubtless the doctrine of the church urged in the present connection may appear to call it away from some tasks which she is about to assume without call or qualification. On every purpose the two-fold ministry of the church has been set in as bold opposition as possible. Other communions as well as ours are in need of enlightenment at this precise point. Current criticism of the church as failure in the present world crisis proceeds from persons who have genuine contempt for theology, and the willingness of religious leaders to reduce the belief of the church to a minimum to win the world is only an act of ecclesiastical suicide. A non-theological church would be the standing advertisement of a decadent church. The church is not justified in becoming a mere bureau of service or reform. Sociology can not be made a substitute for theology and social service can not take the place of the service of God. Today the multitudes are asking for the bread and water of eternal life and refuse to be satisfied with treatises on eugenics and dietetics. Religious leaders everywhere find the masses crying for elemental religion. With all their scientific achievements and industrial successes, American laymen are telling us that they desire to be assured of God, of immortality and the ultimate triumph of goodness in the world. The man of today, as of every day, desires companionship in his hours of spiritual loneliness, courage in his hour of moral wavering and struggle, and consolation in the hour of death. To bring to men this ministry is the church's first task.

It is not implied however that the church can be indifferent to her obligations to the world. The church has obligations to society as well as to herself. To her has been committed the secret and goal of all life, individual and social. The Kingdom that is to be has been won already. Christ has already overcome the world and our assurance of victory is through faith in him. Our quest of the world promises conquest. The riddle of the earth has its answer in Jesus Christ as the gift of God. Fear not, he said to the timorous disciples, I have overcome the world. Society finds both solution for all its problems and its own consummation, only as it finds Christ. The ultimate triumph of the Kingdom and the winning of the kingdoms of the world to the Christian Gospel is neither an inspiration nor a promise but a revelation. Precisely here Christianity differs from all schemes for moral and social improvement. The secret as well as the power of a perfect world is with the church. The order to be established among men is already perfected in heaven and descends as we are ready to receive it. It is true that we can not see its coming nor set the time of its arrival but we can trust him and some day when we sit with him in the heavenlies we shall see the tangle of our present life take most beautiful shape. Touching the world as it exists on its outer, uninterpreted side, the world as it exists apart from God, the Christian holds both the certainty and the character of its perfection. The Kingdom that is to be has already been won. This is the message of the Christian Gospel. The world will find its consummation, its ideal goal and the secret of real progress only as it finds Christ. To carry him to the world is the church's first line of duty. To make ready the world for the coming of the Kingdom is her second line of duty. There are times when the one or the other of these two lines of duty needs to be emphasized rather than the other. Today, in consequence of the clean sweep of the fallacies that so long and effectively hindered the efforts of the church to make a Christian world, the ministry of teaching needs to be given the major place and emphasis. The industrial world established on enlightened selfishness has been shivered to atoms and never again will men suggest that industrialism established upon selfish competition can guarantee the peace and unity of the world. Nor shall we soon again hear the suggestion that there is a moral principle resident in human nature, which if encouraged, will create a world-order after the fashion of the dream of the human heart. And we shall not soon be persuaded that international equilibrium can be established by the presence of huge armaments. Organized force as the keeper of world-order is in well-deserved disrepute. The disaster that has come upon the world is the church's supreme opportunity of presenting and applying her message to world problems and conditions. To inform herself anew of the ideals of the Kingdom and to inform the world the type of social order she is seeking to establish is her first duty. And somehow the conviction will not down that when the church has discharged aright this first duty the second will also have been provided for. Doubtless a true doctrine of the church, her nature and vocation, while it may for the time call it away from some tasks, which without either preparation or qualification she has assumed, would impress upon the leaders of the church the one great task, which in the Christian world, has been neglected with most deplorable results, both to the church and the world—the task of Christian education.

How Do You Hear? By A. E. Whitted

OUR SCRIPTURE

Take heed therefore how ye hear: for whosoever hath to him shall be given; and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have (Luke 8: 18). Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity. Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it (Matthew 7: 22-27).

OUR MEDITATIONS

There is a tendency today to lay great emphasis on the preaching of God's word and this is as it should be but not to that extent that it would entirely lift all responsibility from the one who hears. To stand behind the sacred desk is a very responsible position but little more than the responsibility that rests upon those sitting in the pew. The results that come from the preaching of the Word depends very largely upon the attitude of the hearer. Take heed therefore how ye hear."

The worshipper should mix the word that he hears with his faith in order that the preached word might have the

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

"The Child." By Mrs. H. R. Keyes

"The child grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom and the grace of God was upon him." This verse presents to our mind's eye a most beautiful picture of youth. No part of his development was neglected. Back of this picture we see godly parents, who have been taught and inspired by an all-wise heavenly Father just how to aid in the unfolding of this life, so that it might fulfill its mission. Indeed we owe much to the child. Its body, intellect and soul cries out to us for that nurture which will aid in the development of a full, rounded out life. I am so glad the word gives us a few glimpses of our Savior's childhood. The child, our joy, hope and inspiration, a wonderful gift from God, to rear into such a life of usefulness that all who come in contact may feel the virtues of a true Christian radiating from it. "Earth has not anything to show more fair than the flowers which bloom in the child-garden." Let us remember "just as the twig is bent the tree is inclined." What could be more noble than leading and guiding one of God's little ones, that it might unfold perfectly as the rose into a life of endless blessing to humanity.

Of all the tasks in our Sunday school the one who is called to teach in the Elementary Department has the most glorious. Here is our church of tomorrow. In your imagination can you not see pastors, deacons, missionaries and teachers, besides many others who will be called out as Abraham and Moses, because through prayer and consecration of a faithful Sunday school teacher they have been trained for lives of efficiency in his service. Child life is full of happiness, love and expression. Leading children is not a work of force, but of love, tact, keen foresight to discern that hidden power which is to be exercised and allowed to grow under proper guidance. Child rights must be regarded, because they are individuals. Never interfere with the child's individuality any more than you would disturb a rosebud in its growth. What sincere faith and implicit confidence beams from their faces as their eyes meet yours. Instead of trying to crush the bad as we term it, out of their nature, let us feed and cultivate the powers that are there for good, and as a reward for our efforts we shall see the good overcoming the bad. No boy or girl will ever grow to be good by continually reminding them that they are bad. I love the friendship of children because I always feel it is divinely true. Children bring us sweet lessons in purity, humility and forgiveness. I do not wonder that at one time Jesus placed a little child in the midst of his disciples to teach them a great lesson. May we as parents and teachers feel the great responsibility in the rearing and training of the children so much that we will keep our eyes on Jesus through prayer and consecration and be the means of leading his little ones to love and know him.

"The only crown I ask, dear Lord to wear,
Is this—that I may teach a little child
How beautiful, Oh, how divinely fair,
Is thy dear face, so loving, sweet and mild."
Goshen, Indiana.

Another Chance to Make Your School a Front Line School. By J. A. Garber

Some of our schools say they could take Front Line position this year if it were not for the teacher training requirement. Point 5 of the Standards reads: "A class must be engaged in the study of a Teacher Training course, unless all of the teachers in the school are teacher training graduates."

It has been found exceptionally difficult to qualify on that point this year. In the first place there was some delay because of uncertainty relative to text-books. Second, when classes should have been started last fall the "flu" frustrated all previous plans, and it was hard to revive interest later on.

Appreciating these difficulties and not desiring to work a hardship on any school, the executive officers of the National Sunday School Association have approved this suggestion from your superintendent: Any school having been unable to qualify this year on point 5 of the Standard of Excellence will be given full standing on said point, provided that between this and General Conference the school certifies the organization of a teacher training class to the national superintendent and assures him of an order for the required number of books. There is another chance to make your school a Front Line school this year.

This means that we desire to be perfectly fair and meet our workers half way. Furthermore, it means that you will have a teacher training class next year. Thus through this effort you will have secured Front Line standing on point 5 in 1919 and 1920. That is just what the schools have done that have already organized a class, for the study extends through more than one year. Come on, superintendents, opportunity is knocking at the door of your school. During the next six weeks you can enroll a sufficient number of persons to have a class in your school. Strive to register your class first and to make it the largest.

desired effect in his life. This is very essential to lead the individual into a greater field of service. But, alas, this is not true of many that hear the Word. They come to be entertained, with ears itching for some new theme. They profess the word is true, but go out and by their actions deny this profession. If their professions were true their lives would be different, their homes more ideal. There would be on their part a deeper concern about the spiritual welfare of their neighbors. If hearing were backed by a deeper faith its transforming effect in the life and character of every Christian would strike the outsiders with amazement until they would be brought to exclaim, "we never saw it in this fashion." And so we would plead for a deeper faith on the part of the hearer.

The hearer should also listen with the idea of personal application in mind. Too many times certain scriptures or words of advice apply only to Mr. A or Mrs. B. There is surely an application that can be made in our own lives whatever the word given. Every true Christian has a desire to grow spiritually, to be builded up in his inner man. If this desire is to be realized there must be this personal application of the truth heard. We must partake of that which is life if we would be made alive. TOO many of us can willingly hear that which concerns other men,—their sins, their lives and manners, but nothing touching ourselves or our own sins. We must be able to say with the prophet, Jeremiah, "Thy words were found and I did eat."

And again we should hear in the spirit of obedience. We cannot hear without being called upon to do. Hearing and doing we would say are inseparable. Hearing the truth then or coming into the knowledge of the truth is not the end but rather the beginning, so far as our personal labors are concerned. Once heard, that truth is to be applied, to be kept, to be lived. Give and it shall be given unto you. When you listen, ponder the truth with the desire in your

NOTE AND COMMENT

In 1909 the Christian Endeavorers of the Miami Valley planned and conducted the first young people's conference in our church. The unqualified success attending this effort gave rise to a yearly meeting until recently. At the last session it was decided to hold the next meeting at Gratis.

Consequently, as plans progressed for this Life Work conference, it was thought only fair to give Gratis the opportunity of entertaining this convention. Both pastor and people seemed very glad to avail themselves of this opportunity, duly appreciating the responsibilities and advantages. The new church at Gratis is splendidly arranged for the entertainment of such a conference. Moreover the brethren are ready to open their hospitable homes to the delegates and have agreed to supply automobiles for the conveyance of people coming on cars to West Alexandria. It is earnestly hoped that every church in the Valley will encourage a large number of people to attend, particularly young folks. And yet there is no restriction. The conference is open to all interested in the work of the kingdom.

The program was planned by Brother E. A. Rowsey, Life Work superintendent for Ohio, in whose mind the idea was born. He is very anxious to serve the young people in assisting them to find their life work and feels that the best assistance can be given through group conferences. Having great confidence in the young people and churches of the Miami Valley, he ventures this experiment with them. They certainly will not disappoint anyone in this important undertaking. They are hereby asked to keep the conference before the people, to encourage their attendance and to pray for the Lord's blessing upon these labors for him. Each speaker is expected to prepare and present his part in harmony with the theme of the conference heart to impart that same truth to others. We cannot bear as unto self. How true this proverb in regard to our effective hearing. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." James will also bear us out in our thought here when he says, "But be ye doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any man be a hearer of the word and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was." James has proven beyond a doubt to the believer that hearing the truth is not the end, but rather the beginning. These scriptures need but little comment. Surely there is a load of responsibility resting upon men who hear the Word preached by God's chosen vessels.

Let us then take heed how we hear that our lives may grow holier and more beautiful. May God use all who hear his Word to be of help in the bringing in of his kingdom on the earth.

OUR PRAYER

Our Father in heaven, thou who knowest how apt we are to be heedless of the things thou hast given for our benefit, to thee we now come for guidance. Help us to avail ourselves of every opportunity of growing into thy likeness. Give us a listening ear to thy truth and make our lives to respond nobly in deeds of love and kindness. Give us a deeper and a keener sense of our responsibility as we sit in thy presence, and when we arise from hearing of thee out of thy Word may we go out to do good, to honor him in our lives who loved us so much that he could willingly die in our stead. In his name and for his sake we ask it. Amen.

BRING ON THE REPORTS

By the time this appears the date set for sending in the second of the report cards that appears in the Four Year Program Hand Book will have come. Now then do it. Brother Goughnour speaks about being the GOAT, but I am afraid that unless some of the fellows who have been delinquent in their support of the work of the committee that has the program in charge deliver, they will find that General Conference will think differently as to the animal that is to be led into the wilderness. Why should the brother named, or any other of the committee be selected to bear the sins of those who could do better if only they would? I think that the co-operation asked for is not a burden grievous to be borne, and so why not fill out the card mentioned and obviate any need of rebuking or selecting a scape-goat? I too have one of those animals, as the street calls it today, and to tell the truth, the way that some respond to calls for information and co-operation it is enough to get the animal. I don't wish to appeal to slang, but if a little of that would deliver the goods like good simple English seems to be unable to do, your brother Ed. would see no peculiar sin in so doing. But I believe that the loyal members and pastors will rally to the call for the final reports without any further prompting, at least I hope so, and even if the wish is father to the thought, yet the wish is a good one, and therefore the thought cannot be necessarily evil. Let us have the best report possible this year. This can be made possible by your assistance, so then let us do it and by so doing we can keep Brother Goughnour and the rest of the committee in the family of humans and we will not have to relegate any of them to what Brother DeLozier would call the Gate family.

MISSIONS

HOME MISSION NOTES. By G. C. Carpenter

The Call of Another Board

The executive committee of the Home Missions of the Presbyterian church sends forth the following call for help:

"We have had to turn away many boarding pupils and day pupils. We must put up at Highland, Guerrant, Kentucky, a $15,000 school building and a $10,000 building for the orphans. At Stuart Robinson, Indian Bottom, Kentucky, we must have a $10,000 dormitory and a church building. At Beechwood, Heidelberg, Kentucky, we need a $10,000 school building and a church building. At the Brooks Memorial Institute, Canoe, Kentucky, we need a dormitory. At Canyon Falls Academy, Canyon Falls, Kentucky, an enlarged dormitory and a church building. These two dormitories and the three church buildings will require the other $15,000 making $60,000. How many of our friends will volunteer to help us materially by sending us special contributions for this equipment?"

"Beside the above, Blue Ridge Academy at The Hollow, Virginia, of which the Rev. Newton Smith is principal, needs $10,000 for a school building. The old school building has been converted into a dormitory. A church building is also needed at Blue Ridge at this point, and also a church building at Moraine, Tennessee, where Mr. and Mrs. J. Allen Messer are at work in connection with Smoky Mountain Seminary. All of these places present splendid opportunities and crying needs. Who will come to our help? There is no church building at all at a single one of these places where we have mentioned the need for a church building."

We quote the above from the Presbyterian publication, "The Soul-Winner," that the Brethren church may know how another and a representative mission board looks upon the field in which we have been laboring for a number of years. They present pressing needs for churches, schools, orphanages, etc. The Brethren church is facing similar needs and opportunities. The question is, Shall we enter and possess the field for Christ and for the Brethren church?

That Home Mission Goal

Only thirty cents per member! Has your church reached the goal for our general home mission work for this year? Has your church sent the full apportionment to Orion E. Bowman, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Board? Will your church come to Winona Conference with her name on the delinquent list of churches? Or will your church do even more than what was asked? Only thirty cents! Brother Boman reported in the Evangelist recently that about $1,800 was lacking of the goal of $7,500 set for the year. That is because some churches have not given even that small thirty cents. Do it yet. Do it before August 20 when the books for the year will be closed. Do it now. Come on, fellow-pastors, for it is up to you to bring it to pass.

Two Timely Addresses

Brother Orion E. Bowman gave two timely mission addresses at Peru and at Muncie when he was in Indiana a couple weeks ago. He is the right man in the right place. He is a successful Christian attorney in the large city of Dayton, Ohio, and he is the teacher of a large young men's Bible class in the First Brethren church of this city, and at the same time he is the efficient secretary-treasurer of the Home Mission Board of the Brethren church. The busiest man, if he is a Christian, is the man who has the most time for the Lord's business, and the man who is usually the most useful and efficient in the Kingdom.

My Trip To Indiana. By Orion E. Bowman

At the invitation of the Indiana State Mission Board, I spent four days in Indiana, from June 28th, to July 1st, 1919. Mrs. Bowman and our son, Byron, accompanied me.

The primary object of the visit was to look after our two splendid mission points at Peru and at Muncie; and in connection with this trip we took occasion to spend Saturday afternoon, June 28th, and Sunday morning, June 29th, with our esteemed Brother and Sister Bame at North Manchester; it had been our privilege to be his parishioners during his pastorate at the Dayton church, in fact, Mrs. Bowman and I were both baptized by Brother Bame.

We found them comfortably located in an attractive home in this city.

We were more than pleased at the interest manifested in the Sunday school and church work at North Manchester under Brother Bame's leadership; all the auxiliaries of the church at this place are in splendid condition. In the Sunday school we found splendid classes and able teachers. At the morning service we were privileged to hear Brother Bame preach on the New Religion to a large and enthusiastic congregation.

It was a real pleasure to have met for the first time the North Manchester brethren and we pray that they may go on from victory to victory.

On Sunday afternoon we motored to Peru, where we were entertained by our good Brother and Sister Carpenter in their hospitable home.

In the evening we attended services in the "Little Brown Church" and found there a group of loyal and consecrated workers. The Christian Endeavor society, although the weather was extremely warm, had a splendid session. At the church service, Brother Carpenter had arranged a special program of music, after which the writer spoke on the subject of "The Call of the Home Land," the audience showing much interest.

Quite a number of pledges have not been paid. The books of our mission board close on August 20. Every pledge paid and the year closed with the balance on the right side of the ledger is our aim. Will you help to reach that goal? Prices are going up and pledges should go up too. Plan for an increased pledge for 1919-20.

Peru, Indiana.

After the service, at Brother Carpenter's request, we met his official board in the consultation room and talked over the plans for the future. We find that these good people in four years' time through their consecration and loyalty have succeeded in buying and paying for a splendid lot on the corner of two prominent streets in the city, just three blocks east of the Court House and erecting thereon a temporary building at a cost of nearly $6000.00 for lot and building. We also found that these people have a building fund to which they are contributing regularly and that is nearing the $2500.00 mark. They are looking forward to the time when this fund will be sufficiently large that they can erect a modern church building, that will be a credit to the denomination they represent, and also to the city of Peru. Under the leadership of Brother Carpenter and his good wife, who have the love and esteem of their entire membership and the city as well, I predict that it will not be long until their ambition is realized.

On Monday morning in company with Brother Carpenter we motored to Muncie, where the State Mission Board of Indiana met us at the First Brethren church there. They, too, under the skillful leadership of our Brother J. L. Kimmel have a vision of larger things. Brother Kimmel and his good wife have been laboring earnestly, for the past several years to put the work at Muncie on a sound footing. They have removed from the tent which had been temporarily erected on our two lots to a temporary store room near by on Ohio Avenue and which they have very neatly and attractively converted into a temporary church building. However this building is only rented and our good folks there have no real assurance that they will be permitted to occupy this room very long for church purposes.

The Brethren of Muncie have also a splendid building location—two lots—and have the same all paid for.

The future work in Muncie for Brethrenism certainly is also very promising, but something must be done in order to get an adequate building there. A splendid plan for the promulgation of the building project was submitted by Brother Kimmel and received careful consideration. No definite action was taken but the same is being considered by both the Indiana State Board and our National Board until conference time.

In the evening the writer spoke to the members assembled and we enjoyed meeting with these consecrated and loyal brethren folks.

The next day we returned to our work in Dayton, fully convinced that the work at these three places is in good, safe hands and that the future looks exceedingly bright. May God richly bless Brethren churches everywhere.

Dayton, Ohio.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

MILLEDGEVILLE, ILLINOIS

We are always glad to read the church news from other places in the brotherhood and to note the progress in spiritual things and the gains for the Kingdom. We have no phenomenal growth to report from this place, but the various interests of the church are being given due consideration.

In different ways the quarter ending with June was the best during our pastorate here. The average attendance at the Sunday morning church services was considerably larger than during any similar period of time. And both the attendance and offerings in the Sunday school were likewise exceptionally good.

Of course, the showing made by the Sunday school is due largely to the "Waterloo contest" and its after results. Naturally, we hope every reader of the Brethren Evangelist noticed that Milledgeville won the first prize of $100. Our achieving this goal was not an accident; we planned and worked for it. It is the easiest thing in the world for Brother Cover to say now that if Hagerstown had gone into the contest they would have "made Milledgeville look little." But a question that was often asked is, why did Hagerstown not go into it? And why did not a lot of other schools that might be mentioned? I presume that if a symposium were written in reply to the question, "Why, we did not enter the Sunday school contest," it would be another case of "They all with one consent began to make excuse."

Well, we are mighty glad we had enough sporting blood to enter the contest, and push it the whole way through! The thing that won in this contest was not bigness but faithfulness. During the period of the contest we had serious difficulties here—bad weather, scarlet fever, mumps, and our worst epidemic of the "flu;" but the faithfulness on the part of every teacher and officer and the entire membership of the school persisted through it all. This alone accounts for the final victory. Of course, a school with forty-five members who maintain a perfect attendance through the year is something to be proud of, and we congratulate Hagerstown on such a record. If there is another school in the brotherhood excelling that we would like to heart where it is. But it required gumption and faithfulness on the part of more than forty-five to win the first prize of the contest.

Through May and June we had a number of special services—Mother's Day, Women's Day, Brethren Day, and Children's Day. Interesting and helpful programs were given on such occasions, and an effort was made to have all these services contribute to the larger interests of the church.

Our campaign for Permanent Endowment for Ashland College began on June 22, with Brother Beachler on the job. When the work was done we found Milledgeville fourth in the entire list of churches canvassed. Most of our membership responded splendidly to the opportunity; but this church might have been second in the list if some having the means had also had the vision and the proper sense of stewardship.

At our business meeting early, in July the church gave the present pastor a call for another year's service beginning October 1st, which also carried with it a considerable increase in salary. In view of the pleasant relations existing between the people and pastor, together with the work that yet remains to be done here, the call was graciously accepted. And, in view of the continued "high cost of living" and its consequent necessities, the generous forethought of the congregation in the way of increased material remuneration was very highly appreciated.

It was also decided at this business meeting to beautify our church property by removing the antiquated and more or less dilapidated horse-sheds and having some landscape gardening done. It is a splendid idea for a congregation to take as good care of the church property as the people do of their homes.

MILES J. SNYDER.

FROM ONE CORNER OF THE FIELD ..

It has been some time since any report has been forthcoming from either Williamstown or Homerville but this is not saying that there has been nothing of importance to report. In fact there has been so much doing that it is hard to make a condensed report of the happenings at both points. In order to make the following items clear we will take up the work separately.

Homerville

The first thing that I want to report is the interest manifested in the preaching services. One will have to go far to find more attentive audiences. While the attendance is not large still it makes up in intensiveness what it lacks in numbers. A few months ago we were all howling about the "flu" but now since that is a thing of the past we have nothing whatever to lay the blame upon and so it became necessary for every one to get to work. The result is an increase in Sunday school both in attendance and offerings. Brother Emery Kissel as the new superintendent, is getting busy for the missionary revival and as a result the last Sunday of every quarter is set apart for a special offering. In this way we hope to raise our Home offering without the usual effort that must be put forth when the call comes at the last moment. When it came time for spring house cleaning the Ladies' Aid thought that it was about time to do more than sweep out and dust off the seats, so they set about to obtain the consent of the trustees for a little needed repair work. What was the result? I do not need to say that where the ladies take hold there is no such word as "fail." This is the result. The church is repapered; new windows have replaced the old ones; an entirely new lighting system has been installed; and they are now preparing to see that the sheds for the horses are re-roofed and that the front entrance be fixed. Also a new approach has been made to the church from the road making it much easier in wet weather. At Easter time an offering was taken to make up the balance on the Home Mission work at which time a little over $8.00 was raised. Besides this an initial drive was made for the foreign work the result being $5.00. This does not seem much but considering the small membership and the efforts that have been made in this direction I take it as an encouraging sign. Taking it all in all I feel that the work in Homerville is taking on new life. For this we thank God.

Williamstown

On March 2, the writer made his first trip to this place. We found the people here all that we had heard and MORE. We preached to two fine audiences morning and evening and then made arrangements to continue with them. We also found this congregation of the "Live Wire" type. Brother Melvin Woodruff, the Sunday school superintendent, is right on the job. When I arrived I found that Brother Rowsey who had been there the previous Sunday had organized or rather re-organized the Christian Endeavor society, and that they were holding their initial meeting that night. I was agreeably surprised at the fine showing of young folks that were there. And the fine thing about it was that they all were responding to the call of the leader. Right here I want to say that there are young people of great possibility in this church and I am hoping to see a number of them respond to the call of the Master and go out to do a greater work. There are several who should be in Ashland College and we are hoping that after due consideration they will see the way clear to avail themselves of the for a higher education. At this time I might take opportunity to say that as a student of Ashland College for the past three years I am coming more and more each day to realize not only the value of the school but also the sterling qualities of the instructors. Too much cannot be said in their behalf. But this is rather off the subject. Like Homerville, Williamstown saw the need of making the house of God more presentable. While the work is not done still the money is raised to do the work and they are only awaiting the opportunity to do it. This is a farming community and most of the work is to be done by the members of the church. Therefore when harvest is over we are expecting to see the church look like new on the inside. Plans have been made to place the choir on a raised platform and also raise the rostrum. Grill work is to be placed in the recess immediately behind the pupil; the wood work is to be revarnished as are the pews; also the floors are to be finished. A new lighting system has been installed to take the place of the old one which did not give satisfaction, and with which one was more likely, to go to church in the dark than in the light. Two weeks before Easter a Home Mission offering was lifted in the Sunday school. The amount was $40.00. A banner upon which are the words "WE LEAD 1919," was given to the class having the largest offering. Brother Woodruff was responsible for this. It was carried away by the "M. M. M." Class of young people, their offering being $14.65. While this was the largest offering yet class No. 5 deserves special mention because they averaged the most per member, $1.94. At Easter time the foreign offering amounted to $28.00. While this was not as large as we had hoped for still coming as it did upon the heels of the Home Mission offering we were glad for it. We have thoroughly enjoyed the work here so far. By the way this report would not be complete if I omitted to say that on the odd Sundays Brother Mark Spaecht, of the Williamstown congregation is preaching at the morning hour. Brother Spaecht has been having considerable trouble with his eyes but we are praying that in the near future he will be better. We hope to welcome him at the College this fall for we know that he has a work to do and with God's help he will do it.

Brethren, let your prayers go up to the throne of grace in his behalf, not only for his success but that God may in his infinite mercy see fit to restore the sight.

Communion services were held in both churches; in Homerville in the early part of May and in Williamstown July 6th. Both were blessed services in the sight of God. May God's greatest blessing fall upon these two churches.

FRED C. VANATOR.

CLAY CITY, INDIANA

The work at Clay City has been moving along very commendably. There has been nothing startling, nor has everything been accomplished that we have desired. But the attendance at the various services is unusually good. The average attendance during the first six months of this year in the Sunday school was almost 23 percent greater than for the corresponding period of 1918. And the offerings amounted to 85 percent more than for the same period last year. The attendance at the prayer meeting has also been most excellent, there having been an attendance of nearly 35 percent of our entire membership (resident and non-resident, etc.). There is a most excellent spirit of harmony in the church, the services of which are splendidly attended, some beginning to attend with considerable regularity whom we have tried for a long time to interest. The S. S. C. E. is, as usual, interested in and doing good work. The Y. P. S. C. E. also is laying more definite plans for their future work. Many new members have been received into the society during the past year.

Very pleasant indeed has been our stay at Clay City. A more loyal class of people it has never been my privilege to serve, and this is meant in no sense to reflect upon the many, many devoted, unselfish, faithful souls who have been in our former parishes. I can scarcely hope to find a people more steadfast, and the thought of parting with them is the occasion of no small pain. Yet, after careful consideration and earnest prayer, we have decided to bring our work at this place to a close by October 1. Any one desiring to take up the work here may correspond with D. V. Oberholtzer, Clay City, Indiana. Any one, on the other hand, wishing to correspond with me may address me also at Clay City, Indiana. I am open for a call, either to become pastor or to do evangelistic work.

GEORGE W. KINZIE.

LANARK, ILLINOIS

A Series of Days

I want to make a condensed report, summed up under the special days we have observed. I first want to report our communion service held late in the spring. It was unusually well attended, 170 being at the tables. It was enjoyed perhaps especially because it was the first we had in our new church home and incident to building we were deprived of the fall communion. Rev. M. J. Snyder and several others from Millidgeville were present which we appreciated very much, and added to the service by presence and speaking.

Mothers' Day

This is always a big day with us; we had a fine service largely attended, with flowers for all mothers and many worn in honor of them and an appropriate sermon, at least in subject. All these things made this a day worth while.

Woman's Day

Hitherto the ladies of the church had taken over a full evening service of the church following the Outlook program. This year they asked for a morning service, and the pastor to do the speaking. I consented and spoke on "Woman's Place in Civilization." An offering was lifted for Ashland Theological chair amounting to nearly twenty dollars.

Father's Day

With two Sundays given over principally to and in honor of the women we decided it was time to say a word to and for the men. It was a new departure for us. We had a fine audience and the men were quite resplendent wearing cut flowers, every one a "red, red rose." The Men's Chorus furnished the music for the service and I confess I said a word for father that was long past due. It was a service we will repeat.

Memorial Day

This was a union service held in our church. About twenty soldiers of the late war in their different uniforms of service and rank lent inspiration to this service and helped the G. A. R. step a bit more lively. They were escorted by the Relief Corps and Sons of Veterans.

Brethren Day

While we did not follow any cut and dried program or make the speeches of others yet we made it distinctly Brethren, both historically and doctrinally and we believe helped the cause of the Brethren in Lanark and also at Ashland.

Children's Day

With the seating capacity in the Sunday school auditorium and gallery at a premium the Sunday school presented the pageant, "Heirs of Liberty." It was at once the strongest program we ever had, most largely attended and most satisfactory. This was an evening service. In the morning of the same day we observed

Cradle Roll Day

The days were going and also coming so rapidly we observed two at once. In connection with the Cradle Roll which was in observance of Baby Week and promotion with mothers and children present we also recognized the Home Department, for while speaking of mothers and children it is easy to say grandmother once in a while. So we merged the two departments and merged the Sunday school and preaching services and delivered a short address after a nice program by the little folks. We had 237 in Sunday school that morning.

Decision Day

I find I am going to have a lengthy report so will abbreviate by saying this was another merger. No dismissal from Sunday school and we had our State Secretary, Mr. Schenck with us who delivered a very timely address, followed by the pastor. It was an interesting and spiritual service.

Baccalaureate

For the fourth time in less than five years the graduating class chose me as the preacher for the baccalaureate sermon. I spoke on "The Glory of Democracy." Our choir rendered extra good special music. There were twenty-six in the class and the largest ever graduated from our high school. Some of them will be at Ashland.

Ashland College Social

Under the auspices of the Modern Marys a church social was held. It was Ashland College night, celebrating all by ourselves. Miss Amy Puterbaugh head of the Voice Department of Ashland College was home and she sang for us and we are proud of her and are not surprised she had such a wonderfully good year at Ashland. She is in Chicago this summer studying under one of the greatest teachers in the world.

Then Miss Lucy Wimer, another one of our Lanark products played several times for us and she is the newly elected head of the Piano Department of Ashland College. Mrs. Burnworth and myself made addresses. She spoke on Ashland's social and religious life and I on Ashland's needs.

I said above all else, even greater than endowment, she needs "friends." A nice offering was taken as a "nest egg" for endowment. We are mighty proud out at Lanark that we control the Musical Department of Ashland College and are hoping to send some students this year besides these instructors. Just put us down as being for Ashland, her "New President" and all.

P. S.—We have had 12 additions not previously reported.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

From Milledgeville my work brought me to Cerro Gordo. The trip from the one point to the other took me through some of the finest corn land in the world, and the present prospect for a great crop could not be better. Cerro Gordo is in one of the garden spots of the great state of Illinois, and the land is commanding such unprecedented prices that the average land owner is in constant fear lest some man will come along and point a gun in his face and compel him to set a price on his farm. Consequently the farmers around Cerro Gordo are really in a pitiable plight.

Brother D. A. C. Teeter is the pastor at Cerro Gordo, and he is well liked by his people and has his work in good shape. He knew something of our work and our methods by observing the North Manchester canvass, and also by assisting us during part of the College Corner campaign. However, bad weather and the fact that College Corner was building at the time made it advisable to complete the work at a later date, and when I finally returned to College Corner Brother Teeter had gone on to Illinois and Brother Homer Anderson had become his successor. Brother Teeter had put in some good work as a preparation for my coming, and he was very anxious that his people should do nothing ing else than their whole, reasonable duty for the cause of permanent endowment. He put his Ford at my disposal and we both worked very hard in most intense heat. In some of the preaching services at this place I never was more uncomfortable from the heat. But I am bound to say frankly, though kindly, that notwithstanding during those days the preachers and all the members sweat and sweat freely, yet I did not succeed in "sweating out" of Cerro Gordo all that she should have given and could have given to Ashland College. Cerro Gordo has used five preachers who have taken work at Ashland College. That means that during most of her history as a congregation she has drawn from the College for her pastors. And if Cerro Gordo would have done what she should have done she would have taken her place with Hamlin, Kansas at $2,200, or better still, with Morrill, Kansas at $2,500. As it is, she has gone between $1,700 and $1,800, which is just about what brave little Beaver City did, and Beaver is out in the short grass region where they get about two crops in five years. I believe if I could move those Cerro Gordo farms out in the short grass region of Nebraska and Kansas the change of climate would do the people a lot of good. I am frank to say that I am for the people in the short grass region; I believe "short grass" makes folks long on giving. Some people at Cerro Gordo need a vision, and when they were baptized I am quite certain they left their pocketbooks in their other pants.

However, it would be highly unfair if my story stopped here. Cerro Gordo has some great people. Some of God's elect live at Cerro Gordo. It was one of God's elect that came to the rescue and entered the $500 class, otherwise the Cerro Gordo report would look as if it were just coming out of a long spell of typhoid fever. The brother who gave $500 did it to celebrate his eightieth birthday. I call that the right way to celebrate when the good Lord has allowed us to live to such a fine old age. That represents practical gratitude, and if I had my way about it I would have such folks live to be one hundred and sixty years old. Folks who honor God with their substance and who love to help promote the Kingdom of Jesus Christ can't very well get too old—they are so badly needed. I am glad to say that a number of other people at this place did well. Both the Sunday school and the S. S. C. E. gave good help. Miss Mary Wise, a former student of Ashland College is at the head of the Sunday school and the life and progress of the school show plainly that Miss Wise is possessed of splendid ability to lead. Next year Cerro Gordo will have another splendid young lady enter school at Ashland. It is highly encouraging to find so many of our young people planning to enter Ashland College as soon as they complete their high school work.

The home of Brother Noah Derr was our main stopping place and there was extended to us a most cordial welcome. I also received many kindnesses in the pastor's home, also in the Groff, Wise, Peterson, and Wm. Derr homes. During our stay Brother Eppley and wife were over several times from Decatur and gave us good help. I am indebted to him, also to Brother Teeter and his good wife, and to all of the other good people of Cerro Gordo who showed me kindnesses and assisted me in the work. If I ever have to go back again to Cerro Gordo for the College, however, there are two things for which I shall crave; first, cooler weather, and second, more people who shall count it a privilege and not a duty to invest and invest substantially in an institution which stands for the promotion of the kingdom of heaven and without which the church cannot do its duty by this age or have the promise of a future.

COLLEGE NOTES

Prospects for next school year are good. Inquiries are coming in every day. This is as it should be for, remember the slogan, fifty in the Seminary and one hundred in distinctively college work. I am under obligations to those thoughtful and interested pastors and trustees who have put me in communication with young people who ought to enter Ashland.

I am in receipt of letters of invitation to have the College represented both at the Indiana and Pennsylvania fall conferences. The College will not fail to accept all such invitations.

There appears in another column of this issue of the Evangelist the program of a Life-work Conference to be held at Gratis, Ohio. This is a step in the right direction for our young people. Let it be well attended preceded by thoughtful prayer.

Since June first, I have sent out between two and three thousand pieces of mail from this office. The brotherhood ought by this time to be pretty well covered.

Arrangements for the conduct of the Hall are about complete, but there are some places open yet for those who want work in the college. If any young man wants a job here at the school, write me. First come first served.

There was given to the College some time ago a very beautifully carved ivory, alligator. It was the gift of Miss Estella Myers whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Myers, live at Williamsburg, Iowa. Miss Myers is one of our missionaries in Africa and informs us that the alligator was made by one of her native black boys. It is so much a work of art, that it needs mention here. It was carved from an elephant's trunk and when one stops to consider that these boys can accomplish so much without modern tools, one must ask what could they not do if Christianized, civilized and educated? We are under obligation to Miss Myers for this beautiful reminder of her work in far away Africa. May God bless all our workers in the foreign fields.

The campus is looking its very best now for under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Landray, it has received special attention. If every member of our church could see the beautiful plant we have here, they would be very profoundly touched by Brother Beachler's appeal for its complete equipment.

Fall opening Tuesday, September 16, 1919. Enrollment in the College to be doubled and fifty in the Seminary.

A Worthy World Missionary Move

Worldwide prohibition is being urged as a great foreign missionary undertaking which should receive the support of all religious denominations. In various ways the church has been made to see that everything that touches human interests is a matter of its concern and that everything that is an enemy to the highest welfare of mankind in any phase of life is an enemy to the church and is set against its great purpose in the world. The liquor traffic has been the strongest single foe of human welfare and consequently of the church that has showed itself in organized resistance to the advancement of Christ's kingdom. At home and abroad, everywhere the church has sent its messengers of God's saving grace, the organized liquor traffic has had its emissaries at hand, as the Jewish leaders dogged the missionary footsteps of St. Paul to antagonize him, to oppose them and to work ruin as they have worked for righteousness. Everywhere the spirit of wine is in mortal conflict with the spirit of God. Among the nations as well as individuals the liquor traffic is the companion of dissention and strife. It is at this very hour a positive hindrance to the better understanding that is obtaining between the nations of the world. In every land it is interfering with the highest achievements of the church of Christ and is hindering the progress of his kingdom in all its phases.

The church was rather slow in recognizing the strength of her arch enemy, and in uniting her forces for its defeat. But the battle is advancing rapidly for the right. United States and Canada have abolished the liquor traffic. And now the churches, united in spirit, co-operating in effort and empowered and directed by their great Head, Jesus Christ, they are advancing to those lands where the spirit of wine has until now held undisputed sway. The world is the battlefield and while the victories already gained must be secured by law enforcement, yet every retreat of the enemy must be followed up to the utmost until the world is freed from this evil. The countries which with open arms have appealed to the churches of America to "come over into Macedonia to help them" have placed upon the organized body of Christ an inescapable responsibility to help them gain the freedom now to be enjoyed in the homeland.

Moreover it will be greatly to the benefit of our own saloonless nation to help to rid the world of its legalized liquor traffic. The churches that develop the missionary spirit and extend the gospel to lands that have it not, at the same time co-operating closely and helpfully with Christian churches in the homelands that do have the gospel, are the churches that prosper at home. By the same token, while we believe that prohibition has come to the United States to stay, it will be more complete, thorough, stable and beneficial if it extends to lands with which we are in concord in other matters and with which we have business and political dealings.

The temperate forces of the world are not "marking time," but have organized to push the battle to the limit and take full advantage of the victory already won. They are calling upon all denominations to co-operate in guarding the base of supplies and adding strength to the columns of attack. All churches at their conferences, synods, assemblies or convocations will be made aware of the program of the World League against Alcoholism and urged to support its aims and objects as being really and truly a proper missionary enterprise.

This League was organized in Washington, early in June, at the close of a convention of the Anti-Saloon League and a world-wide prohibition conference engaged in by representative men and women from temperance organizations in a score of lands, many of them high in official, industrial, financial and church life of their respective countries.

Mr. Ernest H. Cherrington, the executive secretary of the League, says, "These representatives formed the World League Against Alcoholism, because of their great interest in the movement in America, which they wanted extended to their own lands. They saw what had been accomplished here and determined to follow our program as closely as possible. For mutual help and to take home with them the vision of a world entirely free from liquor, they organized the League, ordered that it should have permanent offices in Washington, that its first regular convention should be held in Edinburgh, where the Scots are carrying on a local prohibition campaign, and that there should be a campaign against liquor in every land under the sun.

"It is expected that official legislative bodies of the churches will take up this great interest and so legislate as to put the world dry program into their schedule of great things to be accomplished in this generation, if possible, but if not, then certainly in the next."

About That Winona Conference

There is a desire on the part of the executive committee to make this the biggest conference in the history of the church from every point of view. A big attendance is a very important factor in it. There is a very general impression that this is the year to put our best foot forward in attendance. This is the time when people of all organizations and movements are getting together in large numbers to set their houses in order for the entertainment of the greatest period of prosperity along all lines that the world has ever known. It is the time when men of vision are planning as never before. They see big things ahead and they are zealously preparing to take care of the biggest things that the future has in store. Industrial Enlargement, commercial expansion, growth of invention and the quest of knowledge are going forward by leaps and bounds. Unless the church puts herself to the wheel of progress as she has never before done, she will be left in the rear of the procession. Now is the time to plan big and to execute vigorously. Now is the time for the church to be strong and courageous enough to accept any challenge. To shrink is to fail and to forfeit confidence and leadership.

There is a challenge thrown out to us at this very time. It came unsolicited, but it came direct and we cannot dodge it. We are challenged to have TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY DELEGATES AT CONFERENCE BESIDES MINISTERS. Your executive committee through its secretary, Prof. J. A. Garber, has sought to secure special rates for the delegates to General Conference. The Railroad Administration's reply was that if there were at least 250 full fare tickets, each of which shall cost not less than 75 cents, purchased to Winona Lake, we might get fare and a third. That means that ministers who have clergy fare, and children who travel for half fare are not to be counted in this 250; neither are auto and street car travelers; but if that many full fare railroad tickets are purchased to Winona Lake, each purchaser of such tickets shall be entitled to one-third fare home. It's a big challenge. We had only 269 delegates in all last year and of that number were ministers. Can we do it? We think we can and the secretary of the committee has made application for such terms. Next week announcement will be made whether or not we have been granted those special rates. In the meantime let us settle down to the task of putting across a 250 attendance. Let us make that our goal, rates or no rates. We can do it if we will. Will we do it if we can?

READ THIS BEFORE READING THE PROGRAM

Owing to an error in the make-up of the paper the first three lines of the second column, page 5, beginning respectively, 8:15, 8:45 and 9:00, and the last seven lines of the same column and page, beginning, "a. Their Obligation to Serve. Clarence Rohrer" or down to the bottom of the page, were duplicated. If you will take your pencil and mark them out, you will have the program corrected. We are sorry for the mistake but as that part of the program came on the first side (first run) of the paper and the error was discovered when the second side was about to be run, it was impossible to make the correction.—Editor.

The preachers have something unusual in store for them at Winona during conference week. See Brother Shively's announcement. Wonder if it will include chicken!

Our business manager has a word in this week and he is able to report another church on the Honor Roll. We welcome you, Eau Claire. Who will be the next? "The Evangelist" is every member's paper; it will be largely what you make it. Where is one who ought not to be back of it?

Brother Boardman, one of the "livest wires" that have recently been graduated from the college, has taken up the pastorate at Hudson, Iowa. He reports his work at Middlebranch and Gretna. Both churches prospered under his leadership. Middlebranch in a special way, was greatly benefitted by his tireless energy and contagious enthusiasm. May God bless him and his good people at Hudson.

Brother E. M. Riddle, now of Louisville, Ohio, reports his work and pleasant experiences at Linwood, Maryland. It is another story of a "first love," where harmony, progress and co-operation added to the charm of first experiences made the affection of pastor and all people the deeper. We are sure that Brother Riddle will find in his new pastorate an equally affectionate and loyal people, and they too will find a worthy leader in him.

Brother G. T. Ronk reports that the work at Decatur county, Iowa, is making splendid progress and that the prospect is brighter than at any time previous. The Leon church is paying off its debt and maintaining vigor in the various departments of the work during the summer. Brother Ronk is doubtless calling with prophetic voice for more workers to seize the vast possibilities of church extension in these parts.

We hear again from our little African missionary through her amanuensis. These letters give our little folks as well as our big folks an insight into the lives of the missionaries. When we see how contented they are with their lesser privileges and how happy they are in the midst of their privations, we are made more thankful for the greater privileges we enjoy and more willing to deny ourselves of some of them that we may give them better support in giving the gospel to those who have it not. Will not our little readers thank God for the health and provision he has given to our little missionaries in Africa and pray that he may lead them into the place where he would have them work?

Brother Cook reports that Krypton had a very good meeting with the assistance of Brother Drushal of Lost Creek. He also promises to bring a Kentucky still along with him to Conference for the inspection of all. He assures us that it will be kept still and will not likely cause the Conference to be covered by Internal Revenue officers. Brother Cook states that this is his last report from Krypton as the pastor, and he takes occasion to pay a tribute to the members of the Home Mission Board and especially to Brother G. C. Carpenter, its faithful president. Doubtless our Kentucky missionaries appreciate the work of Brother Carpenter more than any others, for they know more about the sacrifices, the consecrated, careful attention and the energetic effort and leadership he has exercised as the chief director of the work. None of our Kentucky supporters are entirely without appreciation of Brother Carpenter's faithful work, but if they could know how tirelessly he has given himself to this work their appreciation would be greatly intensified. Brother Cook also deserves the gratitude of the brotherhood for his remarkable work at Krypton.

Brother Beachler is a good miner; he is picking away hard. Sometimes he finds the vein is much thinner than at other places and the results for college endowment are not so encouraging. But still he is striking some pure gold everywhere he goes and is finding some loyal friends of higher education. Some have not yet caught a vision of the bigness and urgency of the need of Ashland College and have not felt to any considerable degree their own responsibility in the matter, but doubtless the vision will come to them by and by and they will see not only their responsibility, but their great opportunity of helping forward the kingdom of God in this most vital and urgent part of it. Brother Beachler reports that the results of his canvass in the Maple Grove and Udell congregations were not what he had hoped for, but we cannot help thinking that these churches will yet come across in such a manner as to bring rejoicing to the heart of our faithful campaign secretary and to all the college authorities.

Home-made Squibs

Knowing without doing is worse than not knowing at all.

Impurity closes the eyes to the vision of God, for it is only the pure in heart who see him.

Jesus Christ, the central fact of the Gospel, is himself the most stringent rule of life.

The church is an institution that rests upon the earth even though its spire points toward heaven.

A boy becomes a man when he begins to think more of business than of ball. And if one can be a man why should he wish to be a boy?

"Covet earnestly the best gifts; and if it is not easy to tell which gifts are best it is always safe to choose the things Christ chose.

Human laws are more or less imperfect, but the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus is the perfect law of liberty, because it is more than law.

Only where virtue and wisdom dwell together will there dwell peace, satisfaction and joy, and in the home where these are not love will not long care to stay.

The power of prayer cannot be estimated, for when the wire of our faith is connected with the electricity of God's power, it is then a question of his ability.

No honest man can come in contact with the teachings of the New Testament without feeling ill at ease with his past record, and in the grip of something, which, if unresisted, would revolutionize his whole life.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Church and Its Greater Future. By W. C. Benshoff

The church is a divinely appointed institution commissioned by Christ to do a certain work. The church is great or it is not great only as it does this work. The question is not, Has this heaven born institution in the past, and is it today meeting the divine requirements? The question is, Has the church reached its maximum of efficiency? Certainly not. Jesus has said, "Greater things than these shall ye do." To each successive generation he says, "Do greater things than your predecessors," and he has promised to back the church in the doing of these greater works. "Lo, I am with you always." If we just had the faith to believe!

Now if the church is to have a greater future, it must have a clearer understanding of its specific duties. This organization must know what its work is; it must know what its work is not. God's people must know the divine plan for the church; there must be a comprehension of Christ's program, if the church is to succeed in the doing of the "greater works" of which our Lord speaks. The imminent need is the consecration of the individual through prayer, and the enlightening of the mind through the searching of the Scriptures.

If the church of the future is to do the "greater works" it must be Biblical. The message must be the gospel. To preach the gospel of Christ is the one great business of the church. There is no stagnation where the gospel is preached. The positive and fearless declaration of divine truth means the suppression of evil, the salvation of the individual, the strengthening of the faith of the believer and the glorifying of the Redeemer. The preaching of the gospel, what a privilege!

The church of the future must be practical or fail in its particular work. Human need must be met by carrying vital piety to every sick bed, every hearthstone, every cradle, by enlisting all believers in religious effort, by the diffusion of righteousness as a river, by everyday integrity and holiness to the Lord, by bringing the individual into the presence of him who alone has the power to regenerate. Now in our eagerness to do something for the betterment of humanity there is danger that we put the emphasis at the wrong place. Human institutions are disposed to work from the circumference to the center. God's method is the reverse. The church must always be unsatisfied while social conditions fall short of the highest ideals of justice and brotherly love, but its supreme problem in world betterment, is spiritual uplift. The trouble is at the center. We must begin at the beginning. "Back of justice is law and back of law is government and back of government is man." Man is the problem. The gospel blazes its way to the individual heart and deals with humanity there. The church must not forget that the saving of the individual lies below all real social uplift. Things are not right until they are right at heart. It is true that much good can be accomplished through the institutions of human origin. Through these, man can bring material help by the diffusion of liberty and the diffusion of intelligence and the diffusion of property. These things are efficient but not sufficient. There must be the diffusion of righteousness. The church is the pillar and ground of truth (1 Timothy 3:15). From it must emanate the spirit of the Founder of Christianity.

There is a danger that the church of the future will lose sight of its real work and thus fail to do the "greater things." The church must stick to its job. There is always a temptation, when a new campaign is started or an appeal is made for a new line of service, for individuals or organizations to drop their own work and concentrate on the new task. Many are the demands upon the church. Men would make it a mere tool to further their particular schemes for human betterment. It abandons its supreme business when it becomes little more than an annex to a labor movement or a charitable organization.

The real work of the church then, and upon this its future depends, is the saving of the individual. "The church will never be strong until it finds the place of emphasis in individuals." When Andrew brought his brother to the Master he inaugurated a method that has proven to be the most effective in interesting men in the kingdom of Christ. There is only one account of a large ingathering in the early Christian church in which men were gathered into the kingdom—when Jesus came to the Samaritans. The church was due to the personal work of the followers of Christ. In one instance a poor heathen woman met Jesus at the well, left her waterpot and hastened to the city to plead with men to come and see and hear the words of the prophet who told her all about her life. As a result of her efforts many believed and were brought to Jesus.

The church now numbering millions by acting upon this simple method, that of zealous personal effort, inspired by the love of Christ, could increase its efficiency and multiply its numbers many fold. The manufacturer does not depend upon the gathering of men together in multitudes to hear some advocate of his business, but he sends out and gets men interested one by one through the commercial agent. Do you ask why there are not more men interested and enthusiastic in the work of the church? It is because the individual Christian is not seeking out and lovingly and enthusiastically leading others to the Master. When the church awakens to the possibilities of the individual work for individuals, there will be an advance in the progress of the work of the church as has never been witnessed in the past. Yes, the appeal of Christianity is to the individual. It seeks to rescue the perishing as independent units. Christ came to save men one by one. He loves the masses and was moved with compassion toward them, but he did not sweep the multitude into the kingdom as you might drive a flock of sheep into an enclosure. The appeal of Christ was to the individual heart and life—to Peter, to James, to John, to Paul, and he said, "Follow Me."

The church of the future will be great in proportion to its degree of service and sacrifice. The life of Christ was one of sacrifice. He invites us to share this life with him. We have heard too much about the slogan, "What is thine is mine." We need to hear more of the Christian principle, "What is mine is thine." The ideal of every preacher should be to make his pulpit aflame with the evangel of missions. An unselfish interest in others guarantees a greater church in the future. Altoona, Pennsylvania.

THE MEETING OF THE COINS

The following is an allegory which tells of a special meeting of coins held in the offertory plate:

The pennies attended in large numbers, and the nickels were well represented. The chairman, a nickel piece, was understood to be especially pious, having attended more religious meetings than all his companions combined. Several dimes stated that, although they had been in the habit of attending offertory meetings with fair regularity, they had of late been so much employed at moving picture shows, soda fountains and cigar stands, that they, too, found it increasingly difficult to attend. The fifty-cent piece wrote that he was so incessantly required at the gold club, and theater that he had retired from offertory-plate duties, but hoped occasionally to send his half-brother in his place. A telegram was received from A. Cheque, Esq.: "Fully prepared to come, but detained to settle automobile transaction." A neatly folded dollar bill, who was resting quietly and unmolestedly in the bottom of the plate, said he had been brought to the meeting by a poor widow, who, though she could ill spare his services, gladly gave him up out of a heart of love.

Stimulants Do not Have an Enduring Result. By C. R. Koontz

Some time ago I was asked for some suggestions for our conference program. In reply I said that I did not know that I had any suggestions to make, but that there was a problem that has been confronting me for some time, and I would be pleased to have some light on it. Having stated my observations, a little later I found my name on the program with the above topic.

Before giving you my observations allow me to say that I have not come to criticise adversely or give a complete remedy, but rather to introduce the subject in the hope of receiving some helpful suggestions while at this conference.

My observations are as follows:

First there is a great body of people who are not being reached by the church. This class includes the host of people who do not attend the regular church services. Probably I should say seldom if ever attend services. There must be some special campaign put on to move them to action. This is quite noticeable in the large evangelistic campaigns. And, whilst I am not criticising them, yet I do not believe I stand alone when I ask the question as to whether the results are lasting.

Second, there is a group, and not so small in some quarters, who profess to be followers of the Lord, that have to be continually urged along and waited upon before you can depend on them. They are not to say dead but just inactive unless you can be right with them. To use a crude illustration from the farm, they remind one of the horse that knows when you are close to him and when you are back on the wagon: not balky but just taking life easy and letting the other horse pull the load. If he receives a stimulant, it matters little whether it is a little gravel or the end of a "black snake," he is up against the strap. Or, to use the illustration of another, they are like wood, hay and stubble in a building. They cannot be depended on.

Third, there is yet another class of people who do not relish a good plain doctrinal sermon. They say that the doctrinal sermon is not practical but belongs to the Mediaeval Age. Give us something popular and up to date!

A note of this appeal can be heard sometimes in the study of our present Sunday school lessons, which have to do with the great and fundamental teachings of our Master. How often do we hear it said that the lessons are hard to get hold of and also hard to present in such a way that the class will get the truth in such a way as to be able to hold it.

Now that you have my observations, I believe that you will have to agree with me that in too many instances they are altogether too true. I am not radical, for I believe in the happy medium, but when you go to put your fingers on the lasting results of many of the "specials" and "leading features" of many services they vanish away. Ask the statistician whether the results have kept pace with the amount of energy that has been put forth to create something "attractive," something "new," something "popular." If the doctrinal message has ceased to be popular, I wonder if it can always be said of the "popular message" that it is spiritual. Do we make our services strictly sacred, with the Word of God holding the seat of honor, or do we make a social affair out of it with just enough of the Word of God inserted to give it the name of a religious service?

Christianity is not a profession but a life, an active life, a life that needs a great deal of wholesome food. This is to be found in the study of the Word of God which is spoken of as the "sincere milk of the Word" and the "strong meat of the Word." While the figure may be a little overdrawn, it looks like we have been living down along the seashore and feasting upon the manna of the world so long that our systems have become so deranged that the Word of God has ceased to be palatable. When the true physician finds a patient with a system full of disorders, he does not prescribe a lot of stimulants but proper atmosphere, proper exercises and proper food. We sometimes sing that we are living on the mountain, drinking at the fountain and partaking of the manna of God; let us make that true in our spiritual lives and I am fully persuaded that we will have more strength to live the true Christian life and will not have so much use for stimulants which often leave us worse than they find us.

Explanatory Remarks

We are glad to present the brotherhood with this program for the coming General Conference. It is not perfect, but seems to provide for the continuance and enlargement of all our work. It was built with a view of sustaining interest and creating enthusiasm necessary to the successful completion of our Four Year Program. The historical suggestion incident to the Bicentennial Year has been given considerable prominence.

A distinctly new feature is the Laymen's Conference paralleling the meetings for ministers, women and young people. Those assigned topics will use twenty minutes each. The remainder of the time is for general discussion.

For the most part the time limit of all the addresses is indicated. Where it is not the speakers should divide the time equally allowing a margin of five minutes for remarks and suggestions. Each speaker will help himself to keep within the time limit by committing his address to writing, though it is not urged that he read it. Every production automatically becomes the property of the conference, of course, with the producer's consent. Every production should be in usable form.

How Shall We Account for Jesus Christ? By A. E. Thomas

Text: Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ.—I Corinthians 3:11.

The Christian religion is pre-eminently the religion of a person. Other religions have had their origin in the thought and teachings of persons which in time have become independent of them. But Christianity has never become, nor can it become independent of the personality of Jesus Christ. Without him in it in person, Christianity like all other religions will fail. The New Testament, in fact the whole Bible, is full of him.

The Gospels contain the story of his presence in human history. He is the very heart of this great Book. In fact he is the one that binds this Book together. Jesus in Genesis is the same as Jesus in Revelation. Learn the meaning of the name and you have gotten hold of the secret of the power of the Bible. To him we are indebted for its existence. The Bible is still with us just as fresh in its truths as ever. No man can destroy it. Why? Because the person Christ Jesus, which it represents, cannot be destroyed. The light that comes to us from the Bible comes through its great character, Jesus of Nazareth. For it was Socrates who once said in a darker period of the world's history than this, "It is necessary that men should wait for some divine teacher who would instruct them regarding the gods and one another." To whom then are we indebted for the flood of light that we get out of the Book, but unto him in whom all light was concentrated. He who alone could say, "I am the light of the world." No, we cannot destroy the Bible because we cannot destroy the Christ which it exalts. You cannot destroy it, thank God, for there would still be a divine teacher to lead us. As long as Jesus lives the Book of books will live. Christianity lives because its divine Master lives. With him then our religion and our Bible rises or falls. To a discussion of him tonight our message shall be given. How shall we then account for Jesus Christ—the central figure of the Christian religion, the guiding star of all light and the great magnet around which the Bible elings? Can we account for him on the score of his environment? I answer, "No," for he arose above the littleness of his time and environment. Never was there a man so broad in thought, so lofty in spirit and so eloquent in speech as he; and yet he belonged to a little country, to a people saturated with bigotry. He burst the bond of environment, and he arose and went into a sublimer life than this. He was the man for all ages.

Again, can we account for him on the score of his education? We are all ready tonight to admit to the greatness of education in the moulding of our lives, and yet we cannot account for him on this score. Jesus Christ was never in school except in the village synagogue; he never was in the academy or college; he never sat at the feet of the philosophers of Greece and Rome; he never studied in the presence of the dreamy philosophers of the orient. We cannot account for him thus. How then shall we account for his greatness? Now I want to submit four facts concerning Jesus Christ, which cannot be disputed and never have been by any persons of intelligence. Let me name them briefly:

First: Jesus Christ is the revealer of the highest type of human life.

Second: Jesus Christ is the redeemer of all types of human failure.

Third: Jesus is the ruler of the most remarkable empire that man has ever known.

Fourth: He is the restorer of lost order wherever he is obeyed.

On these facts he will stand the test.

First: Christ is the revealer of the highest type of human life. Is this statement true? I submit that the world has ever recognized Jesus Christ as the highest type of human life. No life has been more ideal than his. Both great and small bow the knee to this faultless Man, Jesus. Behold, then this Christ—the wonder of wonders—a faultless Man. No other man has ever gained that distinction. The Bible gives us pictures of good men, but of only one faultless Man. Abraham, Moses, David, Peter and Paul were all good men, but there were defects in their lives. History portrays the lives of great and good men, but none perfect, —all had great defects.

Socrates—great man that he was—lacked love for wife and child. Plato and Aristotle were given over to sensual excesses. There are none like him. When Marsden, the holy missionary, was evil spoken of, he said to a friend, "Sir, these men do not know the worst. If I were to walk through the streets with my heart laid bare the very boys would pelt me." Ah! friend, herein is where Jesus triumphs. For 1900 years both friend and enemies of Jesus have been critically examining his life and have given him their approval. Two of the most brilliant critics Jesus has ever had were the German Strauss, and the Frenchman, Renan. While they never accepted the supernatural elements concerning Jesus Christ, which we hold to be essential to the truth concerning him, yet they both crowned him for his character. Strauss says that Jesus Christ remains the highest model of religion within the reach of our thoughts. Another time he insists that such a Man, Jesus, as the Gospels described never lived, for says he, "Such a fair flower as represented in Jesus has never been plucked from the tree of humanity;" practically admitting that the highest ideal of human life is the Christ of the New Testament. Renan said whatever may be the surprises of the future Jesus will never be surpassed. His story calls forth tears and all nations will proclaim that among the sons of men there was none greater than Jesus. Rousseau, the dashing Frenchman, said of him, "Where is the man, where is a philosopher, who could so live and so die without weakness as he did?" If the life and death of Socrates were those of a sage the life and death of Jesus were those of a God.

Oh, matchless Man! Oh, faultless Man! We cannot compare him with other men. Our ideal of him, no matter how great, would be deficient. He seems, says one, like a new flower that an angel has brought from the skies and planted in the earth—it is more lovely and fragrant than all other. He is like a new star that has appeared in the heavens, clear is its light and so radiant its glory that it stands among the stellar hosts as the central host. So Christ, this faultless Man, has ever been the wonder of the world,—the hope of the church and the glory of the Christian religion. To him we give the honor of being the highest ideal of human life.

Secondly: I wish to call your attention to the fact that Jesus is also the Redeemer of every type of depraved life. What is it he sees? Lost sovereignty in man. He sees in man something wrong. There is something that retards him. He sees humanity living for self alone, thinking only of self. Self has mastered man and he has become a slave. This Jesus sees; he sees in this poor depraved man—this selfish man, a possibility of greater things he can be, if he will permit him to be master over all. He sees a Christ in every depraved man, and he is the Redeemer of such: he is the universal hope of the world. Yes, that depraved, wretched man. Christ can take hold of him and redeem him and make him a conqueror. It is the real value of man after all that he sees. He sees not the outward but the hidden possibilities of man, and hence for this reason he has and will redeem man. You know Shakespeare says in Hamlet, "What a piece of work is man; how noble in reason; how infinite in possibility." And it is this Jesus that sees in every depraved man, and Jesus is truly the Redeemer of the vilest. He came to save such. This is no poetic dream untried, but over and over again Christ has demonstrated to the world that he can redeem the lowest of the low. He can remake them. The man most vulgar he ennoble. Let me give you practical illustrations here. Yonder is a man, he walks to the banks of the Seine in Paris to end his life. He walked to the bank four times but he didn't plunge in; he filled a cup with poison, but he didn't drink; he cocked the pistol and put it against his temple,—twice he did that—but he didn't shoot. He heard the story of this Redeemer of man; he dropped on his knees and William Cowper wrote:

"There is a fountain filled with blood Drawn from Immanuel's veins."

That is what poor, heartstuck and depraved Cowper found. One more: In Brooklyn, New York, there is a humble home of Fanny Crosby, the blind woman. It is said she has written over 5,000 hymns. She has never seen the light of day, but I go to her and ask, "What is Christ to you? For 87 years you have sat in darkness. Tell me, Miss Crosby, what is Jesus Christ to you?" I see her face light up with a halo of light. I see her sightless eyes flash and she answers:

"Once I was blind, but now I see.
The light of the world is Jesus."
"Blessed assurance—Jesus is mine."

And beloved, time will not permit me to tell of John B. Gough,—saved, redeemed and transformed through the blessed Redeemer. But I have given you sufficient. He is the Redeemer of depraved humanity. He sees himself in you and me. He breaks the power of cancelled sin. He sets the prisoner free. His blood can make the vilest clean. His blood availed for me.

Thirdly: Christ is today ruler over the most remarkable empire the world has ever seen. The kingdom over which Christ is ruler is a safe kingdom. No other kingdom is safe, but this kingdom; a spiritual kingdom is safe. Again, this remarkable kingdom, over which Christ rules, is a kingdom which the saints washed and redeemed by the precious blood—shall possess. A kingdom of saints! Oh! beloved, what a kingdom! You and I, sinless then, shall possess the kingdom. There is nothing to compare with the kingdom where Jesus rules.

It is said that one time during the reign of Queen Victoria she heard a sermon in Westminster Abbey on the second coming of Christ. The good queen was much moved over the thought of this Christ coming to earth again. After the sermon, with eyes filled with tears, this great queen—ruler of one of earth's greatest monarchies—walked down the aisle and kneeling, said, "Archbishop, do you think Jesus Christ will come during my reign?" Said the archbishop,

5:2). For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead; and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again (II Cor. 5:14, 15).

OUR MEDITATIONS

"Once earthly joy I craved, sought peace and rest;
Now thee alone I seek, give what is best.
This all my prayer shall be—more love O Christ, to thee,
More love to thee, more love to thee."

Love is that virtue or grace of character which fulfills all the commandments of God. It is the spirit of Jesus in the world. It promotes in the highest degree the happiness of him who exercises it, and prompts him to make others perfectly happy, so that a world in which love reigned would be as happy as it could be, for each would like to serve the other.

If we love God we delight in the beauty and loveliness of his character, and give hearty devotion to whatever pleases him, and promotes his glory. Love leads to ready obedience to his will and to Christ-like sacrifice for the salvation of men. Love is the bond between God and men. It expresses itself in our desire to be like him; in regard for his Word and worship; in confidence in his promises, and in brotherly attachment for his people. We are to love our neighbor as ourself. That is, any man whose welfare we may in any manner promote, whatever be his race, worldly possessions, social position, or moral character, even though he be our enemy, we are bound to serve him because he is our fellow man, and we are all children of God as our common Father.

Love is the key that will unlock the door of many hearts. Christ's love for the world led him to a life of service. It also drew many to him. If our hearts are filled with his love, we will be less mindful of self and ever ready to extend a helping hand to those in need about us. It will make us self-forgetful and self-giving. It is said that during the late war, after a boat had been torpedoed, two sailors almost exhausted from swimming about in the water, came to a drifting spar, which, while sufficiently buoyant to keep either of them afloat, sank under the combined weight of both, so they were constrained to take alternate turns in buffeting the heavy swell and of clinging to the piece of wood. However, they soon saw that this could not last long, so the one said to the other, "Goodbye, mate, death means life to me, but you are not converted, so keep hold and save yourself." So saying, he let go his hold only to be carried away by the waves to drown. The other man was rescued and now tells how that act of love and service brought about his own conversion.

"Oh, love is the need of the world! Down under its pride of power, Down under its lusts of greed, for the joys that last but an hour,

There lies forever its need.
For love is the law and the creed;
And love is the aim and the goal
Of life, from the man to the mole.
The need of the world is love."

OUR PRAYER

O God, thou art worthy of all our love. Just now breathe into us the spirit of thy love. Help us to be like Jesus our Savior, entirely devoted to the good of others. Let selfishness be cast out of our hearts, that we may do unto others as we would that they should do unto us. Help us to be kind and helpful to those in need and in sorrow, to be forgiving to those who injure us, to do good to our enemies, and to devote ourselves to the saving of lost souls. Bind us to thyself in perfect love. Show us what thou wilt have us to do and whatever may be the sacrifice required may we render to thee a ready obedience. Fill us with thy love and endue us with power from on high, that we may be overcomers in this world of sin. This we ask in Jesus name and for his sake, Amen.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Spirit of Love the Key to Service By Mrs. Maud Cripe Webb

OUR SCRIPTURE

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. John 3:16. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you. John 15:13, 14. Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren (1 John 3:16). But God commandeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us (Romans 5:8). Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law (Romans 13:10). By this we know we love the children of God, when we love God and keep his commandments (1 John

Winning Others to Christ. By Miles J. Snyder

The Christian life is not only a profession but also an activity. Religion consists not only in being but also in doing. We are saved not only to escape condemnation but also to serve. The task that at once confronts the disciple of Christ is the winning of others to an acceptance of their Savior. There is no other duty in the Christian life so imperative, no other service of such far-reaching consequences and no other labor attended with such joyous and blessed rewards.

In considering the work of winning others to Christ, perhaps the thing of first importance is the value of a soul. The soul is the divine part of man's nature. It is the thing which makes man great. His body is composed of dust like the bodies of other animals, but the soul is inbreathed by the living God; it is the life. Science can account for the body of man and can imprison in an urn all the dust that represents the body, but the soul escapes the destroyer; poverty cannot degrade it, fire cannot consume it, death cannot touch it. It is divine in its origin, capacious in its possibilities, eternal in its existence and of infinite value in God's sight.

Long ago the question was asked by the Man of Galilee, "What is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his soul, or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" And for over nineteen hundred years this question has echoed along the highways of life. The import of it is that there is nothing to compare in value to the soul. Gain all the prizes the world bestows—riches, honor, pleasure, fame—and they are as feathers in value when weighed in the balance with the soul. All other things are earthly in nature, unsatisfying in results and transitory in character. Get all the world offers and lose the soul, and the good in the gain will be imaginary while the evil in the loss will be real.

And the soul can be lost. The Bible says so and the experiences of life confirm it. Neither does one need to wait until death to have the eternal destiny of the soul determined. Sin in human life writes the verdict through the passing years. Right before our very eyes men and women are losing their souls. Long ago in the Old Testament it was written, "The soul that sinneth it shall die;" and in the New Testament we read, "The wages of sin is death." And the Old and the New Testaments agree in affirming that "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Sin is the tragic element in human life. Its entrance into the world is the story of the lost Eden. It is a stubborn reality that cannot be denied. "If we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us."

But sin which causes the soul to be lost has a remedy in the person and power of Jesus Christ. The voice of one crying in the wilderness said, "Behold, the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world!" John the beloved apostle exclaimed, "Ye know that he was manifested to take away sins." Paul the missionary joyously cried out, "Faithful is the saying and worthy of all acceptance that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." And the Lord himself said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth him that sent me, hath eternal life and cometh not into judgment; but hath passed out of death into life."

Realizing then the value of the soul, being assured of the reality and destroying power of sin, and looking to Jesus as the Savior of all who believe on him, we are ready to consider the important question, "How can the remedy be applied?" Strange as it may seem, the great majority of men and women will not, unaided by others, seek the remedy for sin but will of their own choice, prompted by the devil, go on to destruction and eternal ruin. Multitudes are concerned about their health and provide generously for the comforts of the body, but leave the soul out of their calculations. They insure their houses and crops and automobiles, but let their souls go to hell. Out of nearly forty specific cases of healing recorded in the Gospels, only six came on their own accord and the healing remedy applied because of their own individual faith; while about twenty hard cases were brought to Christ by others and were healed, not because of their own faith or asking but because of the faith and the petitions of those who brought them.

It is this lamentable, universal age-long condition of indifference and unconcern on the part of the sin-sick people of the world which affords the opportunity and makes necessary the work of the soul-winner. Every true Christian is called to the task of winning others to Christ. In the first chapter of John's gospel we see how it is to be done. John the baptist pointed out Jesus to John and Andrew. Straightway they went and found their brothers Peter and James. Then Jesus himself found Philip, and he in turn went after his friend Nathaniel and brought him to Jesus.

Without such personal and persistent finding and bringing on the part of saved men and women, the great majority of the lost will never come to him who is their only hope. It was, then, to just such work the Master called his disciples when he said, "Come ye after me and I will make you to become fishers of men."

Of course, certain qualifications are necessary to be a successful soul-winner; but every person who is saved has all the qualifications needed to begin this glorious work. There must be a realization of the value of the soul. One must have the conviction that a soul without Christ is really lost. Remember always that Jesus is not only an advantage but an absolute necessity! No person is getting along well without him! Then, recognizing these two facts, there must follow a deep sense of individual responsibility to bring with the Holy Spirit's help, to lost souls a saving knowledge of Christ's salvation, together with an earnest desire to win others to a declaration of faith in their Savior and loyal allegiance to him.

To do this will require prayer, definite, believing and continued. It will require ability to use well the Word of God, which is the "sword of the Spirit;" and confidence in the word and promises of God. It will necessitate an exemplary, consistent Christian life. It will require patience which can endure stubborn resistance, and perhaps insolence and insult. And it will call for earnest persistence, which is patience in action. In the Gospel we have a picture of the Good Shepherd seeking that which was lost. He journeyed on in his search "until he found it;" just as the woman in the parable sought her lost coin "until she found it;" and as the father, having watched long, went out to meet the returning prodigal and was glad "for this my son was dead and is alive again." God has said, "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

The results which follow the work of winning souls to Christ are many and altogether satisfactory. If one helps another to gain money, he has no assurance whether it will be a blessing to the possessor or not; it may be a curse. If one helps another to some position of worldly power, he cannot be sure he has done a good thing for his friend, for it may prove to be his undoing. But if one is concerned about the soul of another and exerts an influence that will turn thoughts and affections away from things which are low and transient and unworthy and turn them toward things high and holy and eternal, then without a doubt that life has been blessed beyond compare. Winning a soul to Christ means that you have helped to change a life, uplift a community, and make happy a home; that you have had a part in awakening a soul to newness of life and adding joy and goodness and purity to the world.

It is all summed up in the words of James when he says, "He who converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death." Three great words should be noted here—"save," "soul," "death." To save not only means to save from hell but to save to holiness, to happiness, to heaven, to a knowledge of God and fellowship with him." The soul is the personality, the whole man, the eternal spirit within. Death does not mean non-existence, but wrong existence, separation from God and all good. This makes the winning of souls to Christ the most glorious work in which anyone can engage, as well as the most solemn obligation that rests upon the Christian.

And not only does the work of soul-winning bring blessings of inestimable value to the saved, but it carries rich rewards to the one who engages in it. It brings him into more vital touch with his Savior; it is a source of unspeakable joy; it thrills one with happiness in the consciousness of doing the right; it refines the worker's character and purifies his motives and strengthens his purposes of life. Truly, as the Book of Life says, "He that winneth souls is wise;" and, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

The time will come when the stars shall fall and constellations be extinguished and the last watch-fire of the sky expire in the gathering darkness, but the faithful soul-winners, God's workers in the home circle, in the Sunday school, in the church, shall survive the death of sun and moon and stars, and shine on for ever and ever "in the city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God."

"Earth's richest gems are gaudy trash,
And honor's glittering stars are dim,

And fame's rewards are valueless,
Beside the jewels which will flash
Forever in the crown of him

Who wins a soul to righteousness."
Milledgeville, Illinois.

"I don't know, he may." "Oh!" she said, "If I thought he would come now I would cast the crown of England at his feet." Jesus is the ruler of the most remarkable empire—an empire of love, not hate, an empire of peace, an empire of loyal subjects and not of traitors. Together the subjects are singing and will sing down through the centuries:

All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him, Lord of all.

Now, lastly: Christ is the restorer of lost order wherever he is obeyed. This has been demonstrated in history. I will not speak of the individual life—having done so in speaking of him as redeemer. And that he restores order in the home is self-evident. The happy homes are those where Jesus rules. However, I will for a moment speak and say that he does restore civic and national order where he is obeyed. There is no city so corrupt, no city so unclean, but what Jesus can if obeyed make pure. One example in our times: I read some time ago of a minister of Jesus Christ who became burdened with a sense of the corruption of the city in which he lived and preached. He could not keep quiet any longer. He gathered facts, he filed his affidavits, and then thundered from his pulpit against the corruption of the city—backing his utterances by carefully accumulated testimony.

The result we know; for the moment Tammany was swept out and Charles Parkhurst, uttering the will of Christ, cleansed New York, and gave it the opportunity of purity. Tammany came back with power because the church, when the victory was won, went to sleep; ceasing her watchfulness she closed her churches for three months during the hot weather. The devil won back, while they rested, the power, which they had wrested from him while they were awake and fighting in obedience to the voice of Jesus. When Christ is heard and obeyed, he restores lost order. All cities could be clean if Jesus were obeyed.

Now then, to sum up, these facts about Jesus are indisputable. No man of intelligence, or woman either, will deny the glory of his ideal. Even Rabbi Hirsch, of Chicago, says that Jesus is counted among them as one of their greatest teachers. No man will deny his power to redeem for we see that power transform lives every day. No one will deny that he is the ruler of the most remarkable empire—spiritual and enduring to the end. Nor will anyone deny the certainty of his power to restore. Men may differ about the mystery of his person, the methods of his power, but these facts I have given you tonight are beyond dispute.

The personal Christ, our leader and the great magnet of our faith, cannot be eliminated from history. He lives! He lives forever! Our fathers, where are they gone? They are only remembered by their faith. And the prophets, gone—gone. But Christ ever lives and forever will be the guide and teacher of his church. This is the supreme hope of our religion. This answers its past history and will answer for the hope that is within us.

"Jesus shall reign where ere the sun,
Does his successive journeys run;
His kingdom spreads from shore to shore
Till moons shall wax and wane no more."
South Bend, Indiana.

The Missionary's Influence

A British officer in South Africa one day rode a long distance on the trail of a thief. At dusk he came to the village where the men had been drinking the fiery native rum, and were shrieking and dancing around the fire and shaking their spears. But there was no other village near and both his horse and himself were tired and hungry. So he calmly greeted the chief of the village and requested food and a place at the fire.

"Man of blood (soldier)," said the chief sullenly, "we did not bid you come, so we will not bring you food. Now go!" and he shook his spear fiercely. The officer knew that at least his horse must rest before he could return. He led the horse to a pool of water near, removed the saddle, and, while the horse drank and grazed on the grass, he sat down on the saddle and unthinkingly began to sing softly "In the cross of Christ I glory." This hymn is a favorite at the mission stations, and is usually the first one translated into the African dialects.

The natives listened, then began to join in the song. When finished, the chief came with friendly words. Two women came laden with food for the officer. When he mounted his horse he was entreated to stay, but with thanks he rode away.

A month later, meeting a native from that village in camp, he asked the explanation of the sudden change from foes to friends. "Why," said the native, "our chief said, 'The man of blood is singing a missionary hymn. The missionaries are our friends. They clothe us and give us medicine. The man of blood may be a missionary, though he wears the uniform of a soldier. Let us be kind to him.'"

The officer undoubtedly owed his life to his knowledge of a hymn.

MISSIONS

From Our Little African Missionary

Brazzaville, French Equatorial Africa,
May 15, 1919.

My dear little friends:

I am sorry that I have so long neglected writing to you, but you know three children are busier when together than one could possibly be alone. Then too, I have had the so-called "influenza" again. This time I was ill for nine days. I was anointed again, and everyone felt sure that Jesus would make me well again. I was so restless I couldn't lie down all the time and mamma kept me wrapped up in a big blanket, and held me a great deal. Of course she couldn't hold me all the time, and all were so busy, that I used to cry very much. One of the many boys who came around the camp would stand where I could see him from the tent door and smile at me. I called him "my friend," and asked mamma if I couldn't have him hold me. So he used to hold me by the hour and was the only person to whom I was willing to go from mamma. After I got well and strong again, he went to work for a white man near here, and I missed my friend very much. One morning I woke up with high fever again, this time from malaria and kept saying, "I want my friend, I want my friend." Of course mamma couldn't get him for me, but she called in one of the men who was working for daddy. He has such a smiling face and looked so much like Goreh that I said, "I want Loubasi for my friend." So Loubasi helped to take care of me, but I did not love him as much as Goreh, whom mamma called "a ragbag with a heart." My fever was very high that day, and I told mamma I wanted Uncle William to "put some oil on my head," as he had done both times when I had "influenza." I heard Uncle William tell mamma he was a little fearful that I was trusting in the oil, and not in Jesus. But when he asked me, I told him it was Jesus who would make me well. So I was anointed for the third time this year; the next morning my fever was all gone, and I haven't had a rise of temperature since. I told mamma it was too bad we didn't have nice oil when the house fell down, but mamma only smiled.

Marie and Julia have a dear little goat. Not long ago a tiny little baby goat was born to it, but it didn't live and the mamma goat felt very sad, and didn't give us any milk. So we still drink milk out of a tin, or malted milk. I like the malted milk best, as I was brought up on it. We all like eggs so well, but it is very hard to buy enough of them; we often pray that Jesus will put it into the hearts of the people to bring eggs to sell, and he does answer prayers. We have a few chickens now to keep down the scorpions and the centipedes. The rooster is such a fine big tame one. It was given to Aunt Toddy by a French lady whom she nursed. Then we have a little hen that the governor's wife gave us children, to lay eggs for us, and another little hen that we bought. We get so hungry for meat sometimes, as it is not butchered daily here, and is very expensive. The big folks talk about butchering the little goat, but I do not think we ought to do that.

May 12th was a big day for us children, as it was the day that the little wagon which daddy ordered from America over a year ago, came. Daddy had to put it together that night and he didn't get through until late, but I couldn't go to sleep as I could hear him working outside of the tent. So when it was finished I asked mamma to bring it in. She had rather a hard time getting in with it, as we have our tent so full, but she put it beside my little camp bed, and brought the candle, so that I could peep through the mosquito net at it. I asked her to put my favorite dolly in it to sleep that night, and then I went to sleep too, for there was great joy in my heart. The wagon is called a "Dreadnaught Coaster," and is ball-bearing, which daddy says is fine, but we are sorry it has no springs like the Sherwood wagon which daddy ordered. Two of us girls can get in at once. The other day when Julia wasn't very well, daddy put boxes in for seats, and Marie and I went into Brazzaville. Loubasi pulled us. We were so glad to have the ride together, but we were sorry Julia could not be with us.

The same day that the little wagon came another event of great importance to us three little girls occurred. The governor's wife invited us to tea. She sent her "push" for us. You know a bushear or "pousse-pousse," is a little cart with a single wheel. It is supposed to be for one passenger only, but we three little girls are glad to get in one when we have a chance. We were royally entertained, and enjoyed our cake and tea immensely. The governor's wife can talk English, and so she conversed in English with us children, and in French with Aunt Toddy, who was with us. We came home tired and happy. Now we have the four-wheeled push of our own, we take rides every day.

When the little wagon came, many other things came with it. We were so glad to get the oatmeal, as we have had none for more than two months. We were glad also to see the malted milk. There were seven big bottles of it, but alas, four of them were crushed. We felt very badly, and tried to save all we could, although it was very difficult on account of the broken glass. We tried to save all we could, and managed to get two bottles out of the four. We took out all the glass we could see, but we strain all of the milk before we drink it, to be sure there are no tiny particles that we couldn't see. Two of the bottles had been broken so long that they had solidified, broken glass in the midst. We thank Jesus for the three bottles that were unbroken.

I must tell you, too, about my new shoes. I had been waiting for them so long, that we were afraid they would be too small, but the Lord was faithful and had the people send larger than we ordered. You see daddy ordered 8's and 9's, and they sent 8½'s and 10's. The smaller ones just fit me now, and being the first high-topped shoes I have ever had, I am very proud of them. Uncle Antoine bought me a pair of sandals in Kinshassa when he went over some time ago. I am so proud of them, too, but I feel almost selfish to have so many shoes all at once.

Uncle Antoine and daddy have been very busy putting up grass shelters over the tents to preserve them from the weather and to better protect us from the sun. Our tents are very good ones and do not leak. Not long ago an elephant hunter who is going up into the country where we hope to go soon, called to know where such tents could be procured, as he heard they were of the very best. We have two little houses in the camp now. Uncle William lives in one and Aunt Toddy in the other. There are two grass shelters. Uncle Antoine and Aunt Mary and Marie and Julia moved into theirs today, and we will move into ours tomorrow.

Last Sunday Uncle Antoine preached in English and French to a little congregation near here. They are originally people from Sierra Leone, so-called coast-men and were just dedicating their new church. We all went to the service, something which we cannot often do, as it is about three miles away. We had the pleasure of riding in the "pushes" kindly loaned us by the Swedish Mission under whose auspices the work is being carried on.

I saw two little black boys there who used to be my playmates about a year ago, when we lived in our little house near the shores of the Congo. Their names are Paul and Alfred, and they are little princes, the grandsons of an African king. They may come to live near us again soon and if they do, of course, we will play with them. How would you like to sit in your little express wagon and have it pulled by a swarthy prince of Africa? Such are some of the joys of little missionaries!

We are having cold weather now. We wear our woolen dresses in the morning and evening and sleep under warm blankets at night.

We thank our heavenly Father for providing for all our needs.

We are so glad that we are little missionaries,—Marie and Julia and I. We are praying and believing that Jesus will soon give us that entrance to the darkened tribes of French territory for which we have so long been waiting.

We pray for you at home that Jesus may be glorified in your lives also. We thank you for your love and your prayers. Marie and Julia and I are as glad to get letters as our papas and mammas are. We thank God for all his loving provision for you and for us. May our lives be to his glory.

Lovingly,

MARGUERITE EDNA GRIBBLE.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

MIDDLEBRANCH, OHIO

News from this field has been very scarce during the past year not because nothing has been done but because of failure to report. Since the great evangelistic campaign held by A. E. Thomas the membership has manifested positive activity along many lines. The epidemic last fall hindered the work but early this year everything came back to normal. The Sunday audiences have been large, especially in the evening, and very appreciative of the efforts of the minister. At the regular services on June 22 one made the great confession and was baptized on July the 5th, with another young sister who had made the confession some months before but had not been baptized as yet. The Sunday school is in fine condition and under the fine leadership of John Hang we expect continual progress to be made. The women of the church have organized an S. S. C. E. and under the efficient leadership of Sister Emma Brumbaugh are doing things worth while. This society is one of the real forward steps of the last year. A budget system of finance has been adopted but some of its provisions have not as yet been put across, viz., the Evangelist in every home. The regular missionary offering of the church was doubled this year and from now on Middlebranch should have no trouble meeting all the various money requisitions that are made of her. One of the notable events of the last year was the Father and Son's Banquet which was given by the Men's Bible class assisted by the S. S. C. E. It was a great success for over ninety men and boys surrounded the tables and did justice to the fine supper. The special speakers of the occasion were Brethren Dyoil Belote and E. A. Rowsey, both of whom gave us fine messages. It was a great joy also to have with us our Brother, Captain H. P. Wise lately just out of the military hospital where he has been suffering from wounds gained in active service. He made a clean cut and forcible "pep" speech which was greatly appreciated. Dr. Corl, a beloved physician of Middlebranch, also made a toast to "fathers" as well as some other timely remarks. Altogether we are sure that the occasion was one long to be remembered and one productive of much good.

We severed our relations with Middlebranch along with the church at Gretna, Ohio during the last month.

Gretna, Ohio

Last fall we were called to minister to this church as a student pastor and during the succeeding nine months we enjoyed our service with the good people at Gretna immensely. Our work was hurt last fall due to sickness in the community but the people were loyal and as soon as possible rallied to the work and the last six months we had uninterrupted services. This congregation is especially fine in that it possesses a large number of leaders who are ready to plan new things and go ahead with their plans without the preacher to "boss" the job. All missionary and apportionment money is paid in full by this church right on time and every endeavor is made to keep all the organizations up to a front line standard. No praise is due the retiring pastor for any gains that have been made here during the year for we are of the opinion that the gains would have been made anyway. We regretted to leave this church after so short an acquaintance for we feel that we just began to know the field when we left it. We are proud to claim many friends among the good Brethren at Gretna.

Ohio to Iowa

Shortly after graduation from Ashland we left the east and finally found ourselves at Hudson, Iowa, to which place we had been called. The first service was held at this place on July 13th. The people here are just like people everywhere west of the Mississippi. They live in a fine country and are very wholehearted and hospitable. We will have more to report from this field later when we get to know the situation better. There is much to do but "trusting in the Lord Jesus for strength we will try to do whatsoever he would have us do." Pray for us, Brethren.

EDWIN BOARDMAN, JR.

LEON, IOWA

The Decatur county circuit of churches are making commendable progress since the epidemic has passed into history. The country churches are perpetually facing the prospect of shifting constituency, the rapid transferring of real estate being a contributing cause. Just now things look the best in some years. If the fall revival season is not interfered with some additions may be expected the coming season to make up for the loss by removal.

In the Leon church an effort is being made to pay off the debt with certainty of success ahead. A vigorous Sunday school is being maintained. A good Intermediate and a successful Senior Christian Endeavor are being kept up to the standard during the summer months, meeting at the same hour in different rooms. The Intermediates and Juniors working together are receiving especially valuable drilling in public prayer and reference hunting. The Junior lessons are used but are subordinate to this main training.

Mt. Etna, one hundred miles west is struggling away without pastoral care. Whitechapel, Missouri, forty miles southeast and inaccessible by rail, is going valiantly ahead, the members working in union work with others of various churches. If there were an interurban or cross railroad it would be possible to do more for the Whitechapel folks but in the west all lines seem to be parallel and headed for Chicago.

Near by some vast new possibilities for church extension are opening up with no solution of the man problem in sight unless more of our successful pastors lay their careers on the altar and tackle the job. Full reports will be made for National Conference.

FROM SPOKANE CORRESPONDENT

To the Readers of the Brethren Evangelist:

Our editor has already announced the first Brethren Bible Conference Spokane is to have, the first full week in August, the dedication of our new building being the 10th of August. This follows the California Bible Conference, some of whose speakers will stop with us on their way east. This is the first effort towards a District Conference, and Sunnyside will have a large share in it.

As chairman of the entertainment committee, I want to extend a hearty invitation to any other of our friends, who can come this way this summer. A few weeks' stop off may be secured on the way to, or from California.

Faithfully yours,

MRS. ALICE GOCHENOUR.

113 Baldwin Ave. Spokane, Wash.

LINWOOD, MARYLAND TO LOUISVILLE, OHIO

October 1, 1914, the writer began his ministry as the first resident pastor at Linwood. Nearly five years were spent with these people. These beginning years shall always be cherished because of our first practical lessons. Our first baptismal service, funeral service, marriage ceremony, anointing and communion services were performed here. During our pastorate here we learned to know people in practically every town from Hagerstown to Baltimore. In the midst of this large acquaintanceship we tried to make ourselves a community factor, directing and leading for the cause of righteousness.

Our last nine months in Linwood were especially busy ones. Due to our proximity to the Capital City, so many Carroll county school teachers were enticed to take governmental work. Because of this state of affairs, I was asked to add to my pastoral duties the responsibility of the village school of thirty-four pupils. These nine months were profitable in more ways than one. No better opportunity to study child life and development can ever come to any one than in the public school.

The last year's church work was especially gratifying. Attendance at all services was very good. As to the work of the different departments we have reported before. We carried out a quite full program of special services the last two months, and on several occasions, the crowds were more than could be accommodated. At one of our special services near the close of our pastorate we saw our friends of Rocky Ridge (12 miles distant) with pastor Rev. P. E. Heimer, make a response to our visit with them about eight months before, when they arrived at Linwood, one hundred strong with a choir of twenty-four. They gave excellent service and our two evenings together shall long be remembered. By special request the writer preached two sermons to these people in their own church before leaving the east. Last but not least of the busy season was the Maryland and Virginia conference, which was entertained at Linwood. The conference was a good one and attended by about 125 delegates and friends aside from a large number of local people.

As an expression of appreciation of our services we received a check from the treasurer, also a number of individual checks and bills of different denominations, a hand-painted picture and to son Jack a silver drinking mug. We are very thankful for all these gifts and pray that God may lead these dear people with the new pastor, Brother Horlacker to be a great church in famous Carroll county.

Six hours after the conference adjourned we said "good bye" to a crowd of people who had gathered at the station to see us start for Louisville. As to the work at Louisville and Georgetown I shall not say much, as yet, since we have only been on the field five weeks. However, we are highly pleased to note the activity at each place and can readily see where Brother Baer has exercised consecrated leadership with great results. At each place the Brethren Day and Children's Day programs have been successfully carried out.

One thing more. Upon our arrival at the parsonage we found a nice garden awaiting us. Many things were ready for us, among them was a patch of choice strawberries. We are very grateful to all who gave plants and energy to make the garden what we found.

As pastor and people we hope to be nightly used in God's service.

E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor

ARMSTRONG CHARGE

Things too numerous to mention have delayed any news from this work. We have two corresponding secretaries but both have failed thus far to communicate some things of real importance. However we shall take up the thread of intelligence by stating that Brother Harley of Pittsburg, gave us a two weeks' meeting at Kittanning, and while no numerical increase accrued, the church was strengthened spiritually as never before. Rev. Harley's sermons were highly appreciated and he was well received by our West Kittanning people. I feel sure that had he remained a couple of weeks longer we would have had a number of additions to the church. We want to thank the state board for the help on their part to make possible the help he gave us.

I cannot quite understand why strong and efficient young men like Brother Harley cannot be placed at places like this where they are needed and would be sure to build up strong churches.

Well our work is making some progress, slow but sure. We have partly recovered from the effects of war and "flu" and financial depression. We lost three Brethren members by death, each leaving a widow and children.

Blanco, a front rank Sunday school is no more as a result of war, "flu" and families moving away. Brush Valley, Meyers and Kittanning are still forging ahead. There are not enough names in many of our departments to meet the requirements of the Four Year Program. "I think by the time the Program is completed we will be at the starting point and that means two years of actual progress.

Our Bible schools are doing good work. Brush Valley has their second teacher's training class well on the way. Then at Kittanning we have an interesting class. Brother Herbert John, our superintendent, is teacher, and a good one at that. We are not discouraged but would like to correspond with some young preacher who has had some experience handling new work, one who, if he works, can have a large congregation in a few years, by patient perseverance. A good mixer with young and old is needed.

E. H. SMITH.

KRYPTON, KENTUCKY

A Revival

Brother and Sister Drushal have just gone, after a week's meeting. Sister Drushal and the children came up on Saturday, and were with us over Sunday, and Brother Drushal was with us through the week. The meetings were short but splendidly done. The crowds could have been larger yet the smallest crowd we had was 52 and I think we had as many as 100 at one evening. There was one confession and had the meeting continued for two or three weeks there would have been several. Brother Drushal certainly did his part well. Every sermon he preached was good, and backed up by the blessed old Book. I am sure the work has been greatly helped. May the Lord bless Brother and Sister Drushal as they continue their labor in the mountains.

A Treat for You

We are going to bring a moonshine still with us to Winona in a few weeks. But do not get excited, the still is still and will remain still while there, and forever still as the officers cut it up too badly for future use. The still was captured Sunday morning near our Sunday school at Chavies and if left alone a few hours longer would have finished up a run of 25 gallons of moonshine whiskey. The officers turned the copper still over to the writer. Will tell you more later.

To the Home Mission Board

This will likely be the last time the writer will have the privilege of reporting through the Evangelist from this place. And for that reason I would like to take the space just now to say, it has been a pleasure to work with such a devoted, fraternal, untiring body of men and women as those who compose our Home Mission Board. We feel indebted to you for your ever untiring counsel and kindness. If space would permit, we would like to make mention of each of you who have rendered such valuable assistance. However, we feel that it would not be out of place and that special mention is due Brother Carpenter, the president of this mission board, who has so faithfully represented each of you. It is to him we write most. It is to him we pour out our troubles, our perplexities, our woes. And in speaking for ourselves, we can say, Brother Carpenter has nobly played the part of the good Samaritan. Often we have felt the piercing darts of the enemy and for the present disabling us for the greatest efficiency, but a letter from Brother Carpenter usually carried with it the oil and the wine and that which bound up the wounds that sent us on our mission with greater zeal and determination. At no time have we doubted your implicit trust in us. We felt you were square behind us. You gave us that impression at every turn. You encouraged, you praised, you inspired and that is perhaps the secret of the success. So if there is any honor, we feel it is yours. We most heartily thank you.

J. S. COOK.

FOR PREACHERS ONLY

With the belief that we shall be helped by spending some time together, arrangements are being made for a luncheon for the preachers only, which is to be held on Thursday noon, during conference week, at Winona Lake, at a place to be announced later. The price is not to be more than 75 cents, and less if it may be arranged for. A number of short addresses will be given, and a general good and helpful time is expected. Let every preacher plan now to be there.

Members of the Ministerial Association are hereby reminded of the fact, that the annual dues of 25 cents must be paid before the new membership card can be issued. The card will bear the date of September 1.

MARTIN SHIVELY,

Secretary-Treasurer National Ministerial Association.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

The Dallas Center canvass came in between the Maple Grove and the Udell canvasses and ordinarily would have been reported before Udell. However, I shall make the Maple Grove-Udell report at this time, and the Dallas Center report next week.

Maple Grove

The Maple Grove church is a country congregation, and because it is comparatively close to North English, Williamsburg, and Millersburg, it sometimes goes by either of those names; and yet, correctly speaking, Maple Grove is the name of this congregation. It was in this church that the late Elder John A. Myers labored for so many years. And it was also in this congregation that Ethel and Estella Myers grew up—the former having worked in our school at Lost Creek, Kentucky, and the latter being now in Africa.

My work in this church began Sunday morning, July 6th, and it was our privilege in this first service to dedicate a splendid bell which had been presented to the Maple Grove church by Sister Myers as a memorial to her husband, Brother John A. Myers. To render this service was indeed a pleasure, although not unmixed with sadness, because I knew Brother Myers so long and so well; and when the first rich, musical notes of that bell went out over the surrounding country that morning it brought to me not a few sacred memories of the man in whose honor the bell had been installed. I tried to talk on what seemed to be the most fitting theme for the occasion, "The Immortality of a True Life."

Brother W. H. Miller is the pastor at Maple Grove. Unfortunately for me and the cause of endowment, Maple Grove seems to be up against the parsonage proposition. But lest anyone should jump at hasty conclusions I may say that Brother Miller is closing his work at Maple Grove this fall. And the point at which my misfortune came in was that the pastor during past months had kept the minds of his people on the parsonage question more than the endowment question. Consequently my work was seriously handicapped from the start. By very hard work we raised $600 at Maple Grove. This does not do justice to Maple Grove. From my viewpoint Maple Grove should have gone from $1500 upward. But we do not all see alike, which may be a good thing; and after I have done my very best at a place the responsibility does not rest with me. And whether right or wrong, my own personal conviction is that at this time the adequate endowment of Ashland College is far more vital and important than the local plans of any congregation. I think I can readily see that if the Brethren church does not rise up in her utmost strength and make Ashland College safe, our local congregations may not have much need of parsonages. Parsonages are intended for preachers; and if we do not preserve our only school which gives us the large percentage of our preachers, what need will there be for parsonages? At least, these are the thoughts running through my own mind.

But notwithstanding we worked hard at Maple Grove and were somewhat disappointed over the results, yet they were days of pleasure too. The Maple Grove people are a very hospitable people. We could not possibly accept all the kind invitations to dinners or suppers, or lodgings that came to us. But we did receive entertainment in the Myers, Pope, Bell, Miller homes, and to all of these friends I am grateful. I am also grateful to Brother Wm. Sanger for his fine Buick which he most cheerfully placed at our service, and to Brother W. H. Miller for his assistance. I am still hoping that when Maple Grove has disposed of the parsonage question she will still insist on having a much larger part in permanent endowment for our college.

Udell

It does not take many figures to indicate the Udell result. However, if any of my readers suppose that because the Udell result is small my efforts there were likewise small they are surely mistaken. I have raised $2,000 or even $2,500 in some places with the same or even less effort than brought $475 at Udell. In the Third church in Philadelphia I raised $500 in the two regular services of the Sunday I was there. At Udell I preached five times and worked very hard during the days, with a result less than that of our little mission in Philadelphia. Nor are you to suppose that Udell is poor, by no means. I think I have correctly diagnosed Udell's case. What is more, I think I could prescribe a cure for her. And what is still more, I think I can forecast with a great deal of accuracy Udell's future if she keeps on in her present course. But I shall not trust myself to say any more at this point.

Brother Austin Staley has served this church a year. My fuller acquaintance with Brother Staley has kindled in my heart great love and respect for him. Udell is Brother Staley's home. And when he showed me the forty acre farm he sold when he was near thirty years of age that he might go and prepare for the ministry, right then and there

ENDOWMENT

I knew that I was in company with a true man of God. Staley's example of consecration ought to be quite sufficient to make Udell think. Well, Brother Staley, entered heart and soul with me in the canvass of his congregation. He loves Ashland College and he wanted to see his people make good. He drove his Ford like Jehu drove his chariot in taking me over the congregation. And he knows and the good Lord knows we did our best.

I am glad Brother Staley and his good wife will be back in school at Ashland this fall. Brother Ralph Atkinson now in school here at Ashland is also a Udell product. And this fall a year another young man from Udell will come to begin his preparation for the ministry. While the result at Udell is small, yet in fairness I must say some few gave until they felt it. I stopped with Brother Staley most of the time. But I was also in the homes of Brethren Charles Ulrich, Columbus Whisler, J. J. Taylor, and W. T. Staley. Udell has an exceptionally fine lot of young people. And what is still more, in a very rich part of Iowa, this church might, if she choose, have a great future. But God is not giving even a Brethren church what it does not aspire to or covet. We preached the last night to a large audience and at the close two young men accepted Christ. The credit for this belongs to Brother Staley. He had worked faithfully and prayed much for these men.

CERRO GORDO, ILLINOIS

It has been some time since the church at Cerro Gordo, Illinois, has been heard from. But we are all alive and working hard with Brother D. A. C. Teeter as our pastor. We have accomplished many things the last year and hope to accomplish much more.

All the auxiliaries of the church are working fine. We have had five additions to the church the last year, two by relation, two by letter and one by baptism. The budget system has been adopted here this year and has been completed.

We observed Brethren Day June 15. The men gave a splendid program in the morning and then we all enjoyed a fine dinner in the basement of the church. In the afternoon, Brother Teeter gave us a stirring sermon on, "Why I Belong to the Brethren Church," which I think was enjoyed by all who heard it.

We will have the district conference here this fall. We are enjoying this privilege very much and hope to have a good conference.

Brother Beachler was with us from Sunday, June 29, until July 2, with meetings each evening. We enjoyed having him with us very much, and wish him much success in the great work he is so nobly doing for our college.

MRS. HELENA BOGUE,
Corresponding Secretary.

FROM LANARK, ILLINOIS

Our quarterly business meeting was held on the evening of July 17th. The reports from the different treasurers showed good accounts to our credit. Each one had some cash on hand.

The special treasurer for the new building fund made a most excellent report. He said there would be very little, if any, loss, in the subscriptions made at the dedication, and that soon the entire debt would be paid off. The S. S. C. E. reported their banner year in handling funds. The different activities of the church seemed to be in good working order.

We have decided to hold our revival in October and are looking forward to a large ingathering. Beachler is expected to put on his college campaign about that time.

We are much better equipped to do effective work during the coming year than we have been in the past. The real hot weather, and the very busy season of the year, has perceptibly cut the attendance at the different church activities.

The pastor has been given a Sunday evening vacation for the last Sunday in July and until after national conference.

A full quota of delegates has been elected for the conference. Lanark will be there on the spot with her "hat in the ring" for business. The only unwise thing our business meeting did, in our estimation, was to elect the writer church correspondent.

VACATION NOTES

No, the Business Manager has not been taking a vacation. He has almost forgotten what a vacation is like since coming into the Publishing House. But it seems that some of our churches and their pastors are on a vacation. It has been several weeks since anything has been said about the Evangelist subscription campaign, but those who have known me for twenty-five years know that I am a poor hand to talk unless I have something to talk about, so for some weeks I have said nothing. However we are glad to be able to publish the Evangelist Honor Roll once again with one additional church on the Roll and with two renewals as well.

It is one of the smaller congregations that has won a place on the Honor Roll this week, Eau Claire, Wisconsin, with Brother J. A. Baker in charge. As we stated some time ago, we extend a welcome with as much sincerity to a small congregation that wins this place as we do to the larger churches. Thus we welcome Eau Claire and commend her zeal.

The next church to merit a place on the Honor Roll for the second time is Clay City, Indiana, with Brother George W. Kinzie in charge. As we stated a year ago when this church first won its honors, Brother Kinzie's strength is not in his size, for he seems to have forgotten to complete his physical growth. But we remember the words, "Not to the strong is the battle, Not to the swift is the race; But to the true and the faithful, Victory is promised through grace." Brother Kinzie has the grace and has made the list larger this year than it was last year. Thanks, Brother Kinzie.

Just a few days ago we received a letter from Brother Willis E. Ronk, pastor of the Roann, Indiana, church, asking us to continue the entire list of the Roann subscriptions another year as the church had decided to continue the budget for the Evangelist. Brother Ronk adds, "The value of the Evangelist in every home in the congregation is too great to be overlooked."

We are glad for this repetition from Roann. Brother Ronk was not the pastor at the time the church won this place last year, but he has done a splendid work in having the plan continued.

That Five Thousand

No, we have not reached it, nor will we do so before the meeting of our Conference unless a few more churches become exceedingly active for a period during the hot weather. In our last notes we told you how we slipped 150 feet down toward the bottom of the well, and we have only gained a part of that back again. It will require continued activity to get up again to where we were or to go beyond by Conference time.

This has been a good year for the Publishing House and we shall not be ashamed of our annual report, but we do wish a few more of those who are indebted to the House would pay their bills before August first, so that we can close our financial year without having such heavy book accounts to report. Especially should the pastors pay up for the Conference Minutes and the Brethren Day Programs that were sent them. We have sent statements to you all and we would like to have our labors rewarded.

It does not look good to have the names of so many pastors on our books with unpaid bills. Please help us out, Brethren, and at the same time keep your own credit up to par.

R. R. TEETER,

Business Manager.

The Most Senseless Habit in the World

Of all the habits that fix themselves upon men with a vise-like grip, the habit of swearing is the most senseless. There are some imaginable excuses for certain other vices. The man who steals has something for his trouble. He who gets drunk has at least the temporary pleasure of the spree. He who gambles has the satisfaction of entertainment and is possibly rewarded with an occasional gain. He who lies stands the chance of gaining his point, or of avoiding an unpleasant experience. But he who swears gains nothing and has no satisfaction in the act. It requires not brains to be an expert at swearing; an idiot may excel the most brilliant. Yet everywhere it is engaged in with the utmost volubility.

I was connected with a gang of railroad workers when the Pennsylvania system was doubt tracking its main line, and I was astonished to note with what apparent ease and naturalness the men would engage in the most violent cursing; not under provocation, but in the ordinary conversation, as a means of emphasizing what they were saying, swearing as if it were as necessary and as natural as breathing. They would swear about the most commonplace things, their gardens, their houses, tools, jobs, neighbors, the prices, the crops, anything and everything, it mattered not what it was, was subjected to their foul oaths. I supposed such a custom was common only among the more or less rough class of people who worked on railroads and similar places.

Later I came in touch with some business men and a corps of clerks doing business with retail concerns all over the country, and I found the same pernicious habit. They swore with every breath. Not every one, of course, but many would curse about the most ordinary things until the very air was blue. No one seemed concerned about it. It was rather to be expected. The man who refrained was the more likely to be the subject of comment. But still I had been unconvinced that the habit was so universal; I thought I had been unfortunate in getting into another rough bunch.

At another time I found myself amongst a large body of college students at a large university, and to my surprise this same inane, disgusting profanity followed me. Young men swore as lustily as they laughed. They seemed to try to rival one another in their ability to spin off a reel of oaths. It is true there were some ruffians among the fellows to lead out in the game, but the well-bred, well-trained boys were not slow to take up the practice. I said to myself, What has gone wrong? Who is to blame for this irreverent and profane use of God's name? How could men have forgotten so completely? Or have they never heard that "thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain?"

For a few years I thought the prevalence of profanity was lessening. Men were becoming more reverent. There seemed to be more positive teaching and preaching against it. But just now it seems to be reviving, or to have revived. The oath is heard everywhere; on the street, in the shop, in the store, in the office, on the farm and even in the home. It is being indulged in by youth and old men alike, by children as well as adults, and (I am ashamed to say it) by women and girls as well as by men and boys. What is the cause of its revival? Some one has said it is a fruit of the late war. War always leaves a trail of debris and vice in its wake. It turns men's hearts backward and makes the world more hardened to worthy, thoughts and sentiments. And it may be that under the stress and trials and in the heat and crowds of war men have given way to the lower nature along this line as they have along others.

But whatever the cause, it is time to enter an objection. It is time for men who revere God and have a care for purity of speech and lofty thoughts to seek to turn back the tide of profanity and lead men to revere God and to have respect for their own faculties and the dignity of their own lives. Perhaps the most effective measure that can be taken to counteract the tendency to profanity is to show how utterly senseless the habit is and how inane and idiotic. If men can be made to see how silly and brainless it is, they will gradually break away from it.

A certain man who had charge of a school for boys in the south discovered that his boys were acquiring the swearing habit to a frightful degree. The principal brought to chapel the village's well known cheerful idiot, a negro youth of about the average age of the student body. "Whatever you do, young man, try to excel in it. Sam, show these boys how to curse." He did. After the performance, the principal asked if any student thought he could beat Sam swearing. None volunteered. "If I were you," he dryly remarked, "I'd do something a little idiot negro couldn't beat me doing." The dose cured the malady.

I said, the above might be the most effective measure in combating the evil, and for the man who makes no profession of Christianity, it may be. But for the man who pretends to be a follower of the lofty Christ (It is with shame that we must confess that many such do swear), there ought to be an insistence on cleanness of speech in the name of the church and of Christ who received their vows of loyalty and right living. Either their lives ought to be cleansed of this evil thing or the church ought to be cleansed of its evil members. For such, an appeal for regeneration that effects the tongue and the brain would probably result in the most permanent cure, and it is the most consistent appeal to make to such. At any rate, let us do something to stop the malady.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We received notice from the West Alexandria and New Lebanon, Ohio, Brethren churches that they were looking for a pastor. The correspondent's address will be found in the Ministerial and Church Exchange department. We hope they will soon find a shepherd.

Another welcome member to the family of churches on the Honor Roll is received this week. It is the First church of Philadelphia and it brings a large number of subscriptions to our list. Brother McClain is the wide-awake pastor of this church, and Brother Wm. Kolb, Jr., the active agent in putting the Evangelist proposition across, is the honored president of the Publishing Company. See Brother Teeter's report in the Business Manager's Corner.

Brother Lytle reports the work at Burlington and Darwin as progressing and still looking forward. A number of members have been added to the churches of this parish since the last report, and the pastor has been recalled for another year's work with an increase in salary. The churches that are increasing their pastor's salary are not only showing their appreciation for services rendered, but making it doubly certain of getting still better services in the future. The Brethren who are nearby will not fail to notice the announcement of the Darwin All-day Meeting and Basket Dinner for August 10th.

Our faithful campaign director of college endowment has more encouraging news for us this week. He reports from Dallas Center, Iowa, and states that the good people there under the leadership of Brother Porte were ready and waiting for the campaign. They put across an amount of which they need not be ashamed; they have pushed the thermometer up above the hundred and ten thousand mark. And it hasn't stopped yet. It must not stop until it has gone out at the top. If you will read President Jacobs' presentation of the needs of Ashland College, you will readily understand why it must not stop now. If the brotherhood will not come across with at least two hundred thousand now, the future of Ashland College can never be what it ought to be, and it will always be more or less embarrassed. But we believe the Brethren church will rise to seize the opportunity. There is no doubt about it if all will fall right in with the noble leadership of Brother Beachler in the endowment campaign and will hold up the arms of Dr. Jacobs and the faithful, consecrated, hard-working faculty, its larger future is fully assured.

It is very regrettable that the Brethren church of Garrison, Iowa, is no more, but it is a commendable thing that the few Brethren who remain were concerned about putting the money they had invested in their building in places where it can go on continually in its service of enlightenment and mercy. Brother Roscoe reports the gift made to the Benevolence Board, Brother Beachler reports the amount given to College Endowment and Brother Goughnour, who made a trip to Garrison to investigate and to give counsel in the matter, tells of the action and how it came about. A better disposition of the proceeds of the sale could not have been made, for college endowment is the biggest and most urgent need in the Brethren church today and a permanent fund for the care of our aged ministers is a close second. While the $200 is small standing alone as an endowment fund, yet it ought to serve as a true "nest egg" to induce the laying of more "golden eggs." Doubtless the good brethren who are left without a church home will do as Brother Goughnour suggests, place their membership in the most convenient nearby Brethren church, and we hope, especially since they must be without pastoral services, that they will never fail to keep in touch with the interests of the brotherhood at large and the Kingdom's growth in general through the weekly visits of The Brethren Evangelist.

That Easter offering about which we have all been so anxious is reported in this issue. It has been a long time coming, but whose fault is it? And some have not reported yet! Of course "It's better late than never," so hasten in with your report. But we have also heard, "It's better never late." So kindly remember next Easter,—but we will not argue that any longer, we are too anxious to rejoice over the splendid offering. Whoever thought we could or would do so well? Perhaps Brother Bauman and Dr. Miller and some of the other members of the Foreign Board did. They knew we could do it if we would, and very likely they had a pretty strong faith in our willingness. To tell the truth about it, we too believed it would be done if the matter were brought to the people clearly enough and forcible enough, and so we co-operated with the Foreign Board in every possible way to make your paper serve you as we knew you wanted it to do, and all together we went "over the top." Because of its large and growing subscription list, the Evangelist became a medium whereby the Foreign Board and others might bring a vision of the need of the great world for Christ into nearly four out of every five of the homes of the brotherhood, and you, when you saw the need, gave liberally and cheerfully. It is a great victory; to God be the glory. Our missionaries in Argentina and Africa are rejoicing that God has opened our eyes to the need in such a large way; Let us rejoice that to us was given the opportunity of sharing with them in this great work.

Those Conference Rates may not be all we might hope for, in fact, the "red tape" required and the difficulty of the conditions may make it impossible for us to qualify, at all. We have received some encouragement, but the territory from which the rates would be granted has not been extensive enough to take in all of our people and the requirements have appeared very stiff, therefore we may not be able to profit by the rates. The results of further correspondence will be announced later, very likely next week. In the meantime, let us begin to plan to take our full quotas of delegates, "rates or no rates." The King's business is important enough to take some people around the world to attend conferences; it is important enough to take some of our own number to South America and others to Africa; it ought to be important enough to take us to Winona Lake, Indiana. No, the conference cannot get along just as well without you. It needs you and you need the conference. You cannot serve your Master as well next year if you do not go. You will work with a narrower vision and your church and your Christ will have to suffer for it. You may be resourceful, but your resourcefulness cannot make up for lack of vision and inspiration which you will miss if you stay away from Winona. We have reason to believe that this is going to be a great conference. A favorable wind is blowing in that direction. Get into the current and raise your sails to catch the good breeze and see how much you will enjoy the trip.

Latest Report on Reduced Rates. As we were going to press a reply came from the Western Passenger Bureau stating that special reduced fares to our General Conference had been granted from all points west of Chicago and St. Louis. The former report received granted reduced fares east of Chicago and St. Louis. Now it's up to us to secure an attendance of 250. Everybody who is a member of the Brethren church and all dependent members of their families, who go and pay full fare are counted in the 250. Here is a paragraph quoted from the letter received by the secretary of the executive committee, Brother J. A. Garber:

"Full fare will be paid on the going trip and tickets for the return journey will be sold at one-third fare, via the same routes as traveled on the going trip to members attending the meeting and dependent members of their families, upon presentation of certificates of the standard form when properly signed with ink by yourself as Secretary, Executive Committee and validated by a special agent on September 5 and 6, 1919."

Don't buy a ticket, buy a "certificate"; inquire early; if your agent has none, buy of nearest ticket office.

Dates for purchase of certificates: From all points in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wyoming, August 23-29, inclusive. From points in other states, August 28 to September 3, inclusive.

Return Limit: Everybody must start their home trip not later than September 11, 1919.

The Least That Is Expected of Each District in order to win the special return rates: Michigan, 4 delegates; Maryland-Virginia, 6; Pacific Coast states 10; Kanemorado, 12; Iliokota, 25; Pennsylvania, 65; Ohio, 70; Indiana, 75. The reason Indiana is not apportioned larger is because a ticket must cost 75 cents before it counts in the 250, and besides the trolley cars which are so convenient to churches near Winona do not count in these rates. Let each district hustle for its apportionment and more if possible. And suppose each district Conference Goal Director apportion each congregation the number of delegates expected of it. Remember every church member who goes and every dependent member of their families counts whether elected to represent the church or not. 250: our goal.

GENERAL ARTICLES

What Ashland Needs. By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph. D.

Ashland College has never had a fair chance. From the very day of its founding to the present it has been beset by certain handicaps. Some of these have been removed within recent years; some still remain. Ashland will not stand one more hour of neglect either on the part of the church or at the hands of those who are intrusted with her management. The day is forever past when the Board of Trustees may meet, exchange felicitations, be properly thankful that none of us have died here at the College, that the building is still standing, sing the Doxology, and then adjourn. Something must be doing.

As president of the College, I naturally have plans. I have stakes set now which must be reached with reasonable speed, then they must be pulled up and set further ahead. Anything less than this would be unpardonable on the part of a president and would indicate his unfitness for the place. Now these stakes are not of my own choosing. The general situation selects them for me. If I am honest, I must say that I am helpless to alter them, but they MUST be reached. Now, there is but one way to reach them, and that is to get right down to brass tacks and put Ashland on her feet. No one man can do this. No one man ought to do this. For the first and most pressing need of Ashland is the united support of the brotherhood. Only a united brotherhood can supply money and students. And these represent the first objective points, increased endowment, and increased enrollment, both of which will come only with increased interest.

The church needs more men in the Seminary. There is a dearth right now of available men. And the Seminary can not furnish men faster than it receives them. If pulpits are to be filled, we must have the men to fill them. We can not turn back to the congregations' empowered, consecrated, spirit-filled lives, if we do not have them to work with.

The first need, therefore, is to run the enrollment up. In the college proper there should be one hundred men and women of college rank, forty freshmen, thirty sophomores and thirty juniors and seniors; in the Seminary there should be thirty-five returning students and twenty to enter for the first time. This would give us one hundred and fifty students of college rank and that is not a mark too high to be reached. I have purposely set it within reasonable limits. The other departments of the school would increase at the same time, so that we should have here between two and three hundred young people with which to work. There is no use in talking,—the College is set but for one thing and that is to equip young people and every effort that does not tend to bring them here is in the wrong direction. If we had ten million dollars endowment, Woodrow Wilson for president, and Stanley Hall as dean, and then had no young people, the college would be useless. I speak thus in hyperbole only to indicate the great need of supplying the school with young people.

In the Seminary, we need an increasing number of young men and women of deep consecration, given over body and soul, to the great work to which they feel themselves especially called. We have a goodly number now, but we need more and I make an appeal here to all members of the Seminary who are now away from the school, to urge likely young people to look this way.

To increase the enrollment thus, is the first need but following closely upon the heels of this or rather co-ordinate with it, is the matter of endowment. This, under the good graces of God, has already begun and has succeeded more splendidly than I had fancied it possibly could, but it is not yet over. Brother Beachler must be accorded the same hearty and enthusiastic support in the remainder of his canvass that has been given him thus far. Nor will this task be done soon, for the interest of the brotherhood must be cultivated, a certain amount of publicity work done, and the interest of the Seminary and College kept properly before the church.

Now let me be specific: Ashland needs now, right now, two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars in productive endowment, two hundred of which or thereabouts, shall be the royal, whole-hearted, loving gift of an interested, rich, and prosperous brotherhood, and approximately forty thousand of which, shall be given by Ashland county and city. This properly invested together with the tuitions of an increased student body, and the splendid yearly gifts of the S. S. C. E. and the Sunday School organization, will make possible the meeting of two very urgent needs, viz., the employment at a living wage of eight or more teachers who qualify, and our admission into certain standardizing college associations so that our work will compel, not beg for, recognition. Then to all these expenses are to be added those of the general upkeep, such as coal for five furnaces, the attendant janitor's expense, repairs, library maintenance, laboratory upkeep, etc. And then for the first time within almost half a century, Ashland College could hold up her head and meet the needs of the church which she is set to serve. All this must be done, not because any one says so, but for very much larger reasons. A loyal brotherhood, a loyal and increased teaching staff, a loyal and increased student body, oh, thus, and thus only can Ashland give service to Christ and the church as she ought.

And as soon as these needs are met, others equally as important will be presented. It is a fight to the finish, and who of us will falter? Your Board of Trustees is awake; so is your President. Let us strike while the iron is hot and thus bring about the accomplishment of these high and holy ends.

The Spirit of 1919. By Dyoll Belote

Occasionally one hears some one say something anent the attitude of the citizens of a community or commonwealth and speak of "The Spirit of '76," referring primarily to the spirit of patriotism which moved the patriots of that day. It has occurred to the writer that it is quite in order that something needs be said concerning the spirit which should move the Brethren church in her deliberations at the approaching National Conference. Since the secretary does not take much part in the discussions at Conference, but has to listen to the speeches of the rest, and since he has a good chance to observe the "spirit" in which the addresses are delivered he is going to venture to offer some suggestions.

One of the first requisites for a successful conference in this year 1919 is going to be a spirit of forbearance and charity among those who may differ on some points of Biblical interpretation. Some of us have heard much about the uncompromising spirit of the leaders of the church at the time of the division in '82, and it has come to appear in the last year or so as if the same spirit of unwillingness to compromise were springing up in our midst. Brethren, we are opening the way for those with whom we differed in '82 to say that we always were strong headed and never could get along in agreeable manners with others. And it looks a bit like it.

The program committee can help the situation by refraining from suggesting controversial subjects, and those who are placed on the programme can help by refraining from treating their topics from a controversial standpoint. The conferences are intended to be inspirational and devotional, and more time spent in prayer and waiting on God, and less spent in efforts of committees to get two factions to agree on some controverted point of Biblical interpretation, will work mightily toward a worth-while conference.

Since I am known as being decidedly blunt in speech I may as well say that in speaking to some of the brethren with whom I have had opportunity to converse recently there seems to be a sort of lurking fear that there will be an "ERUPTION" at conference again this year; and as one brother puts it, "if there is it will be the end of the Brethren church." So if there is a desire to see things "bust up," it can be accomplished by any one who cares to throw a bomb into the camp. But I am prone to believe better things of us all.

I do not want to see free speech throttled, nor do I like to see the spirit of dogmatism rampant among us on things where there is not a "thus saith the Lord." But let our free speech be along the line of the freedom which is "in Christ Jesus" and our dogmatism that which is based on untested and universally accepted truth.

I may as well say that by the time this appears in print the credentials for the National Conference of 1919 will have been mailed, and should be in the hands of most, if not all, of the churches. The usual rule holds, viz., the blanks are sent to the preachers and are by them to be turned to the church clerks. And if no credentials are received a post card request will bring them by return mail. Do not wait too long. If the blanks do not reach you by August 10, send me word, stating the size of your congregation and number of preachers in the crowd, and I will send your blanks by special delivery if necessary that they may reach you in time. I am also sending the blanks for the District Conference delegates to the secretaries of the several district conferences. These should be signed up by the officers of the district and left blank as to the name of the parties until it is ascertained if those elected are sure of attending. And the members of the cooperating organizations of the conference—and their officers—are also furnished credentials apart from their local church. These last are prepared by the National Conference secretary, and are always ready for the folks as soon as the secretary lands on the assembly grounds.

Any questions which the secretary can answer will be answered promptly, and again I assure the brotherhood that I am the servant of the church for whatever service of a constructive character I can render.

Symposium: How to Have the Greatest Conference Yet

First. By B. T. Burnworth

Each year our concern has been to "make this the greatest conference yet," and after it is over some optimistic soul has had the temerity to write, saying it was "the best ever held." This cannot be truthfully said of the last few conferences, causes being many, yet they primarily settle to two things, the spirit of the conference and the subject matter given the preeminence. So, to have the best conference ever held this year, we must have one.

I That Attracts

The last three conferences we have had have been delective in many respects instead of attractive. It is distracting to those present and it detracts from the conference when certain subjects and certain trouble-stirring differences must be aired every year. However unpleasant the truth we must take note of it, that there are those who are planning to stay away because of the frequent recurrence of bitter discussions. Many of our good brethren are asking if there are not more serious things for contemplation than the pros and cons of our pet theories.

The kind of a conference that will attract is one that will leave people saying, "Behold how pleasant it is to see the brethren dwelling together in peace; how amiable has been this conference! O Lord."

II One That Lasts Throughout the Year

Every assembly of this nature is infested with some so-called "conference men." We hear from them once a year. They are full of enthusiasm and ideas and are indispensable to the church and the growth of the church is indispensable to them for one week. During the other 51 weeks they are cooling off. Enthusiasm during that week will not make a good conference unless we have been working our plans and co-operating through the year. Let us make a steady, strong and long pull together. Let our deliberations be of such a nature that we will be harking back to conference all year for its helpful inspiration and let us back up what we say at conference by our activities through the year and may our utterances be eloquent with lives well lived.

III Have a Constructive Program

As I write I know how hard the executive committee is working and having been a member of said committee from time to time I believe we do our best and the programs without exception have been commendable. It is not the fault of the executive committee when a subject not programmed consumes the time and makes impossible the schedule. We must learn to concentrate upon essentials. A conference is not primarily for the discussions of subjects of purely theological significance, leave those to the theologians. If they care to dispute as to how many angels can dance on the point of a cambric needle, let you and I declare ourselves against angels or anybody else dancing and proceed with the conference. Whether we are ready for Jesus' coming is far more important than how he is coming. Blessed are those servants who will be found working, watching, praying when he comes and not arguing the manner of his coming while neglecting preparation for the event. I use these familiar allusions because we cannot think of our late conferences and think of much else.

This is the time of construction, even more than reconstruction. Reconstruction is building out of the old like our mothers made crazy quilts out of patches. We are constructing a new world. Just now when the world sins, sorrows, weeps, and cries aloud for help, so loudly it is almost a wail, let our emphasis be upon our evangelistic missionary, and benevolent enterprises and auxiliaries that save and keep saved that which otherwise would be lost.

Let us have peace. Let us have a pleasurable and profitable conference, but we cannot have it unless we exercise charity toward all and especially in our conference deliberations.

May the great apostle, St. John, say to us once more, "Little children, love one another."

Janark, Illinois.

Second. By G. W. Rench

There is good, better, best. Everything this year points to the 'best' class. Why not? Winona Lake furnishes the best facilities, and that is a requisite of a good conference. What more is needed? People, great crowds of smiling, happy people. What else? Splendid music—the kind that redeemed men and women can make. The committee has arranged for a great leader, and Brethren people can sing—if they will. But will they? A few always have. But it takes more than a few to make a great conference. It will be different this year, will it not? Let a mighty chorus from the Atlantic to the Pacific say "I will," and right now we can say of this conference, IT WAS THE BEST. And then it is necessary that singers keep on singing. We owe it to our cause and to our Christ to do some things we would rather not do. Suppose he would have said "Let some one else?" Brethren people ought (at Winona Lake, at least) exhibit those rare charms of steadfastness and stability as strangers would expect from a WHOLE GOSPEL PEOPLE. Then, pity our reputation, if we refuse to sing.

The greatest conference ever? Then, that means the best preparation possible. This conference ought to be a conference of great addresses. That means the very best preparation. It is a sin to ask the attention of people to an unprepared address. That preparation should include, by all means, the use of no more time than has been allotted. The speaker who takes some of the time that belongs to some one else, takes what does not belong to him. Brethren people should not break the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal." Let the speakers quit on time. Let conference set the pace by adjourning on time. I have seen the whole body forget herself and hold over the allotted time to adjourn to give a few brethren more time to spew out more personalities. Shame, I say.

A great conference? Why, yes. But church leaders will have to act BIG, if there is to be a BIG CONFERENCE. There has been more valuable time spent in evening up old grudges than has been spent in trying to do BIG THINGS FOR THE KINGDOM. It's very small business to waste, yes worse than waste, session after session in the effort of a few brethren to try to worst some one else. Conference should be an example of the highest, holiest and best things we stand for. And this year it will be just that kind. "Come and see."

South Bend, Indiana.

Third. By A. B. Cover

Each succeeding year should witness a still better conference. Any one loyal to his church desires advancement, and should be willing to contribute his very best to make it such. The thought that comes to me in reference to this coming conference is this: What can I do to help make this the greatest conference of the church's history?

General conditions have materially altered during the last year. Our country a year ago was demanding our unstinted loyalty in every possible way; now this is all changed and world conditions are such, that an unprecedented opportunity is beckoning the Christian church for her utmost effort. Of this opportunity I wish to be informed therefore I shall attend conference to receive knowledge and inspiration from my brethren who are likewise interested.

I feel that to each one of us comes a share of the burden of this tremendous responsibility. How better can I prepare to meet it than by gaining inspiration from my brethren? I gain this by fellowshipping with them. This means to mingle with them, companion with them, engage in friendly conversation; or it means to be a sharer or partaker with them. Now that is what I want to do in this conference. I want to share and be a partaker of the knowledge and inspiration my fellow-worker has to impart from his viewpoint. His temperament and environment may be entirely at variance with mine, but I should be great enough, tolerant enough to profit from his viewpoint, notwithstanding. We want to grow in knowledge and inspiration and do so by fellowshipping one with the other.

How can I help to make this the best conference yet? First, by placing myself into the proper attitude. A man usually finds the thing he seeks. If I go to this conference seeking for light and more life, I shall very likely find it. To be a sharer and a partaker, I must be tolerant and charitable. I must be open-minded, I must receive the other man's view in the spirit "that becometh saints." "In love preferring one another, etc." In a sentence to make this conference what we desire "The greatest yet," we must attend, co-operate and be loyal to the Great Head even the Lord Jesus.

Hagerstown, Maryland.

Fourth. By H. F. Stuckman

As the time approaches for us to gather at Winona Lake in our Annual Conference, those of us who have the interest of the church at heart are wondering how we can best serve her at that time? It is not too early to begin to prepare and plan.

It goes without saying that unless we gather in the spirit of Christ all will be in vain. With this in mind every delegate ought to pray earnestly that the spirit of tolerance and charity shall rule all our deliberations. Our conferences in days gone by have not always been so governed. The man who carries a chip on his shoulder is bound to find trouble awaiting him in the way. But if on the other hand, we enter into the work of the Kingdom in the spirit of Christ, we shall have his blessing. Let us by all means, not drift into that spirit that existed in the Dunkard fraternity forty years ago, and brought about an unfortunate division. Brethren, I am certain that there will be some things said and done at this coming conference that will not meet with my approval, just as has been true in every conference I have ever attended, but shall I presume to say that the majority of the delegates with the Spirit leading them are less correct in their conclusions than I? And after all will not the spirit of charity cover many of the mistakes we have made in the past? In the heat of discussion the spirit of Christ has entirely fled from many of our sessions in years gone by. Can anyone believe that God's approval will be on such? Let the leaders of the two factions, who have heretofore tried to settle differences of interpretations on the conference floor and always ended in a worse muddle, take it for granted that each is sincere, and that Christian charity in the end will bring us nearer the ideal we all so much strive for.

I am sure I express the sentiments of seventy-five percent of our membership when I say, let us have harmony at the coming conference. If we do God will bless us. We are facing gigantic tasks, let us not adjourn our conference this coming year torn and divided by our differences. But on the other hand let us like the Allied army go "over the top" under the banner and by the leadership of our Christ to certain victory.

Church Loyalty in Mid-Summer. By Robert F. Porte

The problem that is commonly met in the summer time called "summer slump" seems to be only a new name for a year around trouble. The subject of this article readily suggests the real secret of our difficulty in maintaining our summer attendance. I do not doubt but what many pastors and church workers have already discovered the secret of this trouble but we are too often willing to take it as an inevitable chastisement of our Christian faith in summer and do not look upon it as curable. It has not been long since people accepted scourges of various kinds which swept over nations destroying many lives as a sort of natural and inevitable occurrence, which we have later come to prove to be the result of ignorance. It seems to me that we can easily see how a sweeping scourge of some disease could be possible and we have come to learn how these scourges can be checked. It does not take a great scholar to see the outcome of spiritual neglect which is but another part of the same personality. People can be physically sound and possess muscular strength but be mentally deficient or unspiritual. Each of these three parts of every individual has its own peculiar way of development and depend upon certain kinds of nourishment. We are familiar with the fact that knowledge comes from the exercise of the mind, and spiritual vigor comes by the use of the various means of spiritual strength furnished by the church. A perfectly developed individual does not overlook the need of possibilities of these three phases of life, they are an essential part of a true child of God.

It is to be seriously questioned as to whether the "summer slump" is supplanted by fall and winter loyalty. When our people take an extended vacation they should be encouraged to worship God on Sunday at a convenient church. It is impossible for me to think that the temperature of the weather can affect our spiritual life or church activity without affecting our business life. If it is really too hot to attend church it must be too hot to go to our business. There is a deadly and subtle venom planted by Satan himself which paralyzes our will power on the Lord's day. It is necessary of course, for the most of us to go to our business even though we do not enjoy the conditions of the weather under which we may be compelled to labor, but is it possible that we can neglect our spiritual life and live? Loyalty to business measures success in material things and loyalty to the church means success in obtaining the spiritual reward. "Be thou faithful unto death and thou shalt receive a crown of life." The Christian who realizes something of the value of this spiritual reward is not going to bargain his birthright away for about four hours extra time on Sunday spent in selfish pursuit of ease. He is going to manifest the ambition of the successful farmer who goes out in the blazing hot sun to gather his harvest, knowing that harvest time comes but once a year. Our Master pointed out to the disciples the need for spiritual activity in the words, "Lift up your eyes and look upon the fields already white unto the harvest." That text needs no explanation because it speaks immediate activity in every word. Church loyalty in summer or winter is a matter of activity in the Master's harvest field. The world's harvest is passing and the idle Christian must come empty handed.

There is but one great solution to the problem of church loyalty in summer stated in the words of Jesus in John 6: 63, "It is the spirit that giveth life." It is just as impossible to awaken a dead person with an alarm clock as to expect to awaken a dead church with some worldly scheme. The Jews crucified Jesus, but the age in which we live is crucifying the Holy Spirit by refusing him the office in their lives God intended him to fill. The church will not need periodic stimulation when the Holy Spirit is there to do his work. The condition of some churches is not a happy one; the Holy Spirit is a stranger. It is the Spirit that quickeneth and giveth life. The Holy Spirit is the natural thrill of power in a healthy Christian life. His presence makes the whole being pulsate with ambition and eager desire to accomplish some worthy task. Without the Holy Spirit we are dead. Death is cessation of activity, of recognition, of growth, and results in decay. Have you ever noticed these characteristics in backsliding Christians? The disciples began to backslide after Jesus' death, but after Jesus told them to go to the upper room and wait for the coming Spirit they obeyed and what a wonderful change! If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwelleth in you, he that raised up Christ Jesus from the dead shall give life also to your mortal bodies through his Spirit that dwelleth in you (Romans 8: 11). There is little profit in attempting to do the impossible thing by using human methods to produce a semblance of life; it is the Holy Spirit in our mortal bodies who is only able to quicken us in this life and make a joyous resurrection possible. A spiritual church is a church that knows no summer slumps because the Holy Spirit dwelling in them can quicken them no matter what physical conditions may be. There is nothing in scripture to warrant the notion that the church must be continued by our intelligence, it is God's work and he has made provision for his Spirit to guide and help us in the work of the church.

There is another important part to the Christian method of promoting the work of the church and that I would call doctrinal conviction. The Holy Spirit was promised by Jesus to "bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you" and also "to guide you into all truth." Loyalty must be based on the sense of the righteousness of the cause we represent as well as the need of such work. Brethren ministers ought to begin to emphasize Brethren doctrine and show its relation to God's revealed will. The modern "isms" are feeding upon church members and in the main they are members uninformed as to God's will. There is an attractiveness in the gospel that will hold all who will believe. How foolish for us to worry about the power of the gospel to save and hold people! Our greatest concern as ministers and laymen is that we become familiar with God's plan and make it plain to others. The Bible is vindicating its own truthfulness and divine origin in this very day. Unfaithfulness is being shown by the lack of spirituality, summer or winter, no matter what may be the condition of the elements, the spirit-filled Christian is the same. My observation in my own church and in the reports of other pastors leads me to believe that the Christian motivated by the Holy Spirit and taught in God's Word will never waver either in summer and winter. The attitude of the Brethren church toward the Bible seems to me to be the only way to develop sturdy Christian character and I earnestly commend to my Brethren in the ministry that we cease laboring in an apologetic spirit of preaching and open up boldly on the truth of the Word of God as the apostles did.

Some Good Cheer Counsel. By E. R. Mathers

"Like begets like." "Laugh and the world laughs with you." A genuine smile may set the joy bells ringing in many a heart, but a frown gets nowhere and accomplishes nothing except to dampen the ardor of good intentions.

These are homely truths but orthodox to the letter. This old world hands back to us just about what we put up to it. We sometimes deceive ourselves by imagining that we can fool it and extract more than we give, but we cannot.

We had better smile if we are looking for a pleasing response. It may cost us some effort to "keep sweet" but the rewards are large and satisfying.

It is far better to seem joyous in our work, even though the burdens be galling, if we expect the happy, contented co-operation of our associates and helpers. This truth will apply to every line of Christian leadership, whether it be as pastor, Sunday school superintendent or teacher.

The effort to "keep smiling" will bring its real reward when we have substituted "to the glory of God" for our cherished vision of personal ambition and satisfaction.

Magnify Jesus Christ; minimize self. This is the basic principle of a happy, joyous service. It is the only worthwhile plan to keep our spirits aglow and the world of Christian work moving on.

"Keep the heart singing all the while,
Make the world brighter with a smile."

Try it. You will find it "catching." Believe in what you are doing, or, if you please, do what you believe in, and do it with all the God given energy you can muster to your assistance. Confidence begets enthusiasm. Enthusiasm is contagious, spreads rapidly, encourages co-operative effort and helps largely in spelling "SUCCESS."

Keep the joy bells ringing. Keep sweet. Keep constantly before your eyes the vision of a happy, contented service for your Master and his Kingdom. These "keeps" will help to make Christian work worth-while and bring the joy of service into our own hearts.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Prodigal's Father. By H. F. Stuckman

TEXT: And while he was a great way off, his Father saw him and was moved with compassion, and ran and fell on his neck and kissed him. Luke 15:20.

In the parable from which the text is taken, we have been wont to point out a picture of the sinner. In our effort to make the chief point of the story such a picture, we have followed the Prodigal from the time of his leaving home until his return. Might we not be coming nearer the thing which Jesus had in mind if we see in it a true portrait of God? The Jews had murmured at Jesus for eating and drinking with sinners and he answered them by bringing forth the parables of the Lost Sheep, the Lost Coin, and the Lost Son. The last of the three show God's attitude toward sinners, rather than the sinner's attitude toward God. To me the parable is a beautiful picture of our loving Father.

It shows us the Father natural and affectionate, a Father with feelings as tender as those of an eastern shepherd for his sheep. As much as a woman might value a piece of money, Jesus was not satisfied that such a figure of speech should depict the feeling which God has for sinners. Not until he had likened it to the closest of relationships in life (a father's love for his son) was he at all satisfied with his effort. What relationship is so close as that of father and son? The Jewish idea of the heavenly Father was radically different than that which Jesus would have men cherish of him. They felt his holiness to such a degree that their unworthiness forbade them to approach him. They felt his majesty so much that in their littleness they dared not come to him. True they had a conception of his love, but a very narrow conception it was. Their notion of the love of God was that it was confined to the Jews only, and that no Gentile could ever feel its power. It was a love so narrow that its influence could not possibly be extended to a sinner. In a word, they had many of the attributes of the love of God, but lacked the fundamental one "the Fatherhood idea." Might it not be possible that we are today emphasizing too often the sternness, the majesty, and even the holiness of God to the exclusion of his mighty love, as pictured in this parable? Does he mean to us in vital relationship what our earthly parents mean? If he does not mean very much more than that, he is not all that he could and should be to us. He is not a Father that delights in his Lordship, but rather one who desires to woo us in love. What would become of the world of lost sinners without this affectionate Fatherhood of God?

The story shows us plainly that God allows his children to choose their own paths in life. Not one hint is there that the father stood in the way of the son's going. "He divided his substance with him." While God must always know the results that will follow our waywardness and wanderings in far countries, yet it is not his will to stand in the way. There are certain things that we must learn through experience. Many a son of his father never appreciates his home and surroundings until he has gone off into a far country. This boy had an opportunity to work out his own destiny and when he failed it was to return with a true appreciation of father and home. Many of us will never appreciate God's love until we awaken in a far country in great want.

But the fact that man can and does choose his own course in life makes the task before him doubly responsible. The fact that God permits us to go out if we will on our own resources makes the problem of life for us a great one. Not upon God, but upon us rests the responsibility. The man on the other hand who places himself into the care and keeping of God, must have assurances continually that God will bear the responsibility. God is well aware of the fact that restraint alone does not develop strong Christian character, just as some of us know that Dunkard restraint in the home while beneficial, yet was no guarantee against wrong-doing. This may explain God's attitude toward us while we slowly toil and struggle in peril and discouragement. His apparent aloofness makes our shoulders broad and strong. And through hard experiences we learn our need of God. And while we struggle he stands ready to enter personally into our lives if we call upon him.

The picture is incomplete if we fail to see in it the father's patient, anxious waiting for the son's return. I think from the leave-taking, through all the wandering, want and indecision the father is following with anxious heart, hoping against hope that the son may by some means be constrained to return home. This is quite evident from the fact that while he was a great way off, the father saw him and ran out to meet him. And through all these years of wandering the father's voice was ringing in his ears. What was it that prompted him to a decision? What made him think of home? The voice of his father as it rang in his ears. It was to him a distinct invitation to return. Just so God's voice is constantly falling on the ears of sinners today, calling them to the blessing of home with him. The Father has not disinherited one of his prodigals. He still has some hope that they may be pleased to return, and as they do they will find him in a most receptive mood. He has not forbidden the wanderer's name to be mentioned in the home, he has not forbidden his return, he is anxiously waiting. Our sharpest pangs following our decision to return will be the thought of the injury we have done him by our years of wandering.

But the culminating glory of the Father is seen in his reception of the wanderer. Men had criticized Christ's receiving sinners, now he will show them a direct picture of how God welcomes them home. This picture is not merely literary material; it is no dream, but a true picture of God's attitude toward repentant sinners. No sinner ever wriggled out of hell repentant, but what the Father saw him a long way off and welcomed him warmly into the household of Christians. His welcome is not embarrassing, but at once he sets about to make him at home. Glorious is the thought that our sins and iniquities shall be remembered against us no more. Whose but the heart of God could forget all our past and forgive all our erring ways? His love is past finding out and his mercy enduring forever.

The sounds of rejoicing that fell upon the older brother's ears as he drew near were mysterious to one of his nature, but the heart of the father was joyous, because "This my son was dead and is alive again, was lost and is found." A mother and father in a little western home had given their only son in response to their country's call. A few months after his arrival in France word came back that he had been killed on the field of battle. Imagine their surprise a few days ago to have him strong and well come stalking up to the front door of the old home. A literal picture of the words from the father's lips, "This my son was dead and is alive again!" No wonder the father receives him so royally. No wonder our heavenly Father receives every returning prodigal so gladly. He knows how deep the pit into which we have fallen; he knows how deceptive the companions with which we associate, and how wily and dangerous the adversary of our souls with whom we combat.

See this picture of a father with far-cast eyes, tense muscles, anxious heart, waiting to welcome you, ready to put the ring of royalty upon your finger and the robe upon your shoulders. When this is a picture of your loving Father how can you sit unmoved? The robe, the ring, the outstretched arms are waiting for you.

"Why do you wait, dear brother?
Why do you tarry so long?
The Savior is waiting to give you
A place in his sanctified home.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Our Great Shepherd. By N. V. Leatherman

OUR SCRIPTURE

Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant (Hebrews 13:20). The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul; he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever (Psalm 23).

OUR MEDITATION

In the tenth chapter of St. John, Jesus speaks of himself as the Good Shepherd, who gave his life for the sheep, that he might be "the door" through which "if any man enter in he shall be saved. Psalm twenty-two looks forward to Jesus as the Good Shepherd, who gave himself. Notice the familiar phrases, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" "They pierced my hands and my feet." "They parted my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture." Peter (1 Peter 5:4) speaks of Christ as the Chief Shepherd, who shall appear to give crowns of glory to the faithful elders or shepherds of the flocks when he comes again. Psalm twenty-four asks, "Who is this King of glory?" "The Lord of hosts, he is the king of glory," is the answer. He is the Chief Shepherd.

Our scripture, Hebrew 13:20, and Psalm 23, presents to us our present Great Shepherd. "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." The Lord is worthy of our full confidence and trust. This is the first qualification for a shepherd. The sheep will not follow the voice of a stranger, but they will follow the voice which they know, and in which they have full confidence. Nothing better can be said of any person than that he is worthy of confidence. We may have confidence in him that he will supply all our soul's desires and longings after righteousness. He will supply enough to satisfy our wants. He supplied the wants of David who lived the simple life of a shepherd. He supplied the children of Israel in the wilderness wanderings with manna and quail. He fed the four thousand and the five thousand hungry followers who followed him as the sheep followed the shepherd. He provided a sufficient way of escape from our bondage and oppression in sin. His provision for all our wants is ample and good and satisfying.

He gives rest and refreshment to our souls. I can imagine David leading his sheep about from place to place during the warm forenoon. At noon time he finds a fertile little spot by the riverside where the pasture is green and the water is still. The sheep quench their thirst in the still water and lie down to rest in the quiet nook, on he soft bed of grass. Likewise, our Great Shepherd leads his sheep to the still waters and quietude of life in him. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." This is the Shepherd's invitation to rest. How much do people, Christian people, need to learn to rest on Jesus.

"But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst, but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." This is our Shepherd's invitation to drink from the fountain of life which keeps us eternally young and youthful.

Our Great Shepherd guides our lives. "He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake." The words of Jesus are the first and last in the science of right living. Any one who hungers and thirsts after his righteousness will be filled with it. For Jesus lived the truly righteous life, and his righteousness is imparted unto us.

Our Shepherd also provides courage and comfort for us. In the time of death we need fear no evil, for he is with us. "Oh death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

But last and best of all, our Great Shepherd provides a home for our soul. How thankful we should be that our first parents were forced from the garden, lest they should also eat of the tree of life," and we should be compelled to live forever in our present sinful state. Let us welcome the change which shall divest us of all our infirmities. Let us think of Paul's words, "For to me, to live is Christ, but to die is gain." Our Great Shepherd says, "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also."

OUR PRAYER

Dear Jesus, we thank thee for the many manifestations of thyself, thy character, and thy love. We thank thee for the invitation to feed from thy green pastures, and to drink from thy still waters. We thank thee that thou dost lead us in the paths of righteousness. We thank thee that thou dost restore our souls. We thank thee that thou dost provide a home for our souls. Help us O Lord to have our souls anchored in thee, thou rock of our salvation and our Great Shepherd. In Jesus' name and for his sake. Amen.

SIX WEEKS OF PILE DRIVING

Did you ever see men building a great sea wall or pier?

Before a plank can be laid or a nail driven, many stout piles must be sunk deep and securely embedded in the underlying earth.

The teaching of stewardship is of the nature of driving the piles.

The structure to be built is a renewed and regenerated church, standing firm against the waves of materialism, selfishness and sin.

Every great builder has known how to lay broad foundations. Every builder in the church knows that the foundations must be built from the beginning some places and renewed in others. Always they must be watched.

Who can doubt that a right understanding of stewardship lies at the heart of every live church, of every consecrated Christian?

Stewardship churches prosper.

Tithers have more to give.

Mission churches become self-supporting when the members begin to tithe.

Stewardship recognizes no slackers.

Poor people can tithe.

Rich people can tithe first, and then really begin to give if they mean business.

Tithing will carry the Four Year Program—if enough people practice it.

Fanaticism is a tornado of the flesh.—Spurgeon.

Take heed lest by growing rich you grow nothing at last.

"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil."—Psa. 23:4.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Grading the Small Schools. By C. H. Rohrer

I. The Need of the Graded School

1. The great need of most Bible schools is better system about their work. Many schools could be doubled in thoroughness, and numbers by being thoroughly organized. Organization, distributes responsibility, develops workers, and secures promptness and thoroughness.

2. All schools that have more than one class are more or less graded. In every school there is a kind of assorting of pupils into groups, with reference to age and attainment. This is the beginning of grading. Since every school is in a sense graded, our discussion must deal with the problem of "how to grade a school thoroughly."

3. That we may feel more keenly the need of a carefully organized and graded school, we should ask ourselves a few questions.

(1) Can we place our finger on certain things to be learned in a given time, because it is specifically planned that these be taught at that time?

(2) Have we any specific things planned to be accomplished at a certain date, say January 1st?

(3) Do we have a time and place for teaching the books of the Bible, Bible geography, outlines of the Old Testament history, and of the lives of Christ and Paul?

(4) Do we give our scholars a promotion as an incentive to study?

(5) Does the community in which we live look upon our school as superficial?

(6) Do we use any slipshod methods?

(7) Do we know how to win people to Christ?

(8) Are the ideals of our school high?

(9) Are our teachers allowed, whether good or bad, to run on forever?

(10) Is tardiness looked upon as a disgrace?

(11) Are our schools schools in reality or only in name?

(12) Are our teachers becoming specialists in the various departments?

The rightly graded schools will answer these and many other questions.

The graded Bible school is the one that fits the Bible to the scholar as he develops from year to year and from period to period.

II The Seven Essentials of a Graded School

1. Departments and Grades. The departments are Cradle Roll, Beginners, Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Senior, Adult, and Home. The grades are the divisions within the departments. For example, in the Primary department there are three grades; those who will be seven, those who will be eight and those who will be nine years old by Promotion day. These grades correspond in a general way to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd grades in the public school. The highest grade in each department is called the Graduating class, so each school can have a Primary Graduating class, a Junior Graduating class, an Intermediate Graduating class and so on. This general plan may be followed even where the department does not have a separate room.

2. "Departments organized." Each department has a superintendent, secretary and teachers enough to take care of the scholars in that department. The general superintendent's work in such a school becomes more difficult, but also more effective. He is the "Chief Executive."

3. "Enrollment Secretary." The work of the enrollment secretary is to receive each new scholar and place him in his proper department and grade.

4. "Adaptation of Teachers." In every successful school the teachers are fitted to their scholars. By this we mean that those who can teach children best are assigned to teach them; those who can teach adults best are enlisted in the adult work.

5. "Adaptation of Lessons." Each lesson should be taught to fit the scholar. Hence the presentation of a lesson to the Primary children will be different from that which would be suitable for a class of young men. When a teacher becomes efficient in any department he ought not to leave that department, he should go with his class through the grades of that department, and then, when his class graduates, he should take another just coming from a lower department into his own, and teach it as it passes through the department in which he has become a specialist.

6. "Supplemental Lessons." This is one of the most important, if not the most important, features of the graded school. This work is fundamental. Through supplemental lessons many things can be taught that otherwise must be left untouched. Graded supplemental lessons make the scholars feel that they are growing, as year by year they meet their requirements and receive their certificates, diplomas and seals.

7. Regular "Promotion Day." When the scholars are doing a certain definite work each month throughout the year, there should be one day when this work is recognized and when all the scholars under 16 years of age will pass up one grade. Through it, the school may make its impression upon the community as it can in no other way.

III Benefits of a Graded School

1. Makes knowledge appetizing.

2. Makes teaching definite.

3. Raises the standard of teaching.

4. Gives workable knowledge of the Bible.

5. Utilizes the value of promotion and graduations.

6. Gives an impression of thoroughness. It impresses not only the members of the school, but the community, as being Biblical, pedagogical, reasonable, inspirational and workable.

Sunday School Convention Echoes. By Tillie Garwood

(Report of the Indiana Sunday School Convention held at Marion, Indiana, June 24, 25 and 26, 1919).

The following report is a summary of the talks given by Rev. O. W. Fifer of Indianapolis; R. A. Waite, Young People's Division specialist of the International Sunday School Association; Dr. Henry Cope, Secretary of the Religious Education Association; Mrs. Maude J. Baldwin, International Superintendent of Children's Division.

In his talk on "Evangelism" Rev. O. W. Fifer told how we might win others to Christ by our hospitality, by a kind look and by sharing our journey with those going our way. It is a very easy matter for us to invite others to share the pleasures of our home, or at least to have a smile for them rather than a frown. In going on a journey whether on foot, by street car, auto, Pullman or parlor car, we can win others to the Christian life by sharing the joy of the journey with those going the same way rather than going out of the way to avoid meeting them.

In a discussion on Young People's work, led by R. A. Waite, it was decided that the young people's organized class was (1) to train in leadership, (2) to develop Christian character, (3) to seek and to save the lost, and (4) to give knowledge of the Bible. Elect officers once a year, but have no standing committees. Appoint a committee to do a certain work then when the work is finished, dismiss it. Pupils in this division were urged to attend church services and prayer meetings.

In his talk on "Democracy," Dr. Cope said, "Democracy does not mean that every one is equal. Jesus said some had one talent, others had five. Every one has equal rights. The strong should help the weak. Democracy is an extension of the family and every member owes something to it. The church is in the world to do something for others. Jesus refused to think of himself. Since the church is trying to do the work of Jesus in the world it too should think of others. Christianity has not saturated the business world. We should move our religion from a book to the world. Sunday school teachers should teach children how to live and not about people who have been dead thousands of years. It is easy to live the life of a saint if you live by yourself, unless you keep mules. It is hard to live in a crowded world. We need to learn the art of living with others and to get others to live with us.

"Trouble is sure to come when an individual is determined to push down in order to gain his goal. True democracy mined to succeed regardless of how many weaker ones he means all succeed and every one helps. Life is our chance to learn what love may mean. Life is a chance to grow. Life means you can have all you want without taking from others. Democracy means the richer I am, the richer others will be."

In a talk on "The Boy Who Never Sowed Wild Oats," the prodigal's brother was pointed out as being a model to follow in most ways except his lack of compassion. The chief purpose of the church and of parents should be to prevent the child from sowing wild oats. That means to win the child before he is lost. Otherwise we lose him and sometimes never gain him for the church of Christ. We need to keep from sinning, not to be sorry after we have sinned.

During the recent war 250,000 of our boys were fighting with the Germans. Of course they were not on the German fighting line, but they were in our hospitals rather than on our fighting lines because they had sowed their wild oats. Most folks are willing to be just like every one else. What we need is to use our own ingenuity, our own ideas and our own personality. In Sunday school work we should be patient, but persistent. Be not discouraged, but be not content.

Mrs. Baldwin in her talk pointed out the fact that we were giving the child in the Protestant Sunday school 22 hours in a year while the Jews were giving 700 hours and the Catholics 400 hours; then some of these few hours are wasted by poorly trained teachers. Burbank does not allow any one who drinks intoxicants or uses tobacco to touch his plants. A certain poultry raiser would not allow an untrained person to feed his chickens. We should at least do as well by our Sunday school scholars as Burbank does for his plants or the poultry raised for his chickens and give them the best trained teachers that can be had. Every Sunday school scholar over nine years of age should carry his Bible to the services.

Echo of Ashland College Night

Ashland College Night was observed by the Endeavorers of the Brethren church some time during February last; February 9th being the date set. Our objectives were (1) 40 Life Work recruits and (2) Three hundred and fifty dollars in money for the chair of Religious Education at Ashland College and for general expenses. To date we have received no reports of Life Work recruits enrolled on that special day and only half the required money was raised. We are not blaming anybody for perhaps we personally are to blame in a large way but there is a certain feeling of defeat that comes to us as we contemplate that report. It is the report of a failure and that was something we never expected to see written beside the record of Brethren Endeavorers. We ought to have been made of sterner stuff don't you think, fellow Endeavorers? We commend the societies that reported for had all done as well as they we would have had enough and to spare financially. They did their part and did it well. The blame lays on the shoulders of others. Note the detailed report that follows:

The banner for the largest offering goes to the New Lebanon church, the second largest being Waterloo, Iowa. As there were no recruits this year the largest "recruit society" of last year will retain the banner.

Now just a final word. Perhaps some of you Endeavorers have read Kipling's story "Drums of the Fore and Aft," and you'll readily recollect that this story deals with a regiment which though once defeated and terribly handled by the enemy yet rallied and wiped out the defeat in a glorious way through the heroism of the two drummers. Let us clear away the wreckage of defeat another year by rallying well to the challenge before us and may we be able to record stirring victory another time.

Failed Once But Never Again

We were so impressed with the feeling of disappointment displayed by Brother Boardman at the failure of the young people to go over the top in their Ashland College offering and share with him in so large a measure that disappointment that we are constrained to add a few remarks. The fact of failure is not pleasant to contemplate, but success in any undertaking can only come by co-operation. The Recruiting Director could only present the need and it was up to us all to help put the thing across. Let us hope that many societies that failed to take an offering will yet make good our expectations of them. However we are not without a reasonable explanation as to how this failure came about. It is not due to their lack of sympathy and good intentions toward their own representative on the Seminary faculty, the chair of religious education, nor to their purposed disloyalty and lack of support to their leader, Brother Boardman, but to the fact that in the midst of the disarrangement of church work due to the winter "flu" epidemic, our young people were burdened with so many delayed offerings that they easily let this one slip by. We know they are all loyal at heart and will do better next time. And maybe some will yet come across this year. Do it if you can.—Editor

Another of Our Little Missionaries

Brazzaville, F. E. Afrique

Dear Little Readers: My name is Marie Elizabeth Rollier. I am eight years old, and I have a little sister Julia Marguerite six years old. We have been in Africa two months and we think it a queer country to be so hot in the winter. When we left New York last December it was cold and we had to put on the warmest clothes we had, but before we reached Matadi, we were wearing our coolest summer clothes. The sun is very hot, and we can't run out to play bareheaded as we did in California. Even on our way, as we came near to Africa, we were warned not to go out without our helmets. The helmets that we wear are not like the steel helmets the Germans wore, nor like the police helmets; but they are like a large hat with the rim turned down to protect us from the sun and are made of cork which makes them lighter weight. They tell us that if we go out in the sun we would get sun fever, and, when the white man gets sun fever he never lives long. So you see we want to be very careful.

One day, on the boat, as we were coming near Duala, Africa, Julia was leaning over the railing and over into the ocean went her helmet. She was so frightened that she ran into the cabin as fast as she could, crying as if her heart would break. When mamma came to her the commissionaire was trying to comfort her, but she would not be comforted, for she thought now she could never go out of doors again. But it did not take mamma long to quiet her for she told her there were helmets for sale on board the ship. Very soon the lost helmet was replaced by a new one.

Now I am going to tell you a queer little incident which happened at Matadi the morning we arrived there. An English speaking man came on board the ship as the ship stopped at the dock. He came right up to Julia, reached out his hand and said, "Why, hello Bettie, are you back again? Where are your papa and mamma?"

Mamma was standing close by and told him, he must be mistaken for her name is Julia Rollier. He then told mother he thought she was Bettie Mumpower, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Mumpower, missionaries to Africa. He had traveled with them as they were going to America. Julia and I were very glad to have some one talk to us in English. This gentleman then helped papa get baggage to go through custom, then took us to the hotel where we stayed over night. Mr. Croft invited us to his house for afternoon tea and we had such a nice time there.

Next morning early we got on the funniest little train. I just wish you could see it. It stopped every twenty or twenty-five minutes. I didn't like to stop so often. The passenger cars will seat only twelve people and oh! such bumps one gets when they stop or start. Mamma says it is like a lumber wagon or worse. In this we traveled all day. That night we got to Thysville and here everybody had to go to the hotel over night. On this queer little train there are no sleepers or dining cars. How happy we were when we reached Kinshassa at which place we got off and crossed the Congo over to Brazzaville. It was a happy day when we met the folks waiting in Brazzaville.

The natives look very funny to us with their faces all marked, and they carry everything on their heads, even the smallest things. We see women with large glass jars full of water on their heads. At first we would stop and look, expecting every minute it would fall to the ground and break into many pieces, but we have never seen them drop anything.

I must tell you what I did see one day: a native boy with glass demi-john in hand going to get water. All at once something went smash on the ground and next thing I saw the black boy's arms folded looking down so surprised, saying "Gemena cufa; gemena cufa!" or in our language, "He's dead! he's dead!" He looked so funny, that Julia and I laughed and laughed.

Marguerite, Julia and I like to go to the native villages near by with papa or Uncle William, and we often take our dollies. The little black children think they are wonderful; some are afraid of them.

I like the little black children and will be so glad when I can talk to them and tell them about Jesus and how he died to save them.

My dear little friends, I have many other queer things to tell you, but I will write about them another time. I will be so glad to have you all write me. We are happy to get letters from the home land. I cannot write to all of you, but will write in the Evangelist so you all can read my letter.

From your little missionary,

MARY ELIZABETH ROLLIER.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

CAMPAIGN NOTES

We came from Maple Grove to Dallas Center and began work in that congregation on Friday night, July 11th. This was my first meeting with the Dallas Center people, also my first privilege to see their fine new church building. I can truthfully say I was not disappointed in either the people or the building. And my stay in this congregation was very pleasant indeed.

Brother Robert Porte is pastor of this congregation. He has a warm love for his old Alma Mater, Ashland College; and naturally he was awaiting with a great deal of interest and concern the canvass among his people. He did not tell me in so many words but I have good reason to believe that Brother Porte made the matter of college endowment among his people an object of earnest prayer; and besides, he had made splendid preparation before I got there. And I am glad to say Brother Porte's people did not disappoint him. Dallas enlisted at $2200; and there was enough work to finish at the time I left to put the $2500 mark in sight. I believe Dallas Center will go $2500 when results are all in. In this canvass we had one $500 man, and two men for $250 each; and the balance came in gifts of $100 and less.

On the Sunday of my stay at this place I preached to good audiences. The fact that a sumptuous dinner was served in the basement of the church on that day added to the enjoyment of the occasion. We were more than glad to have with us on Saturday night and Sunday our dear friend and Brother Horace Yoder of Des Moines. It is always a joy to be in his company, and his presence means that one more real Brethren booster is on the ground. In the evening preceding preaching service the Dallas folks observed the communion service. It was a most helpful and impressive service with a good attendance of the membership present.

Brother Porte put his Ford to good use while I was with him. We were not sparing with the gasoline. I spent most of my time at the parsonage but in the course of our stay was entertained in the home of Brother John T. Row, also in the home of Sister Wineland. Thanks to the Portes and all the other good folks at Dallas for their kindness.

I found some splendid young people in this congregation, some of whom will likely find their way to Ashland College in time.

I want to report also at this time for Garrison. The church at Garrison, Iowa, some years ago closed its doors. By the death of some of the members and the moving away of others it seemed in the course of time impossible to keep the work going. Consequently there has been no preaching in the Garrison church for quite a number of years. Finally the few remaining members decided to sell the church building, which they did. Recently there came to the College for permanent endowment from part of the proceeds, $659.25. The remainder went as endowment to the Superannuated Minister's fund. I can only remark that I consider the Garrison people made a wise disposal of this money. Every cent of it will go on doing good in the many, unborn years of the future.

This is my last report from Illiokota for the time being. This district will remain unfinished until after conference. In the meantime I shall canvass the Michigan churches.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

BRETHREN, STILL, THOUGH UNFORTUNATE ..

Primarily because of the removal of members from the community, the Brethren congregation of Garrison, Iowa, disintegrated. For several years no services have been held in the comfortable little church building. What sorrows have been borne by some of the members as they have seen their work disorganized and discontinued will never be told.

At the request of the Illiokota Mission Board the writer went to Garrison about a year ago to investigate the field. The members of the board felt that conditions are such at Garrison that it would be unavoidable to attempt to revive the work. After a careful survey of the situation the writer concurred with their opinion.

The congregation had received a nice church building as a gift from the United Brethren church. Three of the trustees, two of whom yet live at Garrison and one at Vinton, decided to sell the church property and use the proceeds therefrom to support some of the general institutions of the Brethren church. After conferring with such of the former members as could be consulted, this very unselfish and loyally Brethren course was pursued.

The report of these trustees, signed by them, is hereby submitted, at their request, for publication:

Trustees.”

It will be noted that no commission was charged for selling the property. This was done by John T. Urice, who is an influential real estate man, residing, unfortunately, at Vinton. Before his removal from Garrison to Vinton, he and his wife were very active in the work of the congregation. Mrs. Urice who had the Garrison work much at heart, passed to her heavenly reward last winter, after a long period of suffering. Also, only $1.50 was charged for the labor of cleaning the church, packing and shipping the bell, etc. This work was done mainly by R. E. Overman. He and his family and O. Wenner and family yet reside at Garrison. They are almost the only members who remain at Garrison and it is due very largely to their unselfish and co-operative spirit that the money received for the church property, has been put to such splendid use.

A check for $659.25 has been given to W. H. Beachler for Ashland College endowment; and another, for $200.00, has been sent to Herman Roscoe for endowment of the Brethren Board of Benevolences.

It is hoped that the persons mentioned above, and a few others who reside at Garrison and Vinton will place their membership with the Waterloo or some other Brethren congregation. Some of them, perhaps all, have it in mind to do this.

May God richly bless and keep all those who have been deprived of their old church home by the passing of this congregation. They should continue to serve their God and the church of Jesus Christ, and unite with some other congregation without delay. The kingdom of God needs them and they need active membership therein. Also, may God continue to use the streams of influence that have gone forth from the Garrison church to the exaltation of truth and the salvation of souls.

H. L. GOUGHNOUR.

A NEST EGG ENDOWMENT FOR BENEVOLENCES

As secretary of the National Board of Benevolences, I received from Brother H. L. Goughnour of Waterloo, Iowa, a check for $200.00, given by the disintegrated church at Garrison, Iowa. This sum is obtained from the sale of the church house at Garrison, and was given by the few remaining members as a nest egg for an endowment fund for the superannuated ministers of our church. While our people are thinking of this particular thing as something to work up to in the future, surely the judgment of the brethren of Garrison must be respected for giving their funds to such worthy institutions as Ashland College endowment and our board. As secretary of the Board of Benevolences, I wish to thank these good people in this public way, for the amount they gave for the aged ministers.

Our board has, of course, had no opportunity of session since last conference, but we hope to have some definite recommendation to make to the General Conference one month hence.

H. E. ROSCOE,

Secretary of the National Board of Benevolences.

The New Lebanon and the West Alexandria, Ohio, churches are in need of a pastor. Any one interested should correspond with the undersigned.

O. F. BRUMBAUGH,

New Lebanon, Ohio.

BURLINGTON AND DARWIN BRETHREN CHURCHES

This report of the work in the Master's vineyard is a report that ought to be accepted in very favorable way among our brethren.

The Burlington church at the last quarterly business meeting called the present pastor for another year beginning October 1st, 1919, at a nice increase in salary as a gift of appreciation for the work that they had enjoyed together in the past year, also a unanimous vote was given to co-operate in the work with the pastor to make all the possible points in the Four Year Program. The pastor was given the call to hold the series of meetings which will begin the second Sunday evening in October. All the work of the church is seeming to have the undivided spirit in its program for a more efficient and better working "body of believers." The Sunday school is working in a better and more earnest effort to accomplish the program of the superintendent. The S. S. C. E. is getting organized and started in a very fine way, and larger plans and more definite work will be accomplished in the future we are assured.

Since our last report three adults have been added to the church by baptism.

The Darwin church has been, for the opportunity, making a very fine showing, holding the place the brethren feel that it is their duty to hold and assuming the responsibility that is theirs, in the work of the Kingdom of God in the community.

We have received the unanimous call to this field and the revival meeting will be held beginning on the first Monday night following our National Conference.

The Sunday school is making a fine showing and doing an aggressive work and while some seem bothered with the "Summer Slump" the work here really looks encouraging, considering all the things that rural churches have to contend with.

The church has its new roof all on and paid for and now the sisters who are always looking after the welfare of the church and the appearance of the building are making large plans to paper and decorate the interior in such a way as will put to shame some of the more thoughtless and careless of our churches.

This church has all the problems of a strictly rural church but we have been greatly pleased with the efforts that have been put forth and with the spirit of harmony that prevails as among the brethren. There have been two by baptism added to the work (a man and his wife) since our last report.

A Big Day August 10, an all-day's meeting at the church and a big basket dinner at the noon hour. Brethren who read this are expected to interpret the same as an invitation. May God bless us all together in our prayer, and may all the brethren who love Christ as their personal Savior, remember us in their prayers as we labor in his service.

W. T. LYTLE,

Burlington, Indiana.

So long as we pay five and ten times as much to football coaches, baseball pitchers and movie stars as to ministers, school teachers and editors, we put a premium upon the wrong kind of ideals and give to the boys a wrong idea of success.

EASTER OFFERING REPORT—1919

This report covers all money received for Foreign Missions from March 1st, 1919, to July 1st, 1919, except that all African receipts from January 1st, to March 1st, are included. The figures here given are for the total amount received for all funds from the churches named. All individuals sending offerings have their offerings placed to the credit of the church of which they are members when such relation is known. Otherwise, the name of the individual is here given. This report is condensed for publication in "The Brethren Evangelist" only. the July issue of 1919.

The full detailed report will be issued in the July issue of "The Brethren Missionary," which is now in the hands of the printers. For the full complete report, send 25c in stamps to the Financial Secretary for one year's subscription to the missionary magazine, if you are not already a subscriber. All members of the Foreign Missionary Society get the magazine free.

This is the greatest Easter offering our denomination has ever yet given. It means much for the church in many ways. As you read this, two more missionaries are about to sail for South America. Some of the churches have not yet reported, but they will between now and Christmas, maybe. The report from the First Church of Philadelphia, for instance, just came to hand, amounting to $288.40,—too late for this report. We have heard that old Nappanee had a fine offering, but have had no returns from there yet. How we do wish our churches could really make this an EASTER offering. This report should have been published sooner, but we cannot report until the churches report. It has been no small task to care for this offering, but still, we wish the task would have been five times greater. God bless every one who has helped to go "over the top" so splendidly. The report is as follows:

Business Manager's Corner

"GOING UP"

The above two words are frequently heard from the lips of the elevator boy in our tall office buildings as he announces the direction which his elevator is about to take.

We are glad to be able to make the same announcement concerning the Evangelist subscription list. After considerable lull the list has taken a decidedly upward trend and we are glad to announce that another one of our good churches has won a place on the Honor Roll.

This time it is the First Brethren church of Philadelphia that has won this distinction by sending in a list of more than one hundred subscriptions. Alva J. McClain is pastor here and we congratulate both the pastor and his people in their achievement. It has never been our good fortune to visit Philadelphia, and we have heard it spoken of sometimes as the "sleepy city," but it is evident that at least that portion of the city around Tenth and Dauphin streets is very wide awake. If about two more good churches, located in cities that are not called sleepy, would rub their eyes a little and become as wide awake as the Philadelphia church has become we would yet reach our goal of FIVE THOUSAND subscribers before Conference.

Who will set off the alarm and rouse up inside of the next three weeks?

R. R. TEETER,
Business Manager.

The Calamity of a Growing Pride

Pride is a more rabid contagion than influenza and its baneful influence has been more widely felt. It is difficult to find a man who has not been afflicted to some extent by this moral malady. It attacks the ministry; it grips the laity; it takes hold of the high and low, the rich and poor alike. And it hardly becomes any one to point the finger at another and say, Thou art possessed. Nevertheless it is personally painful to find in another an excess or even an equal amount of the same unhappy traits of character which we ourselves possess. We seem to be jealous of each other's pride. We readily criticize the man who displays a prouder spirit than we ourselves; and most everybody is guilty to that extent. We never see in ourselves the pride we see in others; we are so far-sighted. It is hardly safe for anyone therefore to say aught against another, lest he feel the return of the boomerang, "Physician heal thyself." However, it is as true in dealing with moral maladies as with physical, that none except the Great Physician presumes to be entirely without defect. All have sinned and come short of true humility.

It is wholesome food for the soul, however, to have the evils of pride pointed out to us occasionally; though he who does it, takes his life in his own hands.

It would be very unfair to condemn pride in wholesale fashion, for there is a right and a wrong kind of pride. It is a right kind of pride that is displayed when one will not sin because it would reflect on the standard of righteousness and injure the reputation for genuine holiness and clean living that his family has had before God and man. It is the wrong kind of pride that causes one to resort to questionable means to secure rich and gorgeous apparel in order to appear at a fashionable function that requires richer dress than our circumstances will allow. Two young men were invited to an evening entertainment at a fashionable home. Both were poor and neither possessed a dress coat. The pride of the one induced him to borrow the money to buy the desired coat, while the pride of the other, disdaining to appear in clothes not paid for, prompted him to attend the party in an ordinary outwary. Of two young girls, one is too proud to assist in the housework at home lest telltale marks on the hands should reveal her circumstances to her classmates at school, while the other lends a hand to help because, as she says, "Aside from more tender considerations, it hurts my pride to see mother look like a drudge." Pride, therefore, may be either a virtue or a vice. It is the vice that is causing alarm to all sober-minded people today, and is growing at such a rate that its widespread display is becoming a calamity.

Pride leads to all sorts of extremes. It leads men to refuse to engage in certain kinds of work even when they are in need because that work seems to them to be too humble. It leads women, even Christian women, to dress in gowns that are immodest because fashion says that is the thing to wear. Some will follow fashions even at the cost of a compromise of the purity of their own thoughts and those of others. And the painful thing is that even members of the Brethren church, whose history is one of plainness and modesty of dress, will so completely forget the dictates of Christian modesty in their proud desire not to be out of fashion, will appear in God's house for worship in garbs so scant and thin that they appear indecent. Pride will lead men to indulge in amusements and conversation that ill become any Christian, because the crowd does such things and they fear to appear different from their fellows; they might be called fanatical or over-religious and that would hurt their pride. They want to be in the popular set, and therefore what that crowd does they will not refuse to do. It is disappointing to see the number of men, members of the church, who take more pride in the fact that they belong to this or that club, oftentimes Godless clubs, than that they are members of this or that church, and they rejoice more in the shallow or unwholesome amusements of their club than in the worship of the living God. Pride leads to indifference in religion even when the heart cries out for divine real fellowship, because they do not wish to appear to be overzealous in religious matters. They have heard, and they themselves have made remarks about some one whose zeal exceeded their knowledge in matters of religion, and their excessive pride will not let them approach even a wholesome enthusiasm for the noblest things of life—the spiritual. Pride causes some to mortgage their own homes in order to buy an automobile, not because their need of it, but because it is the popular thing to have and their pride will not consent to their being one whit behind the times. Pride even drives men to defraud and embezzle in order to keep up a show of wealth and aristocracy. Pride thinks more of pedigree than of character, more of position than of righteousness. The French family of the Duke de Levis is said to have a picture of their pedigree, in which Noah is represented as going into the ark and carrying a small trunk, on which is written, "Papers belonging to the Levis family." There are men today whose reputation hangs upon their having had a grandfather, and their pride causes them to spend most of their time talking about their noble ancestry.

Pride causes men to judge themselves more capable than they really are. It deceives men by making their own weaknesses seem to be strength and their own conceits to be ability. And often, like a fever, by a brilliant flush and a daring start, they are misled to think themselves in possession of moral and spiritual vigor more than is really theirs. Their exalted opinion of themselves leads them to attempt to fly too high, with a result that they are made to realize the wisdom of Solomon as they never did before, where he said, "Pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall." When once a philosopher was asked what the great God was doing, he replied, "His whole employment is to lift up the humble and to cast down the proud." Paul beseeches us that we "be not wise in our own conceits," and James says, "Humble yourselves in the sight of God and he shall lift you up." Peter admonishes us to "be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." And our Lord himself placed the premium on humility by telling his disciples that "Who-soever shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven."

How natural it is for men to be puffed up, to want to be some great one, to lord it over their fellows. Jesus said that was the way the rulers of the Gentiles did, but that it should not be so among us. He declared that those of us who desire to become great can become so only by being humble and servicable. But notwithstanding, we are ever seeking the chief places and feeling very important over the positions we occupy. We sometimes appear to be very much like the toad-fish. It has no particular value except to cultivate the patience of the fishermen. It is an unattractive fish, with a large mouth and a mottled, wrinkled body that looks like wornout leather. But turn it over and tickle it a little and the flabby creature swells until it is swollen into the appearance of a globe. Did you ever meet any one like that? There is that tendency among us; with some it is more noticeable than with others. A little flattery, a little tickling of the vanity and we "swell with pride." But pride is an unsubstantial thing, as much so as that which puffs up the blow-fish. Our business is to grow, not to swell; to be built up in Christ, not to be puffed up with pride. Paul said, "Pride puffeth up, but knowledge buildeth up."

Where there is real Christian worth there is no pride, but rather humility. Some one has said, "Pride is the offspring of the want of merit. Humility is the child of wisdom." The stalks of wheat that stand the straightest with their heads the highest very often have the least wheat in them, while those which hang their heads modestly are filled with precious grain. The people who hold their heads the highest very frequently have least of real worth in them. The men of great powers and serious purposes are weighed down with responsibility. The humble are the mighty and the great.

WANTED—TEACHER FOR HAPPY, KENTUCKY, $80 PER MONTH. WRITE G. C. CARPENTER, PERU, INDIANA.

During the absence of Brother J. A. Garber from his pulpit occasioned by his visit to his mother at Dayton, Virginia, Dr. Jacobs and Editor Gnagey preached in the College chapel on August 3 and 10 respectively.

Another veteran of the Cross has been mustered out of service; Brother D. W. Ronk has been found faithful to the end and his contribution to the cause of Christ, not only by his own efforts, but through his sons, is beyond calculation. We extend our sympathies to the entire family and especially to the "Ronk Brothers" whom we know and count among our friends.

Our dear aged Brother Forney of Beaver City, Nebraska, favors us with a report of the work of the church at that place. He states that the Beaver City church is no longer pastorless. Brother Earl S. Flora has taken charge and he has not done so single-handed either. Congratulations, Brother Flora, and congratulations Sister Flora and congratulations Beaver City. We are confident of the progress of Beaver City under their new leadership.

The "Notes from Garwin," Iowa, tell us that Brother Ankrum and his good people are still pushing forward. They are making improvements in the parsonage and church, among which is the installation of a new lighting system. The people showed their appreciation for their pastor's services during the revival with Brother Coleman by presenting him with a century check.

Brother Garber reminds us of an important fact, namely, that if we have any thought whatever of reaching our goal of 400 delegates at the conference of 1920, we must begin the increase this year. It is very likely unfortunate that the Conference attendance goal has not been graduated and the churches urged to attain it during all the four years of our Program. Let us begin this year by going over the top with the largest attendance ever. Remember the goal, 250 lay delegates, paying full fare of not less than 75 cents on the railroad. Read Secretary Garber's instructions.

A very important call is sounded this week by Brother Carpenter; it is a call for a teacher for the school at Happy. The people have agreed to furnish the building and salary if we furnish the teacher. The salary may go as high as $80 per month. This is a great opportunity to do missionary work and should be accepted immediately by some consecrated, prepared young person. Read Brother Carpenter's article. He speaks some well-deserved words for Brother Cook and reports the highest recommendations for all our new missionaries in Kentucky. The school at Lost Creek has an overflowing attendance and larger quarters are being called for. Don't forget to make arrangements for your pledge to the Kentucky work before you go to Conference; it should be a large one, for the needs are great.

The secretary of the General Conference executive committee, Brother Garber, has something to say in this issue about Conference. The rates have been granted on conditions; it is up to us to fulfill the conditions. Every church in the brotherhood should endeavor to have at least one day delegate at Conference and every one that possibly can should send its full quota of delegates. And still others besides official delegates should leave their homes and spend a week at Winona Lake. The inspiration to be received, the larger vision and the knowledge will mean much for the home church. In addition, friendships will be renewed and new friendships formed that will mean much to each one personally. It will be worth more than all it will cost you and your co-operation will mean much to the entire church.

We are in receipt of a good report from Brother Witter in this issue. The Waynesboro work is still going forward, improvements are being made and the auxiliaries are doing good work. Brother Witter announces that he has resigned his pastorate in view of the fact that he has served that church ten years. He has led that church from its infancy to the place where it can stand alone. He has been a noble leader and his people have faithfully followed him, and together they have accomplished a splendid work for God. It is in the long pastorate that one can see the seed he has sown and cared for with patience grow and bear fruit many fold, and it is there that the church receives the benefit of wise leadership made possible by the long and intimate knowledge on the part of the pastor of his people. May God give us more churches that really want their pastors to remain with them many years and more pastors who do not wish to leave a place until their work is fully done. Brother Witter has recently laid to rest his father and we wish to extend to him our sincere sympathy in his sorrow.

President Jacobs gives us an interesting series of "College Notes" this week. He announces the securing of a new piano teacher in the person of Miss Lucy Cowan Wimer of Lanark, Illinois. She doubtless will prove a worthy head of her department, as she comes to it with thorough training and successful experience. Prospective music students will come to Ashland with high hopes, with musicians of such high repute as Miss Wimer and Miss Puterbaugh in charge of their respective departments. Dr. Jacobs speaks appreciatively of the efficient service rendered during the past five years by the retiring head of the piano department, Miss Wilma Lichty. Plans are under way for a still larger summer school next year even than was had this year. That Miss Marie Lichty is the new Dean of Women will doubtless be received as a welcome announcement. Dr. Jacobs sounds his slogan again: let us repeat it often—"One hundred in the College and fifty in the Seminary."

The report from Lost Creek by Brother Drushal must be read to be appreciated, for we cannot begin to indicate the good things it contains. First is a very striking experience in testimony to the real and vital influence Riverside is exercising. Then we notice the progress among the Juniors under Sister Drushals' care, then the arrival of new workers and lastly, the need of larger quarters for the work. You will not only enjoy the report, but you will be impressed with the fact that our Lost Creek venture has been a wonderful success. And of course we will still stand back of the work, that it may not be hindered in its growth.

The Church's Ministry to the Social Needs of Young People

By Miss Mary L. Emmert

No many years ago, attending church on Sunday was the one social enjoyment of the week. People brought their entire families ten miles or more in wagons in order to worship and to meet their friends. They rarely met elsewhere, for there were no automobiles, no movies, no near-by towns. After church the older people visited and the young people congregated in knots on the porch, around the pump or under the shade trees and talked as only young people can. No one hurried away and usually the whole day was given over to friendly intercourse.

Of course the old time conditions do not exist now and to a large extent the church is no longer an unconscious minister to the social needs of its young people. The question then is: Should the church consciously aim to be a social center for the younger generation, or do other activities supply the social need so that the church may concentrate on the purely spiritual ministry?

In answering this question let us first consider the nature of the adolescent period. In the "teen" age, or period of greatest spiritual awakening, the child feels the need of new and larger ideals. The church prepares for this period by educating the child from the cradle on to maturity, with the result that he naturally likes to work in the Sunday school, the Endeavor, and all departments of the church. Christian service becomes a natural and vital part of his life.

During the adolescent period his touch with the church should be strengthened. The stranger within our gates still admires the hearty handshake and the "feeling of belonging," of which we as a church are justly proud. This, however, is only a shadow of what Christian fellowship should include. The church should be a family where each helps each and the ties of friends are strengthened. To a large extent this is already true, but the feeling should be emphasized and intensified until the youth feels more at home in the church than he does on the streets.

Then, too, worth-while fun in some abundance will prove a corrective for some of the questionable good times that are often enticing merely because there is nothing else to do. The young people of today will not be content to meet only on Sundays. A variety of activities is a necessity. Let the church aid in its selection.

Does this mean that the church's selection of good times is to be forced on its young people as in olden times? Educational psychology points out that forbidding a child to do a thing usually makes his desire to perform that act all the stronger. Instead, some other idea is substituted in his mind, so that the unfortunate tendency is replaced by a happier one. The "thou shalt not steal" of the Old Testament is replaced by the "thou shalt love" of the New Testament. The idea then is not to judge for the child, but to help him discriminate between the two varieties of "good times."

A boy or girl learns to enjoy the better class of reading by being led to read good books and then to compare them with the cheaper kind he has been reading. He will lay aside his earlier reading when he sees for himself the superiority of really good reading. So young people will soon appreciate the right kind of good times and will take an active part in creating their own fun if they are given a little encouragement by the church.

Let us have organized good times where the young people of our churches may really come to know the people they usually admire at a distance, where fellowship may be more than a word, and where ideals of real fun may be fostered. Our libraries should be carefully stocked with live, ideal-making books. And above all let the young people feel that their church is a home, where they may take their joys and sorrows, their ambitions and their problems; a place of dedication and consecration for their lives.

I. Religious Education and Democracy. By L. Garvin Smith, M. A., B. D.

During the world cataclysm that has just come to an end, men were educated for slaughter. However, the sorrows and sufferings of the war, the call to sacrifice, the call to face the supreme demands of life and death were, after all, a process of religious education; for millions of human beings are realizing today the sense of man's dependence and God's guidance in a totally unprecedented way. Levity and self-indulgence are not so popular as they once were, and people are becoming sober, chastened and redeemed, as by fire. This was a baptism of fire and blood, and the experiences will not soon be forgotten; for life becomes tremendously real to those who face death and meditate upon eternity.

When we entered this war, hundreds of thousands of young men—the flower of our youth—were looking toward the future, a future replete with the profits and emoluments which reward business genius, mental achievement and integrity. They abandoned cherished life-plans to defend human rights and to preserve our democratic institutions inviolate. Great was the sacrifice they made, and, for the most part, it was cheerfully done. We are told that this supreme sacrifice of human life was made that henceforth the world may have peace, and that all nations may come to a definite agreement as to what powers shall rule the world and what shall be the purpose of such powers. Shall the powers that will henceforth rule the world be spiritual or material? The answer to this question depends upon what the spiritual forces do in the period of reconstruction and what preparation they make for the future.

This war was the greatest moral catastrophe that has ever come to the Christian world. Both sides of the allies read the same Bible and prayed to the same God; but there was a vast difference between the interpretation of the Bible and God on one side and that on the other. There was also a fundamental difference in human and spiritual values. Nevertheless, we believe, at least, we fondly hope and fervently pray that out of the late war there will come a new, larger and better world-order, the function of which will be none other than to make the democracy of this world the democracy of God.

Now, while some fought, served, sacrificed and died to make the world safe for democracy; others must live, serve and sacrifice to make democracy safe for the world; for if men were willing to die for love of country, others should be willing to live for that for which some were willing to die—to make this world a fit place in which to live.

Far be it from me to even wish to take anything from the glory of the brave boys who have made the supreme sacrifice to make the world safe for democracy, yet we must not overlook the fact that there is a patriotism of peace as well as a patriotism of war; and that while the sacrifices of war were necessary to make the world safe for democracy, democracy must be made safe for the world by intellectual, moral and spiritual forces. I am of the opinion that popular education and intelligent, sincere Christian character will, so far as the future is concerned, not only make the world safe for democracy but democracy safe for the world. After all, books are better than bullets; industrial tools better than bayonets; truth, love, justice, mercy, brotherhood and Christian character are mightier than powder; and churches and schoolhouses are better weapons of defence than navies, submarines and aeroplanes so far as democracy is concerned. I am of the opinion that the strongest fortresses that any nation can have are school houses and church buildings, and that the most powerful standing army, for the future of the Republic lies in the host of public school and Sunday school children. The enemy of the school and the church is the enemy of the Republic. The fact must not be overlooked that the American Republic rests secure only when it rests upon the solid foundation of universal education and a true, intelligent Christianity. And cursed be the hand that would even attempt to remove from the foundation of the Republic the public school, the Bible, the Sunday school, the church and the Christian home; and substitute, as a foundation infidelity, anarchy and the brothel.

In the Russia of today, we find democracy in the extreme, but Russian democracy is just as unsafe for the world as was Russian autocracy. Russian democracy is an ignorant, unsocial, non-ethical and unchristian democracy, and we do not want that kind of a democracy; because it is not safe for the world. We want a democracy where there shall obtain knowledge, reverence, trust, obedience, faithfulness, industry, sincerity, honesty, truthfulness, kindness, justice, purity, peace, honor, sympathy, helpfulness, mercy, health, wealth, happiness and righteousness; and any other kind is either unsafe or inadequate. True democracy should be a conscious progressive effort to found a society on a basis of Christian ethics and in which the highest available motives are utilized. That is a false democracy which measures its success in tons of steel and bank stock. An industrial order in which children are slaughtered to make possible bargain sales, in which women are emaciated in sweat-shops to pile up wealth for an industrial autocracy, in which men are crippled and killed in the interest of bank stock, and in which girls are bought and sold in the markets to gratify the lusts of evil designing men, is not a true democracy. It is a cancerous system that requires more than a poultice or "the faith once delivered to the saints." Saving a drunken man every now and then, establishing rescue missions for fallen women and girls, opening soup kitchens for the hungry and buying cemeteries for the premature victims of a heartless industrial system, do not even touch, much less solve, the problem or cure the disease. These things, as good as they seem to be, will never by themselves bring in the democracy of God. It will take something radically more effective and vitally more cogent and dynamic. The cure must go to the source and not only remove the cause, but change both the social and physical environment. Democracy, therefore, must be permeated with brotherhood, idealism, sympathy, sacrifice, service, education, Christianity and faith in a just God who is in the world and who is working out in the world a good, wise and holy purpose, if it is to bring in the democracy of God.

Mr. Herbert Croley says, "Democracy has assumed an express responsibility for the achievement of the stupendous task of making this world a better place in which more human beings will lead better lives, than they have hitherto had an opportunity of doing." The function of true democracy is, therefore, to produce the best possible citizens, to give them the opportunity of free and unlimited approach to God through the medium of the Christian revelation, to safeguard those interests which are common to all, and to eliminate those things which are detrimental to the highest interests and best welfare of all. In a real democracy there must be intelligent, effective, popular control of the machinery of government; public office must be considered a public trust, and the officer an efficient, moral servant of the people. In a true democracy the will of man will be in accord with the will and holy and wise purpose of a righteous God. But a true democracy cannot be brought about by the application of external force, nor the rigid enforcement of law. It is the resultant of properly developed and intelligently controlled spiritual and moral forces within the lives of the individuals who make up the democracy. The Sunday school and the public school are the two most dynamic and cogent institutions for the advancing, strengthening and perpetuating of the sentiments of democracy in this—or any other—country, and for the Americanization of the children of emigrants. These two institutions give to the state better disposed and better self-governing citizens, besides added capacity for appreciating and practicing the principles of good citizenship. "Life Work Revealed at Geneva." By E. A. Rowsey

The editor of the Evangelist asked the writer to report his trip to Lake Geneva, Wisconsin where the Y. M. C. A. conference for the middle west was in session from June 12 to 23rd.

It would take a lengthy paper to discuss the beauty of the lake, which is said to be more like Lake Galilee than any other lake in the States. Our tent was centrally located. Beyond it was stretched a sheet of water twenty-five miles in length. As the blistering sun parched the faces of my traveling companion Professor J. A. Garber, and myself, we fully appreciated the cool breeze from the lake. This made life a real joy and comfort while we were in the tent. One other incident should be mentioned before the more serious side of the convention is referred to. It was a real pleasure to teach Professor Garber the art of swimming. A picture of his heroic attempt was snapped by a friend on the lake shore. I hope to be able to present the cut for publication before General Conference, or at least before cold weather.

The Geneva conference was permeated with an atmosphere of inspiration more than any conference I have ever attended. It was both inspirational and educational. To be in session with such men as Dr. Mott, Bishop McDowell, Dr. John Timothy Stone, Dr. Taylor, Dr. J. Campbell White, Dr. Gilkey, "Dad." Elliott and others could be nothing less than a spiritual feast. We heard the world's need and America's opportunity and responsibility set forth in a graphic manner. The entire conference dealt with Life Work. And I wish to give a few suggestions as to how young men and women can secure God's guidance on solving their problems and finding their life work, as given by Dr. J. Campbell White:

1. By realizing that God is all-wise and all-loving, that he knows what is best for each one of his children and that he desires to give the very best to every one and will do so, if we will let him. "And we know that to them that love God all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to his purpose" (Romans 8:28). "For it is God who worketh in you both to will and to work, for his good pleasure" (Phil. 2:13).

2. By realizing that God has a loving and wise plan for the world and for each of our lives in relation to his plan for the world. Since we share God's life, we must share his purpose and program. He desires each one to take the largest place in that program that it is possible for him to take. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God above prepared that we should walk in them" (Eph. 2:10).

3. "Obedience is the organ of spiritual knowledge." By doing each day the revealed will of God for that day, one becomes more and more sensitive to his will in all questions of conduct and of life. Only by purposing in advance to follow his will, wherever it may lead, is it possible to discover with any fulness what his special plan is for one's own life.

4. By regarding all of life as a sacred trust and expecting the same kind of guidance from God with reference to going into business or professional work that one would expect in order to go into the ministry or the mission field.

5. By studying the needs of the world, one opens an important channel of knowledge, through which God has a chance to speak. One of Christ's commands is "Lift up your eyes and look on the field."

6. By developing habits of Bible study, meditation and communion with God.

7. By obeying the command of Christ, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." One cannot really pray this without being willing to follow God's will concerning his own life work and that of his children.

8. By securing the best possible preparation for the work of life. Many positions are open to college-trained men and women that are not open to others. The more fully one develops his own latent powers, the higher the responsibility he is likely to be able to carry.

9. By using all one's own best powers and self-analysis, observation, experience and judgment.

10. By consulting one's friends, especially those who have learned most about God and his ways of working with men and through them.

11. By proving that temptations, obstacles and difficulties can be met and successfully overcome through prayer and faith in God.

12. By trusting and learning to interpret the highest spiritual impulses that come to young men and women. Many of the present leaders of the church were strongly impelled toward a Christian life work before reaching the age of eighteen.

13. By prayer for specific guidance. There are many promises that God will guide his children as they ask for guidance and are willing to follow it.

14. By asking for, receiving and obeying the Holy Spirit as one's indwelling presence and guide.

Will the young people who have a life choice to make and a destiny to determine remember these principles and also the words of the mother of Jesus, "Whatsoever he sayeth unto thee, do it." Give the morning of youth the tone you would like to have life keep until your friends say of you, "Out of the body he arose and took his seat in the kingdom of God."

A Great Need and Our Supreme Opportunity. By Miss E. Mae Minnich

The unfinished task of making the boundless love of Christ known to all mankind is the great challenge of the church today. From the time of the organic beginning of the Christian church on the Day of Pentecost, it has been steadily increasing in numbers, in wealth, and in educational equipment but it has never succeeded in evangelizing the world. The population of the earth is now about 1,600,000,000 and it is admitted that one billion of these are heathen. Missionary experts have shown that the heathen are increasing faster by natural propagation than the church is increasing by spiritual regeneration; so that at the present rate of progress heathenism is gaining upon Christianity.

Thirty-five millions of people who have never heard of God's Great Gift pass out into a Christless eternity every year. Oh what a great need, and what a supreme opportunity for us, the present Christian church. Men are born, and they die whether they are given the Word of Life or not. If we do not evangelize the present generation of heathen, they will never be evangelized at all. "Now is the day of salvation, now is the accepted time."

The last command, "Go ye," has never been nullified nor repealed. The fact that our precious Savior suffered the shameful death of the Cross, not for his own sins but for your sins and mine and the sins of the whole world, should arouse every true believer to definite action, out of gratitude, if not in response to his imperative command. God help us that we may not be satisfied merely to be saved, but "saved to serve."

We should be shortsighted indeed if we did not recognize the terrible depravity of body and mind as well as the spiritual darkness of our unfortunate neighbors. Let us review briefly some of the existing conditions in a few countries.

If the proportion of physicians were the same in America as in non-Christian lands there would be but thirty-two medical doctors for the entire United States. The combined population of Maryland and Virginia would be entitled to one physician. In India less than ten percent of the men can read and less than one percent of the women. Likewise, in China, about ten percent of the men and one percent of the women are literate.

"The citadel of heathendom is in the heathen home and that citadel can be taken only by the assault of the women." For the above reason, I shall deal more largely with the wretched condition of womanhood in the vast non-Christian world.

Confucian, Mohammedan and Buddhist scriptures alike agree in relegating women to a position of inferiority and subordination. On the other hand, the Bible, the source of Christianity, constantly honors women and inculcates purity of life. The evils that are recognized as sin in Christian lands are practiced unashamed in non-Christian lands because they are imbedded in the religious sanctions of the nation. Do we women of America appreciate the freedom and privileges which we enjoy? And do we recognize the fact that all the reforms of Christendom were based on the principles of the Bible?

In the ancient land of India we see the deepest degradation of womanhood. Enforced seclusion, child marriage and perpetual widowhood characterize the social life. It is the custom for all those except the poorest outcasts to seclude their women to parts of the household to which no men, except those of the immediate family, are allowed to come. The most gifted, most respected women pass their lives from marriage to death in jail-like confinement.

The deepest blot on the people of India is the custom of child marriage by which female children twelve years of age are given in marriage to men of fifty. Throughout India widowhood is regarded as punishment for crime committed by a woman in her former existence. Because she is accursed, she is stripped of her ornaments, her hair shaved, her food restricted to one scant meal a day. All her gaily colored clothes are taken away and only one coarse white garment is given her. She is debarred from all family feasts, shunned, hated, and made the drudge and slave of her husband's family.

The greatest of all defects in China's social life is concubinage with all its attending evils. The women are shut up in the common family home, in which live several families. If the family is poor the wife has little to do to pass the time because she has nothing to do with; but she has other women to gossip and quarrel with her, hence constant complaints and jealousies arise.

The women of China, in the average homes, are the least efficient housekeepers among the oriental peoples. They sweep their floors every so often, but allow the dirt to remain behind the door. The yard is usually taxed to its capacity with the accumulated rubbish of months. They pay little attention to cooking and know almost nothing of the art of laundering. Occasionally they collect the household wash and immerse it in the canal when the clothes are dried the washing is finished. "Bound feet, bound minds and too early marriages are the things responsible for inefficiency of their work as home makers."

The doors of China are all open, so that any one who will may enter; but this new and unlimited freedom is freighted with many dangers. The unguided Chinese women have found expression in very grotesque and perilous forms and vicious habits. But when they are wisely guided, they develop into splendid leadership, examples of which are Dr. Mary Stone, Dr. Chang and others. Anti-foot binding societies have been formed; rallies of women have been held to combat the use of cigarettes and opium. Now a movement is being launched to debar the American brewers from dumping their blighting curse on China. These capable leaders were educated in mission schools and are object lessons of the power of Christ in the uplift of women. But largely due to indifference of our home churches, such a few Chinese women are trained for positions of leadership.

Vast, black, Christless Africa with its millions of unevangelized people make a most urgent appeal to us to come over and help her. We often hear the expression: "Those niggers aren't worth saving." The story which appeared recently in the Brethren Missionary refutes the statement, "Over on the West Coast of Africa somebody carried the Gospel to a young savage girl, sixteen years of age, and she came into the house of God on Christmas day, to bring her offering, for they have the beautiful custom of bringing their best gifts to Christ on Christmas day. They are poor, with a poverty that you and I know nothing about. Most of them could not bring anything save a handful of vegetables, but this girl just saved from heathenism, brought a silver coin, worth eighty-five cents, and handed that to the missionary as her gift to Christ. He was so astonished at the magnitude of it, that he thought surely the girl must have stolen the money, and for a moment he was about to refuse to accept it, but thought that he had better take it to save confusion. At the conclusion of the service, he called her aside and asked her where she got that money, for it really was a fortune for one in her condition. She explained to him very simply, that in order to give to Christ an offering that satisfied her own heart, she had gone to a neighboring planter and bound herself out to him for the rest of her life for this eighty-five cents, and had brought the whole financial equivalent of her life of pledged service, and laid it down in a single gift at the feet of her Lord!"

What are we as individual members of the Brethren church giving to God for the conquest of lands now steeped in ignorance and sin? The small pittance of forty cents per member is the amount allotted by the Four Year Program.

More About General Conference

The Program

The word "tentative" in the title of the program may prove misleading. It does not mean that the program is to suffer numerous changes. For the most part it was approved by the members of the Executive Committee, and will be changed only on account of inability on the part of appointees to take the assigned part. If silence, thus far, means acceptance, the program will stand as previously announced.

Railroad Rates

We did our best to secure our people the advantages of the one and a third fare on the certificate plan, and have finally heard from Eastern, Central, Western and Southern divisions, that our request is granted. We must however meet certain conditions. One requirement is two hundred and fifty tickets apart from clerical, half-fare and interurban. This condition may seem rather forbidding but we felt that the number could be secured on the basis set forth in the editorial notice of last week. It is here repeated that you may not fail to notice what is required of the various districts if we are to meet the conditions. Let us all co-operate:

Apportionment of Delegates by Districts

Michigan should have at least 4 delegates present.
Maryland and Virginia,	6 delegates
California and Washington,	10

but shame, thrice shame, upon us that not every church in the brotherhood is even reaching that standard.

South America is another field ripe for missionary endeavor. We claim as our field on this continent a portion of Argentina, a territory as large as the state of Indiana and with a population numbering about a million souls. Our faithful missionaries in this country have to battle against ignorance, superstition, the most corrupt form of the Roman Catholic church, and in the more enlightened classes, the great monster of infidelity. Much good has been done in this field but a colossal task still awaits us.

Conditions in many other countries might be discussed but space is limited. Nor is it necessary to go across the waters to find hopeless conditions which only the Gospel of Christ can remedy. In our own United States not one-half of the population are professing Christians. Statistics show that over eight thousand towns west of the Mississippi have no regular religious services. What unlimited possibilities!

The Brethren church has been expanding but certainly not in proportion to the growing needs of the world. Does this condition exist because we are indifferent to the cause of Christ? I think not. The chief obstacle is lack of information. We find without exception that the churches giving the most men and money for missions are those which have been properly instructed along this line. People cannot be expected to give, to go or to pray for a cause about which they are ignorant.

Missionary sermons, lectures in the Sunday school, etc., help to solve the problem but for intensive work, mission study classes have no equal. Women, let us organize mission study classes for this coming winter; not only organize but strenuously endeavor to enlist every woman in the church in them.

The missionary enterprise was born in prayer and its ultimate victory is absolutely dependent on prayer. Some of our missionaries spend two and three solid hours a day in prayer. How many of us spend "two or three solid minutes" for the cause of missions before our Father's throne each day? It may be well to take inventory. Every true disciple can go to the "utmost parts of the earth" in his petitions. God help all of us to look beyond the horizon of our own interests that we may fervently work and pray for the hastening of his Kingdom.

Do this and we make our goal and get our rates.

1919 and 1920

Goal 16 of the Four Year Program calls for the "Biggest and Best Conference in 1920 with 400 Delegates." We seem to expect to make that immense gain then without working up on a graduated scale. We may find this to be a most difficult task. The motive to share in the celebration of our achievements may not prove to be a sufficient stimulus. Moreover, if we fail to attain the desired goals, there will be less desire to celebrate. The best way to assure the full attainment of all goals is to have a thoroughly representative conference this year. If every pastor and the key laymen of each congregation will assemble at Winona to receive final instruction and the needed inspiration for the great drive we will be the more likely to go over the top in fine form. Then all will be the more eager to join in the proposed jubilee conference of 1920. Let 1919 be large and great. It can be if we strive to make it such.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Assurance: A Fundamental Doctrine of Christian Standing and Growth

By Wm. C. Teeter

On entering into a discussion of this subject there are several Scripture texts that seem especially fundamental at the very beginning, such as: 1 Peter 1:5, "Kept by the power of God: Kept through Faith." Jude 1:1, "Preserved in Jesus Christ and called," or "Kept for Jesus Christ." 2 Peter 3:18, "But grow in grace, and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Here we find a most satisfactory basis on which to rest "Assurance." May we inquire for the meaning of this term and its basic principle? We notice that assurance tends "To inspire credit, and is a pledge, furnishing any ground of full confidence; firm persuasion, firmness of mind; freedom from doubt; courage, confidence," etc. And theologically applied it means, "The full confidence of present personal salvation, wrought by the witness of the Holy Spirit in him who believes in Christ." Hence, the writers quoted above, being inspired by the Spirit of God, have given us absolute confidence of full assurance through faith in Jesus Christ.

The consideration of this subject involves both the standing and state of the believer in Christ Jesus. It must be apparent to every student of the Scriptures that there is a vast difference between the position and walk of the Christian." The first is the result of the work of Christ and is perfect and entire from the very moment that Christ is received by faith. Through faith alone this standing before God is conferred and gives him perfect security and favor with God whether he be the weakest or strongest person his title to sainthood is precisely the same.

Therefore, "Let us draw near unto God with a true heart in full assurance of faith (Heb. 10:22), for here faith and life are involved. "When you lie down to sleep, whether or not you think to offer up to the good Father a prayer of thanksgiving for the mercies of the day and a petition for protection through the shadows of the night, you close your eyes in faith that you will open them again with the morning's sun. Who will stand by your bedside with bellows to force the air into your sleepless lungs? or, indeed may they not fall asleep and fail you, when you have forgotten them in your slumber? Who will keep his hand upon your heart and see that it pumps on when you are unconscious? When you fall asleep you go out of consciousness with an abiding faith in something or Somewhat, that you will return to consciousness with the new day. You would not dare to close your eyes in slumber this night, if you mistrusted that the machinery of your body would stop before the morning light. You would force yourself into wakefulness by torture and by terror, day after day and night after night, until your will at last succumbed to nature. Take out faith in the safety of helpless sleep, and the human race will become a pandemonium of madmen. So I might go through all the processes of living, and find faith in every step. If you must reason before the trusting, you will die before you reach your conclusions. You live by faith. The processes of living are mainly faith in the divine Preserver and in the uniformity of his law. "How much more in the life to come!" Let us see:

The text and other Scriptures support this view. "To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are 'Kept by the power of God through faith' unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time" (1 Peter 1:5). "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance" (Eph. 1:11). The very fact of sonship give us a standing and title. "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name" (John 1:12). "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God." (1 John 5:1). "And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ" (Rom. 8:17). "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him" (1 John 3:2).

The believer's standing is not attained by what he does, but by simply accepting Jesus Christ by faith. All the body of Scripture on the question has not one item to indicate that the position is gained by prayer, or diligence in service, or church-going, or any other good works. All, all is the gift of God, through Christ by faith and therefore belongs equally to all believers. His standing is perfect before God, but not so his state.

Then second, the state of the believer is quite another matter and permits an inquiry concerning that condition of the Christian. His state is certainly far, far below his exalted standing in the sight of God. Paul recognized this difference very distinctly, for on standing he says, "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ: by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God" (Rom. 5:1-2). And also, "Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began (2 Tim. 1:9). "And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in the heavenlies in Christ Jesus (Eph. 2:6). "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory" (Col. 3:4).

But as to the state or walk of the Christian believer, he says, "Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances?" (Col. 2:20). "If ye then be risen with Christ seek those things which are above"; "Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth"; "But now ye also put off all these: anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth. Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds" (Col. 3:1, 5, 8, 9). "Walk as children of light" (Eph. 5:8). "Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober" (1 Thess 5:6). "Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling" (Phil. 2:12). The salvation here spoken of in the last text is not of the soul, but out of the snares which would hinder the Christian from doing the will of God. Now, you cannot work out what you do not possess within. You must work out what God works in, and do it "with fear and trembling." Let me illustrate.

Suppose a young student is under the training of a great artist. The teacher says to his student, "Tomorrow I am coming to your studios to give you instruction from 1 to 4 P. M." Now this is a new turn of affairs that this illustrious teacher should descend to come into the home of this obscure student, and the man fears. Mark you, he does not fear the teacher, but he fears lest he will miss a minute of the teacher's help; he fears lest he will not catch every feature of exquisite shading, of curve and stroke, and lest he may miss the special suggestion of the artist. Yes, he trembles, not because he dreads the teacher, but fears lest he might lose some hint, or some delicate touch of the brush to the canvas. Oh, he trembles lest he should lose anything! So, my dear Christian, listen: The great God has come into your life to live there and to unfold the new creation that he has begun in you, and he says to you: "I am going to save you from the power of sin." How careful you ought to be! When God speaks, obey. When his Spirit gives a hint, instantly act upon it. Listen for his voice, and act upon his suggestion, so that he may work out his purposes through your life!

When you have committed a trespass against any one, and God works in you to confess, confess! Confess to man, to woman, to child, to servant, to HIM; and his blood will wash you whiter than snow. "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7).

It is assumed that we believe in the evangelical doctrine of salvation by grace and reward according to works as Paul teaches in his epistles. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works," which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them" (Eph. 2:8-10).

The doctrine of assurance has its basic principle in the great doctrine of the atonement. "The offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all, for by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified" (Heb. 10:10, 14). "He gave himself for our sins; who gave himself for me (Gal. 1:4; 2:20). 'He gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works' (Titus 2:14). Hence, the doctrine of salvation through the blood of Calvary, stands out paramount in this discussion.

Salvation has several aspects, and has been described as a great prize with two objectives. The first is on the Cross, where Jesus saved from the guilt and penalty of sin. Another is in his second advent, when the body will be raised and married to the spirit and salvation will be complete. Then there is a sense in which salvation is finished. Another sense in which it is in process. Finished by Christ when he died and yet in process by the Holy Spirit in our hearts.

Therefore we see that between his Cross where Jesus put away guilt, and the second advent where the body is married to the Spirit, between these two is the process of being saved from the power and the love of sin. "For the word of the Cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us who are saved it is the power of God" (1 Cor. 1:18). "For Christ is the power of God and the wisdom of God" (1 Cor. 1:24). Should a man say to me, "Brother, are you saved?" I can reply, "I was saved when I trusted Christ, in receiving him by faith; I shall be saved when my body is raised; but I am being saved all the time." When I trusted Christ I was saved from the guilt and penalty of sin. Now I am being saved every day from the power and the love of sin. "Kept by the power of God through faith," a process. And I shall be saved by the hope within me, when my body is raised and married to the spirit, from the presence of sin, for sin will then have been fully put away. "I will be complete in him," having obtained his likeness and being conformed to his image (Rom. 8:29).

Let me recapitulate on this subject of assurance! Some one may inquire, "What do you mean by assurance?" "The certain knowledge and abiding conviction that I am a justified and regenerated child of God. It is not simply the essence of faith, but faith made perfect in blossom and fruitage. It is the ring and crown of our espousal to Christ." It makes decided, strong, happy, active, and useful Christians. It stimulates to holiness. It honors God and is a testimony that encourages those who in so great a concern tell us that they would start if they knew they could make a sure thing of it. Christ's finished work makes us safe. Faith makes us sure. Our walk must determine our enjoyment. When the disciples of Socrates were asked how they knew certain things, they replied, "He says it." Much more may we be assured by the word of God. "Forever, O Lord, thy Word is settled in heaven" (Ps. 11:89).

"I want no other argument. I need no other plea; It is enough that Jesus died, and that he died for me."

But some one says, "Now make it simple and practical; tell me how you know for certain that you are saved." "Well, because I believe for certain on the Lord Jesus Christ as my divine and atoning Savior; and because I am conscious of the exercises and graces of the new life as the fruits of faith. God's word is my absolute warrant for salvation, I understand God's terms, and that settles it. I go by the Book. I wait for no sudden or startling experience. What is written down in black and white secures and assures me. God provides salvation and I accept it. I do not try to make merit and supplement the atonement. I do not even try to believe that I am saved, but I believe on Jesus Christ and I know I am saved.

I have voluntarily and heartily committed myself to Christ once for all, as he gave himself for me once for all. I have no self-assurance; I find nothing in my heart or life as a meritorious ground of peace, but I trust my all in the blood and finished work of Christ on Calvary. He made peace and I accept it freely and fully. I surrender, and I abandon myself to my Savior, rest securely in his keeping power, and go about his business in a consecrated life. My hopeless ruin is my recommendation, and my conscious guilt is my fitness. I endeavor to "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," not into grace, but in grace. Here I rest. I know that in Christ Jesus I am regarded just as righteous, innocent, pure and safe, just as truly near and dear to God as Christ is. I am one of God's sons and a fellow-heir with Jesus Christ."

God cleanses me judicially, once for all, by the precious blood of his only begotten Son, Jesus; hence my standing is: "So near, so very near to God, I can no nearer be;" For in the person of his Son, I am as near as he."

Let me say in conclusion, that I regard the best treatise ever written on Assurance, to be, the First Epistle of John the Evangelist.

BARKING AT THE TRAIN OF PROGRESS

Have you ever noticed a train come thundering down the track and a big dog, barking wildly, come running at top speed out of a farmhouse and make for the train? Perhaps the dog has some dim intention of stopping the train. It never accomplishes anything. The train thunders past. If the dog really tried to stop it, the train would go past all the same and leave a dead dog behind.

Some words are like that, unwise, mere "sound and fury" that accomplish nothing. Before the Civil war many persons waxed eloquent in defence of slavery, but they could not stop the onward march of progress. In our own day some have tried to stop the onward march of temperance. They failed. God is marching on. We cannot stop human progress. We must turn our eyes in faith toward the future. We must range ourselves on the side of right and take God's side on reform questions even against the powerful, who, after all, are like dogs barking at a train.

BIG I AND LITTLE U

A public man, whose duty it was to receive, entertain, and present to an evening audience a literary man, a minor poet, was himself reticent almost to the point of severity. So his chagrin and disgust can be imagined when he found that the speaker of the evening had but one theme—himself. He did bring others into his monologue,—men like Emerson and Longfellow and Lowell,—but only to speak of them disparagingly when compared with himself. His departure the morning after his lecture was a relief to his entertainer, whose own rule of speech was to keep still about himself and in the case of others of whom he might be tempted to speak critically to remember the lines,

"In men whom we pronounce as ill
I find so much of goodness still, ?
In men whom we pronounce divine
I find so much of sin and blot,
I hesitate to draw the line Between the two when God has not."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The Social Responsibilities of the Church. By W. D. Furry, A. M., Ph. D.

Touching the social functions and responsibilities of the Christian church, the churches are today more sensitive and solicitous than ever before in modern history. At no time in its whole history has the church sought more intelligently and sympathetically to make evident both to itself and the world its relations to the great institutions of human society and the other ends and pursuits which command the time and devotion of mankind. Every local member of the church needs enlightenment at this point and every self-respecting communion will seek to secure and distribute the needed information. After two thousand years of moral experimentation the conviction is solidly established that Christianity is rather a movement than a fixed body of doctrines. Jesus Christ was not a propagandist but an idealist. In an age abounding in social maladjustments and social abuses he championed none in particular but both illustrated and enforced a type of life which if universalized would become the solvent of all industrial, political and moral problems. Christianity is rather a dynamic ideal than a static programme, and increasingly the church must interpret its message in terms of current life and thought. The Christian ideal can be understood only as the church interprets it in terms of current speech. From the Day of Pentecost when every man heard the Gospel in his own tongue until now the church has been the determining spiritual force only in so far as it has been able and ready to interpret its Christian inheritance in terms of the dominant social mind. In his "History of Theology," the late Professor Briggs, has convincingly shown that the type of religious doctrine dominant at any particular time is both determined and explained by the type of public mind effective at that particular time, while Shailer Mathews has shown that church doctrine is only the result of the dominant social mind at work in religion. The message of the church like its Master is eternal but it must be spoken in terms intelligible to the generation to which it makes appeal. The dominant social mind of today and in terms of which the Christian faith must be interpreted if it would be effective is the Scientific-Social Mind.

The Triumph of Democracy

The larger concern and the increased sensitiveness of the church touching its social responsibilities is due to the rise of the new social consciousness. Today democracy is triumphant and the world of tomorrow belongs to it. Democracy is here and will remain. We can no longer think in egoistic or autocratic terms and be intelligible or effective. Today the democratic ideal of life pulsates in the awakened consciousness of the multitudes and is the lodestar of individuals in every station of life and in every part of the world who believe that a democratic ideal of life is alone worthy of men and women created in the image of God. To pray as one did recently that the world may be safe from democracy is both an exhibition of moral obtuseness and a pathetic waste of time. For democracy both life and resource have been sacrificed as never before in human history. Today democracy has become a religion to multitudes and if the church could speak with its old time effectiveness to the men of today its message must be socialized through and through since none other will be intelligible to the men and women of this generation. The world is today persuaded that democracy represents the goal of human history and that civilization will have reached its divinely set goal only when men are capable of governing themselves according to the Law of God. The task of the church is not ended when individual believers are created. Our days are too momentous for conventional words and snug, self-centered piety. It is not another faith we need or more Christianity but a more serious and intelligent faith, a less self-conscious and a more self-sacrificing Christianity.

A Fundamental Issue

A fundamental issue is before the church. At the present time this issue is urgent, the alternatives clearly differentiated and defined. The issue moreover admits no compromise. There is no middle ground upon which to take refuge and to refuse to face the issue is the rankest moral cowardice. Today the issue is divisive in the Christian church. To believe, as many do, that the world is soon to come to an end in a miraculous cataclysm, means that in concerning itself about social functions and responsibilities the church is taking upon itself unnecessary and unwarranted burdens. To all such persons it is useless to make appeal, since they are possessed or rather obsessed by an ideal of religious faith which at once removes them from the ranks of responsible leaders. They glory rather in a world undergoing rapid and certain disintegration than in the outlining of a constructive message for a world in the grip of chaos and creation. Others can not share this belief nor can they think that it is representative of the real nature of Christianity. To these persons this is a day of growing, transcendent opportunity and therefore fearful responsibility. They believe that the church has a message for this generation and they are responsible for its giving and application. They believe also that the church has a message that can save the world from materialism, commercial exploitation and a selfish nationalism. They believe also that they have a Gospel to give which can save the world from war and provide an adequate and contagious basis of world-brotherhood. Standing amidst the ruins of a world that has been "shivered to atoms" those who hold the second alternative of the issue believe themselves possessed of a programme of personal and social life which will bear the burden of a new social order and a new internationalism that will enthrone brotherhood where now reigns national aggression and industrial selfishness. The present is not a moment of defeat but of resplendent opportunity. The World War is not the end of the world but the beginning of a new epoch that may be and under God must be more Christian than the best ages of the past have been. The future has greater problems than the past but to those whose eyes have been opened to see the horizon of the limitless possibilities of faith it is full of hope. God has not abdicated the throne: Jesus Christ is not a sentimental anachronism: faith and righteousness have not been defeated on the field of battle: injustice and selfishness are not the ultimate and triumphant forces of humanity. The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of the Lord and his Christ. To hasten the consummation of the programme represents the social responsibility of the church.

A Three-fold Responsibility

The mission of the church is fundamentally positive rather than negative, constructive rather than destructive, formative rather than reformatory. The formative social tasks of the church and therefore its responsibilities are three: (1) the full recognition of the divine ideal of human life, both individual and social, for itself and the whole world; (2) the initiation and conduct of movements and programmes for the realization of this ideal alike in the individual and the social whole; (3) the possession and transmission of the Holy Spirit as the unique power for the regeneration of the world.

(1) It must needs be believed that the Christian ideal is equally individual and social. Life as we live it consists in large measure of relationships. Religion is relationship. The Christian faith is God's ideal of relationship both as between himself and man and man and man. We have never questioned the contagion and potency of Christ as the ideal of personal life but we must now go on to accept his Gospel as the final order of social life. To criticise existing life and institutions in the light of this ideal and to seek to establish this ideal in the world of human relationships represents the first social responsibility. For the kingdom of heaven the whole earth is the location, every nation will make room, every community will welcome its humblest messenger and all else will give way. To reconstruct human society so that it shall become a congenial home for the larger ideals of justice, of sympathy, and brotherhood now stirring all about us—this represents the social task of the church. Christianity exists to make the world over after the likeness of Jesus Christ and fit every individual for membership therein. No better opportunity to accomplish this end ever presented itself to the church than today. Will the church see the day of its visitation and rejoice?

(2) It is also the social task of the church to initiate social movements for the realization of the Christian ideal but not to attempt to become their executive. The world will not soon admit another Holy Roman Empire nor is the church called and commissioned to become one. History illustrates that the Gospel has borne its best fruit when the church has given itself to the presentation and initiation of new and higher ideals of personal and corporate life. The social task of the church is rather to educate and inspire than to execute fixed programmes. It is to be in the world but not of the world.

(3) The church must embody and supply the sacrificial spirit which is the divine method for the regeneration of human life both personal and social. The only infidelity to be dreaded today is the unbelief in the golden rule of conduct. Today as always the world needs a new spirit and the world has seen none higher than that which found its embodiment in Jesus Christ. To hold steadily this type of life before the world and to bring the world to evaluate all its conduct in its terms—and to assist the world in elevating its conduct, private and social, national and international—to that sublime height illustrated by Jesus Christ both in life and death, represents the third social responsibility of the church. And in consequence of the sacrifice of the past few years the world is ready for this message of the Gospel as never before.

To fulfill their social responsibilities let the churches go triumphantly into this century of victorious democracy the conquest of which admonishes the church to examine itself anew and profoundly take heed unto itself that it take not the service of the people unworthily.

The Good of Conventions and Conferences

With Some Reference to Winona Lake, 1919

(An adaptation of Dr. Francis E. Clark's article in the Christian Endeavor World, to the Brethren General Conference.—By the Editor)

The very origin of the word itself helps us to answer the question. Convenio, to come together.

Robinson Crusoe was about the only man who never needed a convention; for he could build, and, indeed, had to build, his own hut, make his own trousers, cook his own plantains, milk his own goat, wash his own dishes, and do all the rest of his "kitchen police."

In fact, he had no one to convene with until his man Friday appeared, and then he got together with him as soon as possible.

Adam was in the same fix for a while, but God soon said, "I will make him a helpmeet for him."

Now a convention is simply the getting together of kindred spirits for a purpose, and the purpose in our Brethren Conference is to prepare for action.

It is for the very same purpose that Uncle Sam mobilized his troops. Indeed, our dictionary definition of mobilize is, "To assemble together to prepare for action."

We meet in our great conventions, state and national, and in our sectional conference meetings, not simply to sing and pray together, to listen to eloquent speeches, and to enjoy a delightful fellowship; but we meet "to prepare for action," to mobilize our local or our national forces. If we as Brethren are to fight a winning battle in the days to come, we must mobilize our forces; and our great mobilization camp for 1919 is Winona Lake, Indiana.

Plans will there be matured, inspiration will there be received, which will go far to determine the success of our work during the next year. Consider these special benefits:

A Widening Horizon

1. This Conference and others on a smaller scale will do much to widen our mental and spiritual horizon.

You have doubtless heard of the boy who was lying down in his father's pasture, and there made the marvellous discovery that he was in the exact center of the world. The horizon was equidistant on every side. The exact zenith was over his head.

All of us are too apt to get the same impression concerning ourselves intellectually and spiritually.

Our horizon is too narrow. Our village or city is the only one. We come to believe after a while that there is nothing beyond what we have already done and seen, individually or in our church.

I have a dim recollection of a story I once read of a Norwegian boy, Arne, who had always lived in a valley. The pine trees on the skyline of the hills around his valley had always bounded his vision. One day he climbed to the top of one of the hills near his home, and from there he saw an almost boundless sky, rich fields, and thriving villages, and other hills beyond. He was amazed, and from that moment began to live the larger life of which he was capable.

The Conference at Winona Lake will mean just that to many a Brethren. It will be a mountain-peak experience intellectually and spiritually, and he will return to his home and church to put his Winona vision into acts of genuine service for his Master and his fellow men.

Jolted Out of the Ruts

2. Another blessing of a great convention or conference is that one is likely to be jolted out of deep ruts if he is in them. Not that a rut is always a bad thing if it is not too deep. A well worn path to the prayer meeting is always desirable, as well as one to all the church services. A rut, in its derivation, is near akin to a route; and we do not get very far in life unless we have a definite route and follow it.

But the trouble with ruts is that they are inclined to grow deeper and deeper, until we cannot see over them. There are some churches among the Brethren, I hope not many, that have not had a new idea for the prayer meetings, church services or various departments during the twentieth century. They conduct their Sunday school just exactly as they did in 1899. The Christian Endeavor is run in the very same way. At the consecration meetings the roll is called beginning at the same letter of the alphabet, and there are few in the society that were not there in the later eighteen hundreds. The only difference is that the members are twenty years older.

They have not learned that there are a dozen different ways of making a meeting interesting and yet keeping its spirit of devotion.

They have forgotten that there are books that tell of hundreds of different ways of making the Sunday school,

Christian Endeavor and general church work take on new life.

They need to learn that there are new plans, new incentives, new challenges, to better work, which if accepted, will increase the efficiency of their church one hundred percent.

Now, all these things will be learned at a great conference, and the delegate, if he is a worthy one, will go home with a new light in his eye and a new purpose in his heart.

Inspiring Personalities

3. Again, a good conference will introduce us to some inspiring personalities. We may or may not be introduced to them by name, and have a chance to shake hands with them; but we shall get near enough to catch their spirit and to be inspired by their ideals.

But why go on. Space forbids me mentioning all by name. And the program,—we have already seen that. We know what great things are in store for us. Every person scheduled has something good for us if we will receive it. Some of their words may transform our lives and through us our churches.

Many a life is incomparably richer and fuller because some inspiring personality touched it at our National Conferences.

"By My Spirit, Saith the Lord"

Finally the Spirit of God is never absent from such conferences, and I believe he never will be, since there are so many who take him with them.

Many past conference delegates, who have forgotten every notable address, will thank God to their dying day for some quiet conference hour, some sunrise prayer meeting, some consecration service, when they gave themselves more fully to God, and when they sang with a fervor they never knew before.

"I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord,
Over mountain or plain or sea;
I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord;
I'll be what you want me to be."

Such a rare hour or moment would be worth all the time and expense demanded by a conference, though it were a hundred times as much as it is.

All that I have said applies only in a lesser degree to our state conferences and local meetings.

Many and many a Brethren has testified that such and such a conference transformed his life.

Who would miss, were it possible to avoid it, such a widening horizon, such an intellectual stimulus, such a spiritual outlook and uplook?

MISSIONS

Home Mission Notes. By G. C. Carpenter

Opportunity With Urgent Call

Word just came from Brother Drushal as follows: "People at Happy will furnish school building and pay the salary of teacher, if we furnish teacher. The teacher will take the county examination and pay may go as high as $80 per month. Was there yesterday. Great opportunity! We should take advantage of it and must have teacher there by the first of September. Can you get in touch with anyone?"

Who Will Go?

Some are willing to go thousands of miles away into distant Africa or South America and the need there is great, but who will go a few miles from their own doors and help answer the pressing call for light and life? Who will go as a teacher? Who will write us at once and say "Here am I, send me?" Let the friends and supporters of the Kentucky mission work assist in finding the faithful Christian teacher who will answer this call. Do it quickly.

Winona Lake

The coming conference at Winona Lake should be first and last a missionary conference. Whatever else characterizes the conference the chief note sounding and resounding throughout all the sessions of the conference should be that of missions, missions, missions. "Go ye into all the world and make disciples" is the Master's command to his church. An inventory should be taken and a new survey of the field taken and then the church should break away from the shore line and launch out into the deep as never before. The Macedonian call comes from home and foreign lands. The life and progress of the home churches depend upon the answer given to that Macedonian call.

Krypton

Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Rempel of Long Beach,

California, will be at Krypton by the time our readers receive this report. Brother Rempel will succeed Brother James S. Cook as superintendent of the Krypton field. Brother and Sister Rempel come very highly recommended, our Board having received splendid recommendations from a number of reliable sources. We quote from one: "They have commended themselves to us by their devout Christian and Christlike spirit. They know God in the real meaning of that phrase, and he is their Father and their Friend with whom they are constantly in loving touch. They are people who know how to pray and who pray. It has been wonderful to see how God has been with them. They have been tested many a time but God has always delivered them when the crisis came. They love the Word of God and they love to teach it to others and to bring others to Christ." Brother Cook has done a good work and we regret to have him leave even for a season this great field where the need of such men is so pressing. We rejoice however in the privilege of introducing these new workers who promise to be equally as faithful.

Lost Creek

Sister Drushal writes: "Things are running over here. We never had anything like the attendance we have now, except during the winter term. Our services have been attended all during the summer in an exceptional way. The encouraging part is the large class of men, and the most of them not yet Christians, which means they must be won for Christ. They will be won, for we are praying for them." May souls be saved and the church established.

NEW WORKERS FOR RIVERSIDE

Brother and Sister Alan S. Pearce of Los Angeles, California, are already hard at work at Riverside, both being teachers and Brother Pearce also helping in the management of the dormitory. Mrs. Woodmansee, also of Los Angeles, is the dormitory matron and is a very capable woman, planning wisely and carrying out her plans in a splendid way. All of these come with the best of recommendations from reliable sources from within and without the Brethren church. Miss Bessie Hooks from Mosgrove, Pennsylvania, is another promising worker. She and Sister Dove Byrd are teaching the grades and are supported by the Kentucky public school funds.

May the Lord bless these workers along with Brother and Sister Drushal and make all of them a great blessing to the large number of students in Riverside, more than one hundred being enrolled so early in the year.

New Pledges for 1919-1920

Every Christian Endeavor society and other organization as well as the hundreds of individual helpers should determine on making a larger allowance for Kentucky Mountain mission work for the coming year than for any previous year. Every society should authorize its representative to make the pledge on Thursday evening, September 4, which will be Kentucky night at Winona Lake Conference. Brother Beachler will call for the pledges and there should be a ready response.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

OAKVILLE, INDIANA

In keeping with our usual custom,—reporting every quarter—we proceed to make good. We have observed all the “special” days during the spring and summer with good results. We have had to “specialize” more than ever before, but we are glad for it, as it keeps a church in touch with the outside workings. Since April 1st, we have been preaching every Sunday for these people, making the long trip from Ashland. Some thought it would “kill” the Sunday school and the church to have preaching every week, the church would need to be buried. But such is not the case; more grace and spiritual bread has made us all the more alive. Then on the first of May the Sunday school decided to make the offerings of the first and third Sunday of each month go toward the church building fund. The pessimist said this will surely drive folks away. Facts speak for themselves. The first quarter of this year the Sunday school's average attendance was seventy-seven (77). The second quarter, was an average of ONE HUNDRED TWO (102). The average offerings for the first quarter $....; second quarter, over twenty dollars per Sunday. Another class has been added and organized with charter on the way. Oakville is not “os-ker-speiled” in any way. We are still forging ahead. Still growing.

We have a Teacher Training class going and it is becoming more interesting to attendants. The prayer meetings are averaging up in attendance very good. The summer slump has not affected us a great deal.

On Sunday, July the 20th, the Sunday school went visiting—over southeast twenty-one miles and had a union service with the “Church of God” people, where some of our members live. There were ninety-eight there; though the day was misty and damp, a splendid time was had. Seventy-six ate dinner at the home of Brother and Sister Sherry, where all congregated after the church service.

The Junior Endeavor meets on Friday afternoons with good results. We have an efficient leader for the children who gives them good care and instruction. It is really a joy to hear those little folks offer up their little prayers and read from the Bible. The Juniors have had several picnics in the woods nearby.

The Senior Endeavor is holding up reasonably well for the summer. We have used two evenings for returned soldier boys to give their experiences in the army both in the United States and overseas.

The S. S. C. E. is busy most every week with work and the attendance is good. A few new members have been received.

There are two special days for us this month which are to be a stimulus to avoid “slump” disease. August 24, we, with the Maple Grove Sunday school, will have a union service with the Muncie Mission in one of the fine parks in Muncie. I will preach in the morning and Brother Kimmel in the afternoon. August 31 will be Harvest Home, or Home Coming Day in Oakville, to which all former resident members and pastors are invited to be with us. We can take care of you all. Come. There will be some special features in the day's program.

We have agreed—the Lord willing—to stay with these people another year after October 1st. We are spending the summer months here among them, but will be back in good old Ashland for another year in college this fall, then we will move here permanently. After landing here the first of July, these good people to the number of 116, assembled and gave us a “pounding” which supplied our larder for some time. The association, and fellowship, and good will of the people is appreciated far above the material gifts. THANKS for ALL.

Oakville will be well represented at Winona; will YOU? W. R. DEETER.

INDIANA DISTRICT

I am coming to the district to encourage you with words of appreciation for the response thus far given in your reports to me as the District Director. At the same time I am made to believe that the effort has not been as good as it should have been. We have not completed the task we set out to do and to fall short is to fail in a way. This I am sure no loyal brethren wants to do, if he possibly can help it.

My word of appreciation is, that I have been able to ascertain that many have been endeavoring to accomplish goals, working together in a brotherly way, in an earnest, whole-hearted effort to accomplish the most for Christ and the church. We have not always been of the same opinion but we have born in manifest kindness with each other as brethren.

My word of criticism is that some of the manifested brotherliness and co-operation is so hard to find, because of our selfishness, that our work is hindered and our reports show up bad. We have too many preachers who are so unthoughtful and unwise in their efforts that they talk to their congregations about the “too heavy” of the Program, even making them believe that it can not be carried out and really cause them to be not in sympathy with the effort. The one thing needful is co-operation, and unity among all the brethren, realizing that even if we differ we have need to be co-operative and charitable, rather than antagonistic, and backbiting continually. I am sure that the spirit of such is leaving its impression upon some of the children and such things had not ought to be, brethren.

My appeal, as one of the executive committee, is that we might all come to Winona in the very spirit of prayer, with love of the Brethren cause at heart. Like Paul, let us “forget” and “press forward,” making our goals, to the honor and the glory of God that his righteousness might prevail through us as brethren. Let us put the clouds behind us and let the sun shine in our coming together in the largest assembly we have ever had as Brethren. My desire, brethren, is that we might be in every way a stronger and more efficient people because of the Conformance into which we are about to enter. Come, let us glorify God together in the “Spirit and in Truth.”

W. T. Lytle, Burlington, Indiana.

NOTES FROM GARWIN

The times have been busy here since our meetings have closed with the various kinds of field work and church work. Nevertheless we are losing no time. A few days after Brother Coleman left, the people completely surprised me by making me a present of $10.00. There was still money left after the free will offering had been raised. The surprise was greatly appreciated, and especially the spirit in which it was given. Our Sunday school shows no signs of a summer slump. Brother Oscar Rank, our efficient superintendent, is doing good work. July 20, Art Richards, a recent graduate of the Bangor Theological Seminary of Bangor, Maine, preached for us. A reception was held that day for the new converts. A bounteous dinner was served in the basement of the church and a day of fellowship was spent together by the large number of people who were present.

There are a number of improvements planned; only a few have progressed sufficiently to be announced at this time. It is planned to cement the floor of the parsonage basement, and it was voted to place a light plant in the basement of the parsonage for the lighting of the church and parsonage. The money required for this was nearly all subscribed before the day on which it was planned. This will be a welcome improvement over the gasoline lights that are in the church. There were no lights in the parsonage. This plant will be installed in the near future, but as I am doing all the wiring, we will have to take into account any forces that might delay us in the installation.

Brother Joe Haynos and Brother Joe Snaha (the latter is one of our new members) have been instrumental in the securing of the lighting system.

There are several planning to attend the Conference at Winona this fall. I hope to be able to attend also this year.

May we have the interest of the brotherhood at heart in the work that we are attempting to do for the cause of the Kingdom.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

FROM BEAVER CITY, NEBRASKA

On account of the "flu" and other hindrances our communion services were delayed until June 15th, when Brother J. G. Dodds of Maple Grove, Kansas, kindly consented to come and help us. He gave us excellent help which was much appreciated. In lieu of the coming love feast we did some personal work and baptized three precious souls which gave us cause for rejoicing. One week after our love feast we had reason to expect Brother E. S. Flora, of Indiana, to be with us as our pastor. But when he failed to come on time, we were much disappointed. However for the disappointment Brother Flora more than made good for on Thursday following the 26th, in answer to a knock at the door I found instead of one there were two. They were introduced as Brother and Sister E. S. Flora. And so the Brethren church at Beaver City is no longer without a pastor and all seem to be well pleased. Last Sunday was Brethren Day with us. We had a fine program which was well rendered and could not fail to result in much good. We appreciated the help of the printed program, so well prepared by the Ashland brethren. With the help of the pastor and his good wife and good help of our local talent we may always expect interesting times. On Sunday evening at the close of the service there was the baptism of an excellent young man which gave us further cause for rejoicing.

With best wishes for the cause of the Master, we are ever yours for Christ.

C. FORNEY.

MISS LUCY COWAN WIMER, B. M., M. M., Instructor in Piano, Harmony, and History of Music in Ashland College

Miss Lucy Cowan Wimer, of Lanark, Illinois, whose picture appears above, is the newly elected Head of the above noted department in the College. Ashland has always had a strong musical department and it is a matter of great satisfaction that we were able to secure so excellent a teacher on the retirement of the former Head of this department. Miss Wimer has had a long and thorough preparation for her chosen work as well as some years of successful experience. She brings to the department a splendid enthusiasm for her work. Moreover, she is a member of the Brethren church which is very desirable and thus the co-operation between her work and that of the religious exercises of the College may be very helpful.

It is the plan now to give the Musical Department a larger place in the daily devotional exercises and both Miss Wimer and the teacher of Voice, Miss Amy Puterbaugh, will find opportunity to be of real assistance to the College in a larger way than usual. Miss Wimer will find the department in excellent condition, due to the work of the retiring teacher. Everything now presages a good year for Miss Wimer.

Miss Wilma Lichty,—an appreciation.

After some five years of excellent service, Miss Wilma Lichty, retires from the department of Piano in the College. Miss Lichty contributed her share in raising and maintaining the uniformly high standards of the department of Piano. After a short period in which the department was served by several different teachers, the work was a bit disarranged but under the care of Miss Lichty it grew rapidly to its present prosperous condition. Miss Lichty was universally admired and loved by her students, all of whom regret to see her sever her relations with the College. The school is under obligations to her for her work in its behalf and for the lasting impress of her influence.

Summer School closed last week with a social. Plans are already on foot for the enlargement of this work next summer. We are very fortunate in having as a member of the Summer School faculty, Prof. J. A. McDowell, superintendent of the Ashland City schools, former congressman from Ohio, and now president of the Board of Trustees of Kent State Normal College. Also, we were enabled to secure some very excellent men for the convocation hour and at very reasonable terms.

Dean of Women. It may not be generally known that Miss Marie Lichty, teacher of modern language in the College, has been appointed Dean of Women for the coming year. The importance of this office can not be overestimated. The young women of the school must have a woman of experience and good judgment with whom they may consult and advise. I feel that the brethren may be sure of very wholesome conditions at the Hall with this arrangement. Parents of young women who are thinking about sending them to college, should give this matter some attention.

Dean of Men. Several good men are under consideration for this important place. It is an office not easily filled. But the young men of the school who live in the Hall must be under the authority of a capable man. While in the Hall both the young women and the young men have a form of self-government, yet it does not bring the best results unless there is an older head to advise and caution. I am sure the returning men will welcome this arrangement.

Professor J. A. Garber is in Virginia visiting his aged mother. While there he will endeavor to interest young people in Ashland College.

I take this method of expressing my sincere thanks for the many letters and other expressions of loyalty to the College, which have come to me within recent weeks.

Fall Opening Tuesday, September 16. One hundred in the College, and fifty in the Seminary. Why not, try Burnworths' plan at Lanark and have an Ashland College social?

E. E. JACOBS.

LOST CREEK ITEMS

Sometimes we are made to wonder just how deep and how much the spiritual life has taken hold of those who have come under the influence of Riverside, over which our Savior rules. A recent experience has made us to feel that much of the Word of life has found good ground. Some few weeks ago a sister, who lived about eight miles away and who had not been to our services much of late, died. We buried her baby last fall. When she became seriously ill, a couple of doctors were called for consultation. Their decision was that she would soon die. One of the doctors, a Christian man, asked her if she wanted a preacher to pray for her. Her reply was, "No, I am all right; I do not need to have them pray for me now." Later we visited her, and found her suffering terribly, but trustful, her only request being that the Lord would end her sufferings one way or the other. Later, when within a few minutes of death, her mother asked her: "Elizabeth, are you afraid to die?" Her emphatic reply was, "No! No, I am not afraid to die." Then, just later, just before she drew her last breath her last statement was, "Now I am going home to be with my baby." I have read of and have experienced some death bed scenes before, but never any clearer, nor more emphatic than the testimony given by this member of the Brethren church at Lost Creek. After all, even in the face of discouragements at times, it makes us feel that to have been the means of helping a soul like that is worth while.

Mrs. Drushal's work on Sunday afternoons with the children seem to be continually taking on new life; more are coming and coming from families that have heretofore held aloof, and the interest of the children is growing. A pleasing incident happened recently. They had been taking no offerings in their services, as the children were all so small. One Sunday afternoon, one of the children asked why they did not take an offering. Another spoke up and said that they had been expecting it, and one of them had some pennies along. We were pleased to see this manifestation of service. It is the certain evidence that giving has been taught here at Riverside, else these children would not have asked for the pleasure. If it is hard for the older ones to see the joy of giving, we thank God that the younger ones are seeing it, and that is sure to bear fruit in due time. Needless to say, the offerings were taken, and last Sunday the first opening of the box for one month, was had, and it contained $1.67. Different things were proposed as to its disposition but the one that appealed to the children most, was to keep it as a starter for a new church building, or rather a church house here at Riverside.

Another school year has begun with an entirely new corps of workers; this makes it harder on those who have now labored these years for our Lord in this place. But we are so thankful that it is not as hard as it might have been, for our new teachers and matron, are taking hold of things in a way that lightens our labors, and presages greater things for Riverside. We thank God for this. Sister Hooks from Mosgrove, Pennsylvania, was the first to arrive. Then followed the three from California, Mrs. Woodmansee, and her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Pearce. Sister Hooks is a member of the Mosgrove church, and we hear the scholars saying, "Isn't Miss Hooks a fine teacher?" That's enough. Brother Pearce was taken into the Brethren church at Montreal, Canada, in the Mission there, when it was led by Brother Sands. To know him makes one feel that the mission was not a failure. Mrs. Woodmansee and her daughter came from New York state. They united with the Brethren church at Los Angeles, some time before coming to Kentucky. They had been in the Bible Institute of Los Angeles. We believe that the church has in these people most excellent workers. They are talented, and capable, and their only desire seems to be to honor and glorify him who died for us.

But one of the best things yet remains to report. Your child here has outgrown its clothes. We are "full up," or practically so. Dormitories are full, school rooms overtaxed right here at the beginning of the school year. We never had such a turnout before, and it means just one of two things. That we must either provide larger clothes for the child, or the other alternative is, let it suffer. Heretofore the cry has been, furnish the workers, and the money will be found. We have the workers, and the opportunity; will the money be found to provide for the larger demands? God certainly is able. Will we let him have the chance? We need first, a better lighting system or, a lighting system. This is needed just as soon as possible. The evidence of its need accumulates constantly. Then we need more room for those who want to board at Riverside, and we also need more room for recitation purposes. As new points are opened, they are being opened and must continue to be opened, the need of Riverside looms larger and larger. We are praying in faith believing that God will raise up the necessary funds to meet the very urgent needs at Riverside. Will you pray with us for this? and all the work of our brotherhood?

G. E. DRUSHAL.

WAYNESBORO

No report from Waynesboro has appeared in the Evangelist for some time but the work has been moving along very smoothly. Early in the spring we had a successful evangelistic meeting under the leadership of Brother Morton L. Sands, which has already been reported. The impetus given the work helped to make possible a continued increase in attendance at church and Sunday school services. Steps have been taken to equip the Sunday school for better work. Through the efforts of Brother J. H. Gehr two rooms have been partitioned off in the basement, which, when completed will provide nicely for two of the largest classes in the school, relieving the crowded condition of the main room.

There is also a movement on foot to recarpet the church and to decorate its walls. When these improvements are completed our church will present a more attractive and inviting appearance.

The church has responded quite loyally to the appeals of the Four Year Program. All of the financial goals have been met save one and it will be met before the end of the year just as it has in other years. The attendance at our last communion exceeded the required three-fourths of the membership and was the largest attendance at communion since the organization of the church.

The auxiliaries are doing good work. The S. S. C. E. expects to be able to claim a banner again this year. In the Christian Endeavor, a small but loyal band of Endeavorers are faithful in the work of their society.

October first will complete ten years of the present pastorate. Those ten years have been blessed with the most cordial relations between pastor and people and by an encouraging growth in membership and in the equipment for the work. The kindness shown the pastor and his family and the consideration for their welfare ever manifest has been such as to knit our hearts together in ties not easily broken. However, the conviction has been growing in the mind of the pastor that ten years is long enough for one pastorate and that a change of pastors would be best for the work here and that a change of pastorates would enable him to do better work. Accordingly I have resigned the pastorate the resignation to take effect October first.

For four weeks I have been absent from the work on the saddest mission that ever took me back to the old home near South Bend, Indiana, where I was called by the death of my father June 21. Father had lived four years beyond the allotted three score and ten and he and mother had been granted nearly fifty years of happy wedded life together. He was ready to go home and did not shrink from the death angel that came to relieve his suffering. After the last sad rites were over and we had heeded as best we could the comforting funeral message by Brother Rench, we returned to the old home and to the sad task of breaking up that old home which to mother had been home for over 66 years. After the personal property had been sold at public sale and such keepsakes and articles that we could not bear to part with had been packed for shipment, we locked the old front door and before we sped away in the waiting auto we turned to take a lingering look at the old familiar scenes of childhood's play and of farm work with father in those days before I left home to take my first charge 21 years ago. I say "we" for mother was going with me and she was leaving the home where she had spent her childhood, where she had raised her children, and where she had toiled a half century with her faithful husband who has now entered into his rest. We are now back in my home and mother bravely says that she is going to be contented and like it in her new home with us. M. A. WITTER.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

BREWER-FRALING—At the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Chas. Dewart, 2847, Denver, Indiana, on Wednesday evening, June 25th, Don C. Brewer of Peru, Indiana, and Laura M. Fraling of Twelve Mile, Indiana, were united in marriage, the ceremony being witnessed by a large number of relatives and friends. Ceremony by the writer.

GEO. W. KINZIE.

YINGLING-MENTZER—At the First Brethren church of Waynesboro, on June 7, 1919, Paul G. Yingling and Margaret L. Mentzer were united in marriage by the writer in the presence of a few of their closest relatives. Both are members of this church and their many friends wish them every blessing in their wedded life together.

M. A. WITTER.

IN THE SHADOW

RONK—David William Ronk was born in Putnam county, Indiana, May 23, 1847, the son of Samuel Ronk and wife. When 9 years old his parents moved to Iowa, living in Marion and Monroe counties until their death. He was married in 1874 to Susan Elizabeth Teller. Eight children were born. They are: Mrs. Daisy Johnson, Turlock, California; Henry R. Modesto, California; George T., Leon, Iowa; Albert T., Warsaw, Indiana; Herbert J. Ripon, California; Willis E. Roann, Indiana; Mrs. Mary Schmidt, Manteca, California; Kenneth Turlock, California. He was one of twelve children, three of whom still survive. Miss Ann Ronk, Marshalltown, Iowa; Frank M. Ronk, Des Moines, Iowa; Columbus Ronk, Abia, Iowa. There remain fifteen grandchildren and a host of other relatives and friends. His wife died July 18, 1917.

The deceased moved to California with his family in 1887, settling at Turlock. He was one of the organizers of the Turlock Brethren church of which he was ordained an elder. He assisted in guiding the church through her early and pastorless days by his good counsel and exhortation. His ministry was limited to teaching and exhortation as he held that the pulpit should be filled by those who were better equipped. He assisted in launching the Berryessa Brethren church, moving later to Lathrop and still later to the mission church at Ripon where he had his last home. Less than two months ago he laid the foundation for another Brethren church at Abia, Iowa. One of the last letters he wrote was filled with enthusiasm for this new Brethren project. He was first and last a teaching pioneer of the church. Four of his sons are in the ministry of the Brethren church, three in the active ministry and the fourth a theological student.

The deceased lived an exemplary and active Christian life for 44 years and was loved and respected by all who knew him in the work of the church. He had the satisfaction of seeing all his children unite with the church. After a long life well spent he fell asleep at the home of his son at Warsaw, Indiana, on Sunday morning, July 27th, 1919, aged 72 years and 2 months.

A funeral service was held at Warsaw in the home of his son, where the deceased in his last illness was ministered to by the children who could be present. The service was conducted by the writer. The body was taken to California accompanied by the son, Willis E. a second service and the burial taking place at Turlock on Sunday, August 3rd.

G. C. CARPENTER.

ROUGH—Joanna Sellers was born in Seneca county, Ohio, March 15, 1856, and fell asleep in Jesus early Sunday morning, July 13, 1919, at the age of 63 years, 3 months and 28 days. While yet a child she, with her parents, William and Elizabeth Sellers, came to Indiana. On December 8, 1881, she was united in marriage to E. F. Rouch, at Warsaw, Indiana. About four years later they moved to Lapaz, Indiana, where they lived happily together until about five years ago, when her husband departed this life very suddenly as a result of heart failure.

GO FORWARD

That is what the Children of Israel were told to do many centuries ago, and we have never found the place where God has countermanded those orders to his children. The children of God must go forward or forfeit their right to his care and protection.

The Brethren church must go forward or cease to call itself a whole gospel church. The gospel is a forward moving force and to get its benefits we must constantly go forward. The goals of the Four Year Program demand this going forward, and we are glad to be able to report again that the Evangelist is going forward toward its goal. This week we add another church to the HONOR ROLL, and this comes from a pastor who has already seen three of the churches under his care reach this goal. George T. Ronk, who has been doing pioneer work in and around Leon, Iowa has laid good foundations for the work. White Chapel, Missouri; Crown Chapel, Iowa; Leon, Iowa have all been on the HONOR ROLL for some time and now the fourth congregation, Union Chapel, has achieved like success. This list of names was sent in by Sister Ronk, but we take it that she and Brother Ronk are ONE so it matters little to whom we give the credit. But for one pastor and wife to bring four churches over the top with Evangelist subscriptions in one year is an achievement worthy of special mention. We thank you Brother and Sister Ronk, may your tribe increase.

WATCH THIS COLUMN—Unless we are badly misinformed the natives will have to sit up and take notice of an announcement we will be able to make within a week or two. It is slow coming, but it is worth waiting for.

R. R. TEETER,
Business Manager.

With her husband, she united with the Brethren church at Lapaz, about the year 1890, and remained a loyal and consistent member until the death angel came and took her away as suddenly as Brother Rouch had gone, the only daughter remaining at home finding, upon arising in the morning, that her spirit had taken flight some time previously. May the God of all grace comfort the bereaved family. Services conducted by the writer.

GEO. W. KINZIE.

HOOVER—Jefferson, son of Jacob and Sallie Hoover, was born November 3rd, 1886, near Hagerstown, Indiana, and died July 26, 1919, aged 33 years, 3 months and 23 days.

On December 25th, 1886, he was married to F. B. Smith, who departed this life March 15th, 1902. Since that time the husband has lived in Oakville, alone most of the time. He was a man of few words, honest in business, and a good citizen.

Funeral services were held at the Church of the Brethren near Hagerstown, Indiana, and burial was made there by the remains of his wife. Our brother, L. W. Teeter, assisted us with the service. Text: 2 Corinthians 4:18.

W. R. DEETER.

VARNER—Carrie A., youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Connell, of the North Georgetown, Ohio, congregation, was born of her flesh May 1, 1888, and was born to the Spirit at twelve years of age. She was translated to see her Lord March 21, 1919 in the thirty-first year of her age. She was married to Carl P. Varner, June 12, 1907, to which union three daughters were born. Sister Varner was a victim of the dread influenza, and lived but a few days after being stricken. She leaves the husband, three daughters, rather, mother, two brothers and one sister to sorrow at her early demise. Besides the large circle of neighbors and friends. Funeral services from the family home at Alliance, Ohio, conducted by Rev. Moore of the Disciple church.

Hopes for the Coming General Conference

Our Hopes for the Coming General Conference or the Pulse of the Average member as to what the Conference should mean.

The coming conference of the Brethren church at Winona Lake, Indiana, gives promise of being different from preceding conferences in that the spirit of consideration will prevail among the brethren. Each man will have consideration for the feelings and toleration for the convictions of others, while at the same time being true to his own convictions. Every speaker, in presenting his message, will seek to display the spirit of Christian love; he will not seek to send words like daggers out in the audience, but like the gentle rain from heaven bringing blessing and received with joy. Every speaker, while giving his message to conference with emphasis, power and holy passion, will at the same time temper his enthusiasm with wisdom and, looking upon every member of that conference as his brother or sister, will seek to manifest such a spirit and speak such words as will be fitting to such a relationship. There have been messages prepared and delivered as a bomb-thrower prepares and hurls his deadly instrument, and they have resulted in explosions which stampeded entire conferences. There have been efforts to compel conformity of opinion in certain matters not thought to be essential that have resulted in causing a spirit of animosity to pervade the assembly and setting brother against brother with unyielding determination. These things shall not be so this year. Things will be different in every way. Bitter, insinuating, keen-edged words will not be spoken and divisive moves will not be launched. Anything in the past that has been unpleasant will not be resurrected; the memory of such is sufficient to cause us to be temperate in speech, wise and tolerant.

This conference shall be one of great and inspiring addresses. Every speaker will come with a message over which his heart has been praying and his mind has been laboring until he is able to discern God's truth and God finds it possible to speak through him to his people. No one will presume to come to conference unprepared, uninspired, unenthused and attempt to direct men's thoughts in things divine. Over long distances many delegates will come, and whether form far or near, the time of all is valuable and they will be there for a purpose. They will not be disappointed but will be rewarded for their coming by stirring music, rousing addresses and spiritual sermons. They will carry home with them new ideas and suggestions, new enthusiasm and inspiration, new encouragement and strength and will impart to their fellow-workers in the home churches much of the profit they have received. From such a conference delegates will return home as from a transfiguration scene, loath to leave, for they will say, "It is good for us to be here."

This conference will be one of great vision and far-sighted planning; from this point of view especially it will excel all previous conferences. "Their people perish for lack of vision" and this must not be said of the Brethren church. There is nothing more sorely needed today than a great vision. The boundary of our interests have been too narrow. It has been hard for us to see out and beyond our past endeavors and plans. The work of the kingdom of God has been growing more varied, more taxing, more urgent and more challenging and we have been slow in catching a glimpse of its compass and urgency. This conference must, and doubtless it will, give the people a vision such as they have not received before of the possibilities and demands facing the church of Christ today, this it must do or fail. The church of the present that will be satisfied with the plans and endeavors of the past, however noble they were for the church of the past has no future, and if it continues in its self-satisfaction its own bell will soon be tolling its death. These times are exacting of every institution that would be their servant. The church, less than any other institution, can afford to "mark time" and fret itself over childish plans. Set to do the greatest work in the world it must be able to see something of the bigness of its task, plan with the far-seeing eye of a true statesman and set itself with all the strength and vigor of an athlete to execute its plans. It will require a vision and wise planning of which we are capable to enable the church to take her rightful place as God's agent for remaking and regenerating the world in an hour when the souls of men were never more disturbed and sick of sin nor when the panaceas for the world's ills were never more numerous and loudly promising,—this it needs, together with all the strength and perseverance that Divinity is able to impart.

"To serve the present age, my calling to fulfill, O may I all my powers engage to do my Master's will."

With such vision and plans and determination to work our plans, as will enable us to serve our present age best and make us most effective in bringing in the kingdom of God, our coming General Conference must, and under God will, send forth every delegate. In this let us have confidence and to this end let us pray and go.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. Miller, president of the Foreign Missionary Society, calls for a meeting at Winona Lake, on Tuesday afternoon of conference week.

All prospective students of the Seminary should not fail to notice the announcement of the Dean of the Seminary concerning entrance requirements.

Our correspondent from the Oak Hill, Virginia congregation sends us a short but interesting letter stating that the Sunday school and prayer meeting are holding up well. Brethren Day was observed by an interesting program, the principal feature of which was a sermon by Brother A. B. Duncan.

Dr. J. Allen Miller arrived home last week from his western trip and reports a most pleasant time among the Pacific coast churches. He says the Long Beach and the Spokane Bible Conferences were great successes. He found the people everywhere warm-hearted and loyally Brethren.

The Indiana Conference program is contained in this issue and will be studied with interest by all, especially by the Brethren of the Hoosier state. It is a good program and is gotten out in good time, giving those assigned parts plenty of time to prepare. It's a good precedent for the other district conferences.

Dr. J. Allen Miller preached in the Ashland Brethren pulpit on Sunday morning. Dr. R. R. Teeter who had been secured to fill the pulpit became sick during Sunday school and just before time to go into the pulpit found that he would be unable to preach. Dr. Miller had a very strong sermon "up his sleeve" and met the emergency in a splendid way.

The Inn will be headquarters this year same as heretofore, and the rates are certainly all that could be asked for. They are $9.00 per week two in a room for board and room. Children who occupy the same room as their parents will get through on a "five dollar bill" per week. Every one who can possibly get away from home from September 1 to 8 should not fail to attend General Conference.

Brother Teeter just received a post card from Beulah, Michigan, addressed to "Brethren Publishing Co., Ashland, Ohio," but the message side of the card was blank, not even a name was signed and he says he finds it a little difficult to comply with the request. If whoever intended a message to the Business Manager will note the mistake and write him he will be glad to serve you.

Another report of White Gift offerings is found in this paper. It should have appeared sooner but was mislaid and so is two weeks late. Brother Trent has been very patient with us this year and another year we will all doubtless be more prompt. But we have had reason for tardiness in taking some of our offerings this year, and our churches that were hindered from taking their offering at the time set, are to be commended for their determination to do their share even though they must be late.

Brother A. P. Reed is very regular in his reports of the work of First church of Los Angeles, of which Brother N. W. Jennings is pastor. Our readers would appreciate it if more correspondents were as regular. Various evidences of growth are observed in the report of this work. The Easter offering was generous, the new church project is going forward and souls are being born into the kingdom. This church is justly proud of the fact that they were able to supply three new missionaries for Lost Creek. We notice Dean Miller has been in that congregation, and of course his services were greatly appreciated.

We wish to thank our Lathrop, California, correspondent, Sister Reynolds, and the good people for whom she writes for the kind words regarding the Evangelist. We look upon the whole brotherhood as our parish and we are sincerely seeking to be helpful to all. With every paper goes a prayer for God's blessing on its mission. The Lathrop people are loyal folks. They were loyal to Brother Platt during his successful pastorate and are now giving loyal support to Brother Leatherman in his faithful leadership. A very sure evidence of growth is the fact that a number of new members are being added to the church.

It has been a long time since we have heard from Highland, Pennsylvania, but since Brother Thomas F. Howell is on the job as pastor we are expecting to hear from that place more frequently. He writes of his trip from Michigan through Ohio and the mountains, coal and foreigners of Pennsylvania to his destination. He got immediately to work after he arrived and finds the people steadfast and truly "progressive." The reception that was given him in his own home was doubtless greatly appreciated and left his larder well filled. He reports a number of special events which were successful and show that the church is taking on new life.

President Jacob's "College Notes" this week contain some important announcements. Miss Amy Putterbaugh who taught voice last year but whose picture has never been run in the Evangelist is presented to our large family of readers. Mr. R. R. Haun, the new head of the exact sciences, receives commendation. A teacher of elocution and physical culture for women has been secured in the person of Miss Dora Zimmerman, a graduate of Dr. King's School of Oratory. This is one of the important departments of the college from the standpoint of the prospective minister. Every man ought to take work in this department before he graduates from the Seminary. It is hoped that this may prove a strong and helpful department.

Brother S. E. Christiansen, pastor of the Columbus mission writes of the progress of the work at that place during the past year and the progress has been very commendable. However he is not satisfied with what has been accomplished, but is making plans for still larger things in the coming year. May the praying people of the Brotherhood heed his request for prayer. You can support our missions with your prayers as well as with your money.

Prof. J. A. Garber is home from the Miami Valley Life Work Conference held at Gratis, Ohio, from Friday to Sunday, August 15 to 17 inclusive. He reports that the interest was good and the people were pleased with the experiment sufficiently to plan for its continuance next year. We hope to hear more about it.

Brother Beachler reports his pleasant visit to the Michigan churches in the interest of College endowment. He found the people responsive to a commendable degree, especially did the Campbell church give generously considering conditions. The results of faithful work by the present pastor and his predecessor were seen. The Campbell church got in on the Benevolence offering and the Easter offering in a splendid way and now she has gotten in on college endowment. This new and larger interest speaks well for the future of the Campbell work. As for the endowment campaign, the progress made to date is certainly cause for rejoicing to every lover of Ashland College. We did not realize the power and willingness of our people when we set out on our campaign and we set our goal too low, but now that they are doing far above that which we thought to ask, we are all with one accord raising the goal more nearly to what is a worthy estimate of Brethren ability and willingness. The new goal, $200,000, is not one whit too high and with the co-operation that he should have, Brother Beachler will surely raise the entire amount. A great work has been done and we can go to conference with a feeling of satisfaction with the past and a confidence as to the outcome of the future.

Conference Rates Pointers

Inquire immediately if your local ticket agent has certificates for sale to Brethren General Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana.

If your town is small and your agent has no certificates, get in touch with the nearest station that keeps them.

When the day comes for you to make the trip, be at the station at least 30 minutes before train time to be sure that the agent has time to make out your certificate (This is important).

If you live in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington or Wyoming 23 and 29; if you live in any other state you may purchase certificates as early as August 28 and not later than September 3.

You must pay full fare on the going trip.

When you reach Winona Lake, get your certificate endorsed immediately by J. A. Garber, secretary of the executive committee.

On September 5 and 6 there will be a railroad representative at Winona Lake; be sure that you get your certificate endorsed by him at that time.

You cannot return home on one-third fare before your ticket is endorsed by the railroad's special representative on the 5th or 6th of September.

If 250 full fare certificates were purchased to Winona Lake for the purpose of attending Conference, none of which certificates cost less than 75 cents, you may purchase a return ticket for one-third the regular fare.

Your certificate is not transferable.

You must return home by the same route that you went.

You must leave for home not later than September 11.

The one-third fare home is dependent upon there being 250 full fare going certificates sold. We can make that number if we all cooperate. If at all possible to go by railroad do so, if not too inconvenient, even though other means of travel are open to you. That will be practicing the Golden Rule in this matter.

(Keep these "pointers" for future reference).

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Education of the American Youth. By L. L. Garber, Litt. D.

"But I count the gray barbarian lower than the Christian child."—Tennyson.

The educational demands of this age differ from those of any other. As civilization grows in complexity, education becomes more necessary and more important. As man rises above barbarism, the years of childhood are prolonged, the plasticity of the brain is less evanescent, and the possibility and opportunity for effective education are largely increased. The education of the American youth thus offers a greater opportunity and is of more vital significance to civilization, to Christianity, and to the progress of the world than that of any other time or people.

The Christian American will be the most potent factor in the world of tomorrow. America is wealthy, opulent. She is wealthy beyond the dreams of the past or the understanding of the present; and her wealth is increasing at an unprecedented rate. What she shall do with these uncounted billions will be determined by the educational forces of society and the church. Education, religious and secular, will determine whether she shall use this unparalleled wealth in furthering Christian ideals or in lazy luxury and frivolous delights, and in vain glory and bizarre extravagances, so that some future poet pondering over her sad and tragic history will write again,

"Lo, all her pomp of yesterday are one with Nineveh and Tyre."

America has vast possibilities. Great as are the material forces already in her hands and now developing under the direction of her inventors and scientists, large as is now her dominion over Nature, bountiful and superlative as are the products of her millions of acres of almost virgin soil, these are but a promise of what she may yet develop and create under the inspiration and direction of proper education.

In leadership, America commands the world. To be a Christian American never before meant so much as it means today. We were never before so well known, so deeply respected, so fondly loved, so wisely hated. We are the cynosure of the world's eyes. We stand upon the vantage ground of compelling opportunity. The grim wheels of time have turned us the golden niche. We carry the torch of civilization. "Quo Vadis?" Whither do we lead? This too, is determined by our education.

As respects human affairs, the creating of educated Christian American citizens is the most important and significant task that can engage the attention of an individual or organization. Let the church take notice, and parents and teachers be advised.

As leaders in the world's affairs, every American boy and girl, too, should be educated in a Christian high school and college. Women as well as men are voters, legislators, and sovereigns of the destinies of humanity. They too feel the great forward impulse toward a larger freedom from the bondage of ignorance, militarism, and autocracy, and toward a larger "freedom under God." They too, sense a vision of a world-wide brotherhood and the coming of an international state. The world is becoming one great family. As a matter of intellectual isolation, distance is not, and there is no more sea. The thoughts, sentiments, and ideals of every child make and concern every other. That the German child was steeped in the militaristic spirit and trained to fight and hate was a matter of deep universal concern but the world heeded it lightly. That three-fourths of Russia's one hundred and seventy millions were submerged and held in bondage, illiteracy and ignorance, while her wealth was squandered by a military autocracy, was our concern, but we passed by unheeding. Whether China and Japan develop a commercial-materialistic civilization or a Christian-idealistic one is our deep concern. Will the church take notice? The world is just emerging from a great war, the outcome of ignorance and vicious education, a very debacle of death and destruction, which swallowed up in its vortex millions of innocent children and of the flower of young manhood, and the accumulated wealth of uncounted millions of years of toil. Whether the nations engaged in this war shall again break up into mutually hostile and selfish sovereign powers or be organized into a world democracy in which "The common sense of most shall hold a fretful realm in awe

And the kindly earth shall slumber lapt in universal law," is of tremendous concern to us.

We, a people pregnant with power and possibility, face mighty movements. With wisdom, confidence, and Christian idealism, it will be ours to transform the earth. The opportunity of the centuries is upon us. The great questions now challenging us demand the largest preparation and clearest thinking of educated Christian citizens. Our democracy demands an educated citizenship. Democracy cannot prosper on barbarism, ignorance or irreligion. If our democracy is to be a light to the world, if it is to progress and lead, it must be made safe and illuminating through Christian education which embodies the spirit and gospel of the Great Idealist, the Christ.

As believers in democracy, we must provide for every youth a fairly complete education. The welfare of both the democracy and of the child demand this. We must not endanger democracy by half or perverted education nor defraud the child of his twentieth century heritage. In the last analysis, in its deepest meaning, democracy means equality of opportunity. But there can be no equality of opportunity without equality of education. Millions of Negroes, Chinese, Russians "who have never stood upon the vantage of truth," or garnered from the rich fields of literature, history, and science, or read the "sweet story of old" from the printed page, have had no equality of opportunity in life. Somewhat better but much like this is the lot of many American youth whose education is comprised and encompassed in a scrappy six or eight years. They too are denied their rightful heritage of appreciation, opportunity and power. Such meager training in this great wisdom-loving century is neither prudent, democratic, nor Christian. These youth are handicapped for life. They have not the education that makes them "at home in all lands and all ages, that puts the keys of the world's libraries in their pockets, and its resources behind them in whatever they undertake; that makes them friends among the leaders in all walks of life; that frees their generous enthusiasm in cooperation with others in the common good of all. To these are likewise denied the possibility and opportunity for that large and efficient Christian service which is a blessing to the world and a satisfaction to him who gives it.

The father and mother of American youth, who believe in Christianity or the gospel of equal opportunity will see that their sons and daughters are generously educated in a Christian college where sentiments and ideals that give power and meaning to life are part and parcel of their equipment for right living in this democratic age.

It is necessary to learn to say "I will!" and do it, and to say "I will not!" and leave it undone. Never must the necessary task be left undone for reasons of personal dislike. A learned psychologist advises people to do every day something that is not wholly agreeable for the sake of strengthening the will.—Youth's Companion.

The Art of Courtesy. By Dyoll Belote

The prevalence of the spirit of discourtesy has become a matter for real concern with people who wish to be classed as refined and worthy of respect. Time was when an elderly person received respectful consideration from the younger folks, and any little kindness the youth could show to the aged was deemed a duty to be performed.

Courtesy is consideration, inbred good breeding, courtliness. It should be noted however that it is a matter of habitual exercise. The following story very aptly illustrates the spirit of real courtesy. A little boy was given permission to spend three or four days in the home of a friend in a town a few miles distant from his own home. He returned from the visit filled with boyish enthusiasm and delight. He could talk of little else but the pleasures of his visit. At the table in the evening he revealed some of the cause of his enthusiasm:

"Harry's folks didn't have any better things to eat than we have, but they didn't do as we do at the table."

"Didn't they?"

"No, mamma: they were just as polite to each other as if they were all company. It seemed kind o' queer. They'd say 'Please' and 'Thank you' just to each other. Wasn't that funny?"

"It was right," said the mother, with a blush, as she remembered her own indifference to these forms of politeness at her own table.

"And they said 'Good morning' and 'Good night' to each other, and 'I beg your pardon' and 'Excuse me' and 'Thank you, dear,' and Harry would get up and open the door for his mother or grandmother if they were going to leave the room. And nobody was cross once all the time I was there!"

And part of the blame for such discourtesy is to be laid at the door of parents. A venerable veteran of the Civil war, who is also slightly lame, was crossing the veranda of a hotel when some boys, racing and shouting, ran against him and threw him violently to one side. He staggered to his feet and said gently:

"You should be more careful, boys."

"Oh," replied one of the boys, "when people get too old to keep out of the way, they ought to leave the hotel."

The mother of the boy, who happened to be sitting near, listened, smiling, to the answer, and then remarked to a friend, "Jack is so bright; he always has a retort ready."

Instead of laughing at the impudent retort of that boy the mother should have compelled him to apologize to the aged veteran, and seen to it that he learned to think of the aged and infirm always.

Some years since the following incident occurred at a summer resort in Virginia. The place was visited by the Chinese minister and his suite. The minister bore himself with the dignity and reserve befitting his rank and office.

While sitting under the trees one day a young American contrived to tie the queue of the minister to the tassel of a lady's parasol. When the young lady arose she jerked the minister's head violently. Her apologies were profuse and sincere, and were received with gentleness and courtesy by the minister. The young man tittered in the background. The minister and his attendants left the hotel that day. More trifling insults to the representatives of other governments have caused international alienations, and sometimes wars.

The insulted representative came from a great nation in which reverence for age and courtesy are enforced as absolute rules. They are a heathen people, and we profess to represent Christian civilization.

Springfield, Massachusetts, has started a "Courtesy Campaign," perhaps one of the most unusual campaigns ever attempted by a city. Perhaps there is a certain measure of mercenary motive in the undertaking, but it will pay from that standpoint as well as make the community life and home life and social life of that city finer and more attractive.

To me one lacks considerable of comprehending the real genius of Christianity, who claims to be a Christian and still can be discourteous to others. Frequently one sees illustrations of the spirit of discourtesy when traveling. The instincts of true gentlemanliness or ladylikeness are somewhat lacking in folks who can and do sit in a car or train while those older, or mothers with babes, or infirm people stand during transit. Nothing more quickly gains a boy or girl favor in the sight of respectable, influential people than the habitual exercise of the grace of courtesy.

There is no sweeter, more attractive grace than this. We seldom find friction, jarring, crossness, in the homes in which courtesy is regularly exercised. No flower sends forth more sweetness into the world. And the homes in which it has no abiding place are lacking in what constitutes one of the sweetest elements of home life. Let us cultivate with tenderest care for this sweet grace of courtesy.

General Conference Once More

By J. A. Garber, Secretary Executive Committee

Since the Railroad Administration has granted the courtesy of one and one-third fare on account of our General Conference every effort should be put forth to secure the required minimum number of two hundred fifty tickets exclusive of half fare tickets. Particular responsibility for this achievement rests with the directors of Goal 16 in the Four Year Program. Pastors should take seriously their appeal and make a persistent effort to have a full quota of delegates from the churches.

An Appeal to Laymen

A little study of the summarized report of the delegates attending the last conference will convince anyone of the relatively small number of laymen serving as delegates. Out of a total number of 269 delegates 85 were ministers. Judging from these figures it would be quite easy for them to exercise the balance of power and to effect decisions favoring themselves, if they were so disposed. The surest way to avert this peril, if it may be so regarded, is to increase largely the lay delegation. Ample provision has been made for lay representation, and the ministers without exception, we believe, earnestly desire the presence and assistance of their brethren engaged in business and the professions. Such men can contribute to the conference a fund of business and professional experience that will give balance and practicability to all our deliberations. Other churches are enjoying the substantial aid of their talented and experienced laymen in their councils, why should not we? Are Brethren laymen less loyal? We believe not.

Concerning the Reduced Fares

We feel that the reduced fare will be of particular advantage to our lay people and trust that all will co-operate in securing the two hundred and fifty ticket purchases. We will be greatly helped if some from nearby points who otherwise would come via, of interurban or automobile, will travel this year by railroad, even though they may be slightly inconvenienced. This brotherly consideration will assist others coming greater distances in securing the advantage of the reduced fare. Every ticket of and above the amount of seventy-five cents counts. Let the Brethren of Indiana and Ohio remember this. In purchasing your ticket be sure to request a certificate. If you expect to leave from a small station it may be well to make inquiries several days in advance of time of departure, and, you should be at the station at least 30 minutes before departure of train. You will be required to pay the normal one-way fare for the going journey. Immediately on arrival at Winona, you will present your certificate to the secretary of the Executive Committee for endorsement. Later, on September 5 and 6, it will be validated by the special agent of the railroad. Then you will be able to purchase a return ticket for one-third of the regular fare from Winona to the point from which your certificate was issued. Tickets with certificate may be secured from August 28th to September 3rd, inclusive. Pastors and church officers who read these instructions are asked to pass them on to their people. Now let everybody pull together in this effort for the good of all. Some can afford to leave the automobile at home this year for the benefit of those who may not be the fortunate possessors of machines.

Be sure to ask for a ticket on the certificate plan on account of the General Conference of the Brethren Church at Winona Lake, Indiana, September 1st to 8th, 1919.

Entertainment Rates

A letter just received from Mrs. O. F. George, manager of "The Inn," says, "My rates will be $9.00 per week two in a room for room and board. If children under six years occupy the same room with parents the rates for them will be $5.00." These rates are as low as any one could expect and no one need stay away from Winona on account of exorbitant prices. May every church co-operate.

Religious Education and Democracy. By L. Garvin Smith, M. A., B. D.

Now, since education is the chief agency for establishing and perpetuating democracy, there must be the right kind of education, or else the democracy of this world will never become the democracy of God. Education is both growth and development. It is not something done for the child, but something the child does for itself under proper leadership. It does not mean to educate or draw out positive activities, as some outworn educational doctrines would have it. Education may be defined as an individual process of physical, mental, social, moral, spiritual and religious development unto the fullness of one's own powers for efficient control of will and conduct, functioning in efficient mental, social, moral and religious adjustments. If this be the true conception of education, and it is, so far as modern students of education are concerned, then it is essential that the future citizens of democracy shall be placed in an environment that will awaken and stimulate their unfolding and development so that they will be able efficiently to adjust themselves, not only to their social and intellectual environment, but also to a proper religious environment; that is to the moral character of God as revealed through Jesus.

Fellowship with God is the true environment of man, and he can realize his true environment only by intellectual, social, moral, spiritual and religious processes. The agency most concerned with the proper functioning of these processes is the church, and the church may bring about an efficient functioning of these processes through what is technically called religious education. It is evident, therefore, that the church has a task of no small magnitude to perform. That the educational work of the church is both large and important, all modern students of education and religion agree. So prominent an authority in the field of religious education as Prof. Walter S. Athearn recently said, "New sciences, new psychology, new sociology, new wealth, new forms of amusement, are decreasing interest in religious training. We are fast drifting into a cultured paganism. Unless the church takes immediate steps to stem the present tide of indifference, luxury, and commercial greed, this country will soon cease to be a Christian nation, if indeed, a country in which three out of four of its citizens are without active church relations can be said to be a Christian nation. . . . Sixty millions of our one hundred million citizens have no connection with any church. There are fifteen million children in this country who receive no religious guidance whatever. There are thirty-five millions over ten years of age outside the membership of any church. There are ten thousand small towns west of the Missouri river in which Christian preaching is rarely, or never, heard."

If the above statement is correct, then, if we are to have a true democracy, we must admit that religious education has a serious task to perform and the church has a vital and important mission to perform, especially in the educational work of the nation. Will the church of this day rise up and meet the opportunity that now presents itself and do its divinely appointed work? The answer to this question depends largely upon the decisions the church makes. The church sacrificed its mission in the fourth century to become an empire; in the sixteenth century the church set aside its divine mission to war on sects and creeds. What will it do in this century? The church will not succeed in this century, if it decides to spend its time and sap its vital energies quibbling over disputed questions of Biblical Criticism that can never be definitely settled to the satisfaction of all, and which in the past have caused wars, burned men at the stake and divided the forces of the church. The chief business of the church of today is, not to decide questions of Biblical Criticism, but to serve the purpose of God, to instruct in righteousness, to lead men to see and know God as revealed through the person and work of his only un-created Son, and to lead men to realize and achieve, in so far as is possible for human beings to do, the divine standards of life. The success of the church of today and tomorrow does not depend upon its position on such foolish and absurd questions as, "Who wrote the book of Genesis?" "Was there one Isaiah, or were there four?" "Are the Hebrew vowel points the result of an infallible and static inspiration?" "Do the reported sayings of Christ from the cross agree or no?" Or the question of the second coming of Christ. Such questions have no proper place in the modern church that aims to lead men to God and thereby to bring in the democracy of God. The success of the church depends upon how it meets the needs of life, upon the kind of men and women it produces, whether or not it regenerates the down-fallen into good, Christ-like men and women and conserves the boys and girls for the democracy of God. Permit me to give an illustration of what I am trying to say. Students of Comparative Religion agree that Mohammed was the greatest religious genius since the days of St. Paul. The boy Mohammed drove camels from his home to the ancient city of Bozrah. At Bozrah the camels were rested from two to three weeks in order to store up fat and water for the return journey. Bozrah contained both a Jewish synagogue and a Christian church. It is reported that the church spent most of its time arguing over questions of dogma and quarreling with the Jews of the synagogue. Young Mohammed had a passion for a better knowledge of things divine than his own people could give him. He attended, so it has been reported, both the church and the synagogue in Bozrah during his frequent visits to that city, to satisfy his passion for a better knowledge of God. What a great opportunity that church had, but it failed to feed the mind of Mohammed as it should have fed it, and he went away from that church with a distorted knowledge of God and the Christian religion. What a sad commentary on the religious life of that church, that it failed to capture the boy Mohammed for Christ and Christianity. What the world has missed because that church was not living up to its opportunity, when it failed to win the boy Mohammed for Christ, no one can exactly determine. He might have been a second Paul. What the Armenians, Greeks and Christian missionaries have had to suffer because that church failed to win Mo-hammered for Christ, every intelligent and well informed person knows.

Will the church of this century succeed? Yes, if it will go through the garden to the cross of Calvary and remain there long enough to learn the lesson of supreme sacrifice and service and then say, "Not my will, but thine, O God be done;" then into the rock-hewn tomb and bury there all non-essentials; and then come forth, like the divine Master and in the power of the divine Spirit go to work in this world of suffering, sorrow and sin, to open the eyes of the blind, to heal the sick, to feed the hungry, to bind up the broken-hearted, to raise the fallen; give strength to the weak, hope to the despairing, a new opportunity to those who have failed, the peace of God to the troubled, the means of salvation to those who repent, and establish such a religious, social and moral environment that all who so desire may come into the fellowship of God through the power of the divine Spirit.

If the democracy of this world is to become the democracy of God, the church must be the determining factor and active agent in the educational work of democracy. Very early in the career of the church, the leaders realized that teaching was to have a large place in the work of regenerating the world. John Mark, some scholars say, was entrusted, as he accompanied the apostles, with the instruction of the children. It is evident that much of the work of the disciples, like that of Jesus, was religious education. In fact, early Christian life was a schooling in the vital and important matters of religion. It was not so much of an intellectual character (at least not for the first centuries), but rather a training tendency toward moral growth and reformation. The aim of the early church was to reform society. To accomplish this aim, the church proceeded along two lines: (1) by elevating the moral standards of its own members, and (2) by setting before those outside the church high standards of moral conduct as ideals of life as objects worthy to emulate. The moral education of the church gave to the world of that day, based on the Mosaic Law and the Sermon on the Mount, was far in advance of anything the pagan and Jewish masses had seen until then. The unswerving purity of life upheld by the church for two and one-half centuries, enforcing new ideas and ideals of life, is one of the most remarkable phenomena of history. So thorough was this moral instruction, and such a hold did it take upon the people who received it, that many of them were ready to die rather than violate their new ideals of morality; and Roman history was made red by the blood of those who died because of their new moral conviction. This moral courage, born of a holy conviction, and stronger than life itself, not only became a leaven in Roman society, but has influenced society from that day until our own time. The educational work of the early church was a success.

Will the church of today succeed in its educational work? That depends largely upon the way in which the church interprets education and to what extent the educational forces of modern life are used. The function of any specific educational agency is to furnish those who are to be educated with the experiences of the race, and then give them such training that will enable them to interpret the experiences of the race in a way that will be profitable to them, and to adequately adjust their own experiences to the conditions of life about them. When the institution does this, it succeeds; when it does not, it fails. It is evident therefore, that the function of the church as an agency for educational development is to furnish its members, and those who may come under its influence, with the religious experiences of the race, together with such training that will enable those within the church to interpret correctly those experiences, and to interpret and adjust their own experiences to those of the race, in connection with the ultimate interests of like, in such a way that will give to things spiritual the greatest possible efficiency. Has the church done this? No, not to the extent that it could, and should have done it. Whether we are willing to believe it or not, in a large measure the church has failed to adjust its religious education to progressive life. The church has kept its great religious truths and experiences in terms of the past. In many respects the church is trying to furnish to a world that is hungry for the great, vital, living truths of the Christian religion, the dogma and experiences of the Middle Ages, interpreted in terms of an outworn philosophy and an antiquated science. Most of the dogmas inherited from the Middle Ages have lost their force; they have led to the decline of the church, and have made it static when it should be dynamic. If the church is not effective today, and we must admit that in certain quarters it is not, it is not because the church's message—the Gospel of Christ—is weak, but because the church has failed to clothe its message in thought adapted to meet the needs of our modern life, and because it has placed the emphasis upon things secondary rather than on things primary. The church ought to set before men the highest ideas and ideals of life and then influence men to accept these ideas and ideals of life by interpreting them in the light of modern experiences and intellectual achievement. But instead of doing this, instead of following the example of the greatest Teacher of life and religion the race has known, most of the church's educational activity is spent in an attempt to compel men to believe certain dogma, and to accept, in blind faith, asserted authority.

In the past the aim of the church has been to prepare men for heaven, not for life. This, it thought, could be accomplished only by arresting mental development, curbing and inhibiting free thought. Heaven, however, has all the inhabitants it now needs, or will need, until the organization of the "new heaven;" but the world needs men who are prepared to live in it, to serve in it. The so-called "old time religion" as it was practiced may be entirely satisfactory in monasteries and cloisters, but it does not meet the needs of our day. The religious interests which concern us today are not academic; they are real, living issues that must be met and controlled and so directed that society may be more efficiently served and the religious yearnings of the soul more adequately satisfied.

We now need a revival of church teaching, a revival of religious education; not one that will simply make men read their Bibles more, pray longer and more fervently; but one that will make men realize that God is truth, and that all truth comes from God, that all must square themselves with the truth of God, whether it comes through the faith of the saint or the laboratory of the scientist, and of the further fact that no one man has a monopoly on divine truth. We need a revival of religious education that will lead men to see that religion within the realm of belief is not sufficient; that religion must function not only in belief, but also in ethical living and practical serving.

Now, there was a time when the church controlled education, both in Europe and America. However, we are now confronted with the fact that the church has lost most of its former control of educational activities and institutions of learning. Nevertheless, the church must concern itself with modern scholarship: the church can no longer ignore modern scientific scholarship, for modern scholarship is a determining factor in the thought-life of today. It is expedient, therefore, to say the least, that the church should go hand in hand with the school to render society the most efficient service, to make human life more valuable and to co-ordinate all the religious, social and intellectual agencies that serve the interests of life. If the church will do this, it will follow the example of the world's greatest ethical and religious Teacher—the Supreme Educator of the race—incarnating his spirit and his life into modern scientific thought.

The church may become a cogent force in education, if it will modify and modernize its educational ideals and methods, and re-adjust its dogma to meet the needs of modern life. Science, education and religion should co-operate to acquaint man with God and to enable him to think God's thoughts after him, to realize God's purpose in the world,

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Seeing Greater Things. By W. M. Lyon

TEXT: Jesus answered and said unto him, Because I said unto thee, I saw thee under the fig tree believest thou? thou shalt see greater things than these.—JOHN 1:50.

God wants to do and will do, wonderful things for every true-hearted believer. In John one, fifty, we find a great lesson. Read it once more and from its light get a new vision, and a new picture of yourself. God wants us to see "greater things." And once having seen them in the light of the Spirit, we will be found doing them also. Surely it must be a very pleasing thing to God when he really finds men and women of the Nathanael type.

He is looking for men and women of that kind today. His eyes are running to and fro throughout the whole earth, searching for people of that class, if we are to believe Second Chronicles, sixteen, nine. And don't you believe, too, that Jesus is going to use just that kind of people when the time finally comes for rulership with him in the coming Kingdom? My heart leaps with gladness, too, at the thought that his all-seeing eyes never search in vain!

Yes, praise his dear name, we not only have the promise of seeing greater things, but of doing them also. The Holy Spirit leads into all truth every sincere and true-hearted seeker. One who is truly led of the Spirit is assured from the Christ himself of coming into the beautiful sunlight that streams forth from John fourteen, twelve.

Beloved, have you seen the "greater things" of the Spirit? If failure has been yours, there can be but one reason. O, how sad that many there are who have never caught the vision! Isaiah six, five is a stranger to many. No wonder so many churches are either dead or dying! Death always follows the absence or loss of vision. But when once we get a glimpse of Isaiah six, five we will soon realize the still more blessed experience of Isaiah thirty-three, seventeen.

Brethren, God really wants to do greater things for all of us, but he must first do for us, before he can do through us any of these greater things. Yes, I believe that he is exceedingly desirous that the Brethren church should share largely in the seeing and doing of the "greater things."

Just think of our claim, "a Whole Gospel for the Whole World!" And yet, too often, does it not mean that we stagger at mole hills when he would have us removing mountains? Let me put it all very plainly and in few words: Listen! Be willing, Nathanael-like to be a guileless, true-hearted believer, and let the channel in your life enlarge until it is big enough to let the whole gospel flow through you, and then see what happens! Ah, the greatest things will follow every time. God wants to do infinitely greater things for the Brethren church today. We seem to object to the deepening of the channel. It costs too much. We seem to be satisfied with a tiny rivulet, when, if he had his way an Amazon would find its way through us. That "great door and effectual" of First Corinthians sixteen, nine stands wide open before us today. True, we have the many adversaries also. Shall we enter the door regardless of the adversaries? Yes, most surely, if—that "if" must be reckoned with,—but that "if" soon gets out of the way, provided we really know the God of Philipians four, nineteen! Brethren, what shall the answer be?

But perhaps some of us have not been quiet before God so that he might have a chance to work. God surely must like an abundance of life, but he wants it divinely directed. Once upon a time I was trying to make a visit in a certain home. Two little boys spoiled the visit. On their account the call turned out to be a very short one indeed. It was one of the kind that made the poor mother glad twice. At any rate I am quite sure she was glad when I left, and she was not the only glad person. I had seen lively boys before, and I have seen them since, too, and it makes my heart glad to see them bubbling over with life, but these two little fellows were painfully full of life, so much so that twice during my short stay the mother took them back to the kitchen, and from the noise, I am inclined to think that perhaps the little fellows felt a slight pain while there. It must have been slight, for they almost beat their mother back to the front room where I was being entertained (?). Well, those two little fellows were so noisy and boisterous that I soon took pity on the mother and tried to find my way to the door and thus relieved both of us from the awful embarrassment. I paused a moment, however, in the vestibule, so as not to appear to leave rudely, only to find those two little boys busy trying to untie my shoes. And they tried successfully, too. They were surely experts in the business. I will let you imagine my thoughts while I tried to lace my shoes again after getting around the corner of the next street. But why tell all this? Listen! A lot of little people with big bodies act that way with God. Have you never seen actions of that kind? God really wants to pay them a visit; yes, more than that, he would come and abide, but they force him away; they never get quiet; he can never have a heart-to-heart talk with them. Talk about the "greater things"! Such people never learn even the A, B, C's of his presence. The greater things promised can not be ours until we open up the channel of Psalms forty-six, ten. We need, too, the quietness and confidence of Isaiah thirty, fifteen.

Let us also bear in mind that God is able to keep his ark, even though at times the way seems perilous. Why should we be so slow in learning the lesson of Second Samuel six, six? It takes a stronger hand than Uzzah's to keep the ark of God in rough places. Are we able to stand the final fire test of First Corinthians three? There are those who still think that zeal can take the place of knowledge. All of that class will eventually be permitted to witness a great fire. Wood, hay and stubble are easily consumed, when once the match is applied.

For my part I much prefer to have the fire here and now. Why should we not believe in the literal fulfillment of the words of the Baptist in Matthew three, eleven? Would there not be "greater things" in the Brethren church today if we were to interpret that literally as we do some other things? Can ours be a whole gospel if we pass lightly by this great doctrine? On the Day of Pentecost, Peter seemed to believe this to be very important according to Acts two, thirty-eight.

Beloved, suffer a word of personal testimony in closing. I can testify in all sincerity that we have seen some of these greater things. So far but few of these greater things have been published. And even now I refrain from mentioning things in detail. We can only say to the praise and glory of God, "The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad." God's wonderful guidance and presence has been manifested again and again right in the face of many adversaries. Yes, while we have more than once realized something of the meaning of the passage through deep waters and fiery trials, in witnessing for Jesus Christ, doing in his name the work committed to us in this great city, we can truthfully say, "It is the Lord's doings and marvelous in our eyes." To him be all the praise and glory! O, brethren, he wants all of us to share in these greater things. And thus shall we be prepared to reign with him in the glory of the coming Kingdom.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Christ the Great Provider

By Miss Etta Lichty

OUR SCRIPTURE

He giveth to all life, and breath and all things (Acts 17:25). Thou visitest the earth and waterest it; thou greatly enriched it with the river of God which is full of water: thou preparest them corn, when thou hast so provided for it. Thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly, thou settlest the furrows thereof; thou makest it soft with showers: thou blessest the springing thereof. Thou crownest the year with thy goodness: and thy paths drop fatness (Ps. 65:9-11). He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength (Isa. 40:29). For the Lord God is a sun and shield: the Lord will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly (Ps. 84:11). For the Lord giveth wisdom: out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding (Pro. 2:6). Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth give I unto you (John 14:27). Blessed be the Lord who daily loadeth us with benefits (Ps. 68:19). But my God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus (Phil. 4:19).

OUR MEDITATION

What a blessed thought that our dear Lord supplies our every need, that "no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly"! And O! how many are our needs, both temporal and spiritual, they cover every department of our life, yet Christ has promised in his Word to supply every one of them. "My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." He does not promise to supply a part of our needs but all of them,—every need will be supplied.

Christ is the medium through whom God ministers to our needs. What are some of our deepest needs?

We need strength and constancy, inward re-enforcement and comfort, peace, knowledge and love, hope and joy. We need forgiveness, yes how much we all need forgiveness.

We should praise God with our whole heart for his wonderful love to us, his children, for it is his love that prompts him to give us these great blessings we are receiving daily.

Christ said, "Freely ye have received, freely give," and truly, how freely, and cheerfully he has provided for us. "He giveth to all, life, and breath and all things." He has provided us with health and strength, the beautiful sunshine, the rain, the bountiful harvest of fruit and grain. He gives us all these things because he loves us. What are we doing for him?

Not only does he provide for us freely and cheerfully, but the gifts he provides are most valuable. What a great blessing is life, the most highly prized thing in the world, and the breath by which life is sustained. These are such common provisions that we seldom think of them or thank God for them. And yet nothing is so important. If we should cease to breathe for a moment we would die. But God has made it possible for us to breathe without ever taking thought. He provides us with strength. "It is God that girdeth me with strength, and maketh my way perfect" (Ps. 18:32). It is God who gives us "all things" that make life pleasant and happy.

How I love to read over and over again that beautiful twenty-third Psalm that points out so plainly that we need not want any good thing. "The Lord is my shepherd I shall not want,"—he supplies our every need.

These are some of the things that David points out in this Psalm that we shall not want, for the Shepherd supplies them all for us: We shall not want rest, nor drink, neither shall we want forgiveness nor guidance; and we shall not want companionship, comfort, food or joy. And then we shall not want anything,—not anything in this life, nor anything in eternity. And how beautifully was this all fulfilled through Christ. Listen to his words:

"Come unto me all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink." "The Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins." "I am the way, the truth and the life." "Lo I am with you all the days." "The Father shall give you another Comforter." "I am the bread of life, he that cometh to me shall not hunger." "That my joy may be in you and that your joy may be filled full." "If ye shall ask the Father anything in my name he will give it to you." "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." "I go to prepare a place for you. . . I will come again, that where I am there ye may be also."

Do we appreciate the great goodness of our Lord as we should? Let us show our appreciation by praising him with our whole heart. "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?" Let us serve him as we have never served him before and be ever ready and willing to do whatever he would have us do.

"What shall I render to my glorious King?

I have but that which I receive from thee;

And what I give, thou givest back to me,

Transmuted by thy touch; each worthless thing
Changed to the preciousness of gem or gold,

And by thy blessing multiplied a thousand fold.

All my desire thou grantest, whatsoever

I ask! Was ever mythic tale or dream

So bold as this reality,—this stream

Of boundless blessings flowing full and free?

Yet more than I have thought or asked of thee,

Out of thy royal bounty still thou givest me."

OUR PRAYER

Dear heavenly Father we thank thee for the gift of thy dear Son, Jesus Christ our Savior! We thank thee for his beautiful life, for the beautiful example he set for us to follow.

Dear Lord, help us to follow more closely in thy blessed footsteps.

We thank thee for so richly supplying all our needs. How great is thy goodness to us, how wonderful are thy blessings, yet how often do we thy children fail to appreciate as we should, thy great goodness to us in providing so bountifully for us. We pray, Father, that thou wilt forgive us and implant in each one of our hearts a spirit of gratitude and a greater desire to serve thee more acceptably. We ask this in Jesus' dear name. Amen.

BEST EVIDENCE OF CHRISTIANITY

Many books have been written in defense of Christianity; but the dust has gathered on most of them. Long arguments and eloquent sermons have been made and preached to convince men of the truth of Christianity; but the impression made by most of these has been temporary. There are two arguments in favor of Christianity which no sincere soul can resist. One is the life of Christ as it is mirrored in the gospels, and the other is the life of the Christian which is the reflection of the life of Christ. "I must leave you," said an infidel to the Christlike Fenelon, "for if I stay with you much longer I will be a Christian." In the devout Fenelon that infidel saw an argument in favor of Christianity which compelled belief in its truth. It was the South African explorer, Stanley, who said that his association with Dr. Livingstone compelled him to be a Christian. And so it has ever been. The life of Christ is mirrored in the Christian. Men see it, admire it, and feel its power. The godly father, the saintly mother will go a great deal further to make saintly sons and daughters than eloquent sermons. After all, it is not so much the sermons men hear as the sermons they see that brings them to the feet of Jesus.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The Sunday School as a Missionary Agency. By Mrs. Iva M. Kolb

"What are churches for but to make missionaries? What is commerce for but to carry them? What is money for but to send them? What is life itself for but to fulfill the purpose of missions, the enthroning of Jesus Christ in the hearts of men?"

If the church is to fulfill this high mission it must teach its people the needs of others and consequently make them appreciate their responsibility to "all the world." The church is largely recruited from the Sunday school. If a love for missions is instilled into the hearts and minds of the children of the Sunday school, then it must follow as the day the night, the church shall be filled with the bright and stimulating rays of missionary enterprise. If the Sunday school does not teach the child to think of and to love others less fortunate than himself, he becomes self-centered and in later years the church cannot expect him to have a great desire to be helpful to others. His outlook becomes most narrow; he fails to see the crying needs of others; he lives in a little circle of which he is the center; the Great Commission was intended for others,—true, but he seems to think that "Ye" was not meant for himself.

Missionary education is emphatically a vital need in the religious education of every child. Some one has said, "The aim of the Sunday school is to develop to the utmost the religious life of every pupil." If this be true, how can we conscientiously conduct our schools without some definite, practical and systematic missionary teaching, consistent with the age of the pupil? Even a tiny "Beginner" can be taught to pray for others, to give to others and to go on errands of love for others.

One of our foremost Sunday school workers has said in order to be successful in giving missionary instruction the teacher must understand the "purpose of the work." This purpose she says, "is to cultivate feelings of love and sympathy for others; to arouse interest in the various needs of others; to lead the pupil to respond to these various needs of others; to show that the greatest need of the world is to know Jesus Christ; to help the pupils to do their part in telling the gospel story and in extending the Kingdom of God."

This is the aim of the missionary instruction in some of the departments of our school in Philadelphia. We have a certain period every Sunday, which we devote to this important work. Do the children love these pictures and songs? Do they listen with keen interest to the stories of those far-away lands and what the soldiers of the Cross have done and are doing for those who live there? Are they anxious to know what they can do now and may be able to do some day for their little brothers and sisters in these lands so far away? Well, just a peep at the class, when these lessons are being taught, will convince you that it is well worth while.

Every Sunday school should strive to create a wide-awake interest in the needs of others; if wide awake, then shall that interest grow and growing, far and near, shall its power be felt. Have we not been playing too much with the missionary part of our religious education? Nineteen hundred years have passed since our Master's great command and still there are millions who have never heard the story of his love. May the Sunday school awaken to its responsibility and opportunity. Let us make of it the powerful missionary agency which it is capable of being—an agent that shall create a strong missionary church, whose intense desire shall be the enthroning of Jesus Christ in the hearts of all men.

"Is it nothing to you, O ye Christians!

Dare you say you have naught to do?

All over the world they wait for the light:

And is it nothing to you?"

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Three Questions Answered

The answers to the following three questions are taken from the "Superintendent's Record Manual," by E. W. Thornton (Have you heard questions like these raised before? Dr. Thornton is an authority and his theories are practical, try them out—Editor.)

1. How may we get our teachers to do their best?

Appreciate their work, and tell them of your appreciation. Bible school teachers—all teachers, in fact—do not receive the commendation that is due them.

Provide a small library of the very best books on Bible teaching and Bible school work. Keep these books in circulation among your teachers, and discuss selected chapters in your workers' conferences.

See that your teachers are regularly provided with all necessary helps. Take an enthusiastic interest in equipping them for the best possible work. If their departments or rooms need chairs, tables, blackboards, screens, sand tables, maps or pictures, cheerfully furnish them.

So plan your school program that no secretary, visitor, distributor of papers, or anybody else, will interrupt the teacher during the class period.

Ask your minister to commend frequently the work of the teachers before the whole church, and, in his visiting among the people, to encourage parents to co-operate with the teachers.

Put high ideals before your teachers. Encourage them to attend schools of methods, institutes and conventions.

Provide opportunities for teacher training, selecting such books as best meet your teachers' needs, whether the books are in a stipulated "course" or not.

Have a reception at least once a year in honor of the Bible school teachers. You may thus magnify your work.

2. How may we increase and stabilize our attendance?

There are three special methods that have been tried with marked success—the house-to-house canvass, the Bible school rally and the contest.

The main essential in increasing attendance is the attractiveness of the school.

The public school is backed by vigorous laws and strong public sentiment, while the Bible school depends upon its power to make itself attractive.

Personal work, habitual sociability and enthusiasm are strong factors.

Special attention paid to absentees increases attendance by lessening absence. Cards sent to absentees are good, but a handshake is better.

Birthday letters sent by teachers to their pupils, and by the superintendent to teachers and officers, strengthen the personal factor and help to insure attendance. Letters should be real letters, not forms.

Rendering practical assistance to the unemployed, and helping those who are in distress, inspire respect for your school. People want to attend a school that is everybody's friend.

Prompt and thoughtful attention to the sick is a merit the Bible school should not leave altogether for lodges.

When newcomers settle in the community, visit them at once, and invite them to your school.

The Cradle Roll increases attendance by winning the friendship of all members of the family to which the baby belongs.

3. How may we secure and maintain punctuality?

The habit of shifting the beginning time to suit different persons never promotes punctuality. The time of beginning must be definitely fixed and definitely adhered to. To encourage punctuality, be punctual yourself. Wait for nobody.

Run your school neither ahead of time nor behind time. Instead of making speeches on punctuality, be punctual.

Make your program attractive from the first minute to the last.

Instead of reserving surprises until the school is assembled, move such features around so that no one can tell when you are going to have them.

If you have an orchestra, begin a good musical program ten minutes before the regular beginning time of the school.

Use sparingly, if at all, such devices as "on time" and "late" cards. At best, they are only temporarily in effect.

In private conversation with your teachers and officers, urge, encourage, command or chide as the case demands, but insist upon universal on-timeness.

The moment of beginning the Bible school should be as dependable as a public school bell or factory whistle.

Our Young People at Work

G. C. Carpenter
SECRETARY

To Fathers and Mothers

(The Editor's Preface)

There are few who have a deeper and more intelligent interest in young people than our good friend and fellow-editor, Rev. Alva Martin Kerr, of Dayton, Ohio. A first page editorial in his publication, "The Herald of Gospel Liberty" is of unusual interest and appropriateness just now to all members of the Brethren fraternity. It is a message of such importance that we are adapting it to our own purposes, thanks to the indulgence of Brother Kerr, and placing it on the "Young People's" page. While it is a message to fathers and mothers, it is of vital interest to every boy and girl, young man and young woman, and we are depending on them to bring it to the attention of their parents.

(The parenthetical remarks are the editor's).

HAVE YOU FIGURED ON WHAT GENERATION YOUR CHILD IS TO SERVE?

That boy or girl of yours is not yet out of their teens—so this is not their generation. This is yours and mine. Theirs is coming yonder, twenty years from now. Have you figured on what type of life will be demanded of them then, and how much more imperative a college education will be then than now? Or have you made the fatal mistake of thinking, and permitting them to believe, that what is good enough for now will be good enough for then?

(Ashland College will prepare your boy or girl to serve their generation).

ARE YOU SURE OF WHAT THE LIFE-WORK OF YOUR CHILD OUGHT TO BE?

Are you positive just what God meant your boy or girl to be? Are you sure that you are not making a mistake when you think that they will not need a college education and that their whole life will not be diverted into a wrong channel from the lack of it? Are you sure that that child of yours does not need the college influence and association to help it to choose its life-work?

(Ashland's influence would be wise and safe; it is genuinely Christian and loyally Brethren).

WILL YOUR CHILD BE EQUAL TO ANY EMERGENCY THAT MAY COME?

Do you realize what a gamble you are making on what will happen in the future if you permit your child to start out in life without a college education? You think he is to be a farmer, or a carpenter, or a business man, and will not need the college training? But suppose an accident, after it is too late to go to school, makes him a cripple? Or sickness takes from that daughter of yours her husband? What will they do then without an education? To permit them to start out without a college training is to gamble on the future—and the stakes are your child's welfare. It is too great a risk.

(Whatever the life-work of your boy or girl may be, Ashland College can multiply the chances of success many fold).

DARE YOU TAKE SUCH RISKS WITH YOUR CHILD?

Facing all of these facts, dare you as a father or a mother accept the responsibility of permitting your child to drop out of high school or to fail to get a college education? Its destiny is in your hand, and surely you will not take so great a risk on its future!

(Avoid such a risk by sending your boy or girl to Ashland College and he or she will bless you in later life for doing so).

and to know him as the absolute holy and wise Personality "whose thought is true, whose feeling is beautiful, and whose will is good," and whose word is moral law. It is through religious education reconciled to modern thought and adjusted to meet the growing demands of life, that the church may realize its aim; namely, to bring man into a deeper conscious union with God through Jesus Christ.

Since it is the function of the church to bring human beings into conscious relationship with God, and since it can do this in a full measure only by developing the soul-life, then it follows that the church should not only be the dynamic force in the educative process, but that it should furnish both the inspiration and aim for all educational institutions. This the church may do by using the educational agencies it now controls or influences. The institutions are:

First, the theological seminary or distinctive church school. Here a revolution, in most cases, is needed. In most of the seminaries the students are required to spend their time studying antiquated dogma, musty creeds and dead languages, to save scholarship, when they ought to be in vital touch with human beings, studying the living language of the human heart, to save men.

Second. The Sunday school. The church is connected with education through the Sunday school. The Sunday school is the strategic point from which the church may direct the unfolding and developing lives of the future citizens of democracy. It is through the Sunday school that the church can most effectively participate in educational work, because in the Sunday school the church deals most directly with the developing life which will not only direct future religious education, but also determine the educational ideals of the future. The church should seek to discover, through the agency of the Sunday school, the religious characteristics that are present in the life of the child and to develop those potential characteristics according to the general laws of physical, mental, social and religious development, so that the child will always remain within the democracy of God, developing the inherent divine life and coming into a conscious union with God, which is the true destiny of man; for the origin of the child is from God, pure and free in its beginning, and its true destiny must therefore be with God. The church has delegated to the Sunday school the important task of developing the child's conscious and spiritual life and the success of the Sunday school depends upon how effectively it performs this function.

Third. The family is a social institution that has great capabilities for democracy, and which needs the direction of the church. The germinal type of the democracy of God is the ideal Christian family. The end of religious education is the realization of those social and religious ideals found in the ideal Christian family, expanded into a larger social area. But when we realize that one marriage out of every twelve in the United States is broken by divorce, it is clearly evident that the church has a big task to perform in educating and Christianizing the American family to a realization of the sacredness of the marital relation and the true function of the family life.

Fourth. The church may also become a factor in education through the public schools. While the church does not now have any direct control over the public school system, it can make the public schools more efficient agents for the development of religion and morals, by establishing and maintaining such moral and religious sentiments that only the best men and women of the community can be elected members of the school board, who will, in turn, elect to teach in the public schools only such teachers who can qualify in manhood and womanhood as well as in the academic branches, so that the public schools will make for the best development of mental, social and religious life of those who attend them. The teacher who does not attend prayer meetings and Sunday school is not the best kind of a teacher in a democracy.

Within the past decade there has arisen a strong demand that the public schools give ethical instruction, because many homes do not give such instruction and many children never so much as see the inside of a Sunday school, and for the further fact that childhood and youth are the periods when moral character is formed, if it is formed at all. Almost any subject in the curriculum may be taught in a way that it will develop the religious life of the youth. Hence the school should seek to instruct the youth in the principles of right conduct; for character is the chief aim of school instruction, and the true aim of education may be defined as intellectual, social, moral and religious efficiency,—to develop within the soul loftier ambitions, a desire for truth, greater sympathy, and a desire for sacrifice and service. The church therefore has a splendid opportunity to influence education by furnishing the materials and ideals for the schools that will awaken within the mind of those under instruction love for the beautiful and good and that will enable them to adjust themselves to their intellectual, moral, social and religious environment. For, says Prof. Horne, "Education is the eternal process of superior adjustment of the physically and mentally developed, free, conscious, human being to God, as manifested in the intellectual, emotional, and volitional environment of man."

Fifth. The church may become a larger factor in education by realizing and governing itself in accordance with the now acknowledged fact that all religious activities should be educational and that all educational activities should be religious: for religion is a part of the content of culture, and education is a part of the content of religion. Every teacher should be essentially a religious teacher and each subject taught should lead toward the highest conception of life, truth, duty, service and righteousness. Every minister should be a teaching minister—Christ as a teacher comes before Christ a preacher. Every church should be a teaching church (an Ecclesia Docens). In many respects the church has ceased to follow the example of the Head of the church and has emphasized pulpit oratory more than a teaching ministry. The Sacred Writings frequently tell us that the great Teacher entered the synagogue on the Sabbath day to teach the people and that to do so was his custom. His work was a work of instruction—to lead the people to a clearer revelation of God and his truth, to a conscious union with the life of God, and to live in a conscious at-onement with the divine Being.

The religious life of man is a continuous educational process, extending across the ages into the vale of the infinite, where the soul continues to develop like unto the image of the Son of God, and comes into a complete realization of ultimate truth, knowing what God would have man know, feeling what God would have him feel, seeing what God would have him see, doing what God would have him do, being what God would have him be and enjoying what God, through the long ages of the past, has been wanting him to enjoy,—namely, fellowship with God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Spirit. Such is the complete realization of the democracy of God—the peace of God which passeth all understanding.

A Christian Dedication

There is no more beautiful sight than the dedication of a building to the high and noble purpose of the worship of God, unless it is the dedication of a life to the Master's service. In view of the fact that there are some churches in the process of erection, others being planned and some about to be dedicated, the following responsive service will be timely and may prove suggestive. The Christians of Buffalo, New York, who banded themselves together to give their fellow citizens the good news from the lips of William A. Sunday nobly set forth their high purposes in the dedication of their tabernacle in these words:

Leader: As an inspiration to make our virile city a veritable city of God;

People: We dedicate this tabernacle.

Leader: For the rebuilding of broken homes and neglected family altars;

People: We dedicate this tabernacle.

Leader: For the re-establishment of broken faiths and the payment of forgotten vows;

People: We dedicate this tabernacle.

Leader: For the mending of broken hearts and the healing of shattered lives;

People: We dedicate this tabernacle.

Leader: For the encouragement of everything wholesome, uplifting and righteous;

People: We dedicate this tabernacle.

Leader: For the inspiration of the young, for the strengthening of those who bear the tug and strain of middle years, and for the heartening of the aged;

People: We dedicate this tabernacle.

Leader: For the destruction of evil in places high and low;

People: We dedicate this tabernacle.

Leader: For the winning of the lost through the power of a crucified and risen Redeemer;

People: We dedicate this tabernacle.

Leader: For the honor of Jehovah God who through the centuries has led his people in love;

People: We dedicate this tabernacle.

Leader: For the honor of Jesus Christ, only begotten Son of the Father, despised and rejected often, and yet today the supreme Lord and only Savior of men;

People: We dedicate this tabernacle.

Leader: For the honor of the Holy Spirit, revealing the light and life and love of Father and Son, and bringing the mind of the Master to our remembrance;

People: We dedicate this tabernacle.

Leader: For the glory of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit;

People: We dedicate this tabernacle.

Here is beautifully and powerfully outlined the whole purpose of evangelism, whether in church or tabernacle.

A man received a letter from a missionary on the west coast of Africa, in which, as a curiosity, some serpents eggs were contained. He laid them aside carefully, thinking to preserve them as they were; but one day, when he went to show them to a friend, he discovered, to his dismay that the heat of the drawer had hatched them into serpents, and there was a heap of crawling things before his eyes. Sometimes our curiosity causes us to cherish evil thoughts in our minds and often before we are aware, they have developed into evil deeds.—B.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

HIGHLAND, PENNSYLVANIA

After three months as pastor of the Highland church, I will report a few items hoping to find space in the so much loved Evangelist.

We were called to this field in the early spring, making our trip March the first. The story of our trip is pleasant beyond expression. We left Michigan in the evening, traveling by the way, of Fort Wayne to Pittsburgh. The morning dawned finding us in the state of Ohio. Then up the Ohio and Monongahela rivers. As the train found its course through the hills and valleys, sometimes the engine in view, sometimes behind the hills and rock, we were made to recognize the handiwork of God.

As we sped on, looking upon the things of nature, our minds were drawn to the works and habitation of man. What we saw can hardly be described, as we wound our way through the coal mining and steel construction districts. There were powerful machinery and coal in great amounts being taken from beneath the earth, and with thousands of people of all descriptions and from all parts of the world residing among the hills and mines and shops. We were made to shudder to think of the drastic condition of the people of whom the greatest majority are not only slaves to capitalists but slaves to sin and wickedness. This question came to us, Have American Christians done their duty to save such? If not, why not? Why send missions aries across the seas to teach and to save the heathen when we have a multitude in our own gates?

We arrived at our destination about five A. M., to learn that we must fill an appointment at eight o'clock. Here we met a congregation which gave us a hearty welcome. We preached four sermons on our trip and to our surprise, despite the inclement weather, with rain, mud and snow, we had fair crowds. The church gave us a unanimous call to the pastorate. After learning that there was no parsonage, the question of a house was left with the Lord and people. We returned home.

In a few days we were notified that a house had been secured. But in the meantime, we were taken sick which delayed our going for several days.

On April the 13th, we began our pastoral work with services morning and evening each Sunday.

The Highland church has been without a resident pastor for several years, only having services once a month, or as they could secure a supply. We found here a few faithful, steadfast members, who said we can support a pastor for full time, and they are doing it.

On May the 14th an automobile drove up to our home and on inviting them out we found, to our surprise, baskets and bags which made us know that something was happening. This was duplicated until several families had arrived. A supply of lard, flour, fruit and other things useful in the home was presented. After a visit the good sisters spread a dinner which would delight a king. After the dinner was over a gift of several dollars was laid in our hands and for these gifts we were very grateful.

On May the 25th a revival effort was launched with the writer doing the preaching. On June the 8th, the Lord's Supper was observed. An electric storm in the early evening delayed many from coming to the service, although we had a good attendance.

The following Sunday we held an all day service. Brother H. M. Myers of Pittsburgh preaching two excellent sermons, after which the congregation retired to the water where two young ladies received baptism.

On Sunday, July the 20th, Brethren Day was observed. Brother Henry Wise of West Virginia was given a special invitation to be with us on the occasion as he organized the church in 1885. Many changes have taken place since that day. Brother Wise greatly enjoyed the day with the large host of friends and the delicious dinner which the faithful sisters spread at noon.

To add to the pleasure of the day the brass band of the community gave some fine music for which it was highly complimented.

On Wednesday we greatly enjoyed a visit of Brother Wise in our home.

On August the 3rd Children's day was observed with great success. We had present the largest crowd for many years and a fine offering for Missions was taken.

Arrangements have been made to paint the church building, and put an iron fence and concrete walk in front.

Our Sunday school is taking on new life in attendance with a contest between the men folks and the gentlefolks.

We have a large attendance at preaching services each Sunday and one of the finest communities in America. The church is strictly Progressive Brethren and believe in moving forward.

We covet the prayers of the brotherhood that we may live at the foot of the Cross and meet the needs and obligations of the day.

THOS. F. HOWELL.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH

Los Angeles, California

Notwithstanding the vacation time is on, our services are quite well attended. The greatest falling off is seen in the Sunday school. There has been an increased attendance at the mid-week prayer meeting which has greatly encouraged Brother Jennings.

On July 13th, Brother I. A. Miller and Joe Shively were ordained as deacons. These brethren had been chosen by the congregation at the regular quarterly business meeting in April.

Since last report two have been received by baptism. Mrs. Woodmansee and her daughter, Pearl, who became the wife of Brother Allen Pearce the day before they left here for their new field of work at Lost Creek, Kentucky. An ordination service was held for these three workers on Sunday evening, July 13th, just previous to their departure on Tuesday, July 15th. Brother Pearce has especially endeared himself to our people here by his faithful service in the Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor. As an evidence of our goodwill to these young people an offering was taken in the Young People's Class and the Men's Bible Class which resulted in a substantial gift of money to assist them on their journey to their new work.

As we have not mentioned it before we wish to now mention the fact that our Easter offering reached close up to $200.00, being the largest offering we have yet received on such an occasion.

The building committee is getting busy on the new church edifice. They have the blueprints now ready and the work will be carried right forward. The principal need of a new church building, perhaps, is in furnishing sufficient rooms, light and airy, for the work of our Sunday school. This will be a real service to the immediate community as well as for the membership both near and far in this city. We owe it to ourselves and especially to our children to have a suitable place to worship God in, a place to which we can point with pride and to which we shall not be ashamed to invite our acquaintances who are outside the fold of the Good Shepherd. The present building has served its purpose well and has been a monument to the faith of the pioneers of the Brethren church in this city, but it has now become inadequate to our present needs. That this is the general opinion among us is evidenced by the substantial subscriptions received by the finance committee.

Just preceding and during the District Conference at Long Beach, we had the honor of two sermons by Dean J. Allen Miller of Ashland College. These were greatly appreciated and enjoyed by all who heard them.

His visit to the churches on this western coast has been no doubt a great inspiration to all their members who were privileged to hear him. It is certainly great to know that all our young men and women at Ashland College are privileged to sit as learners at the feet of such a man as Dr. J. Allen Miller.

Our congregation was able to make a good report at District Conference on all the goals of the Four Year Program except the S. S. C. E. and efforts are being made to bring this up to the standard by next year.

Let us encourage one another to loyalty and faithfulness. Now is our opportunity to work for the Master.

A. P. REED.

4910 Wadsworth St. Los Angeles, California.

LATHROP, CALIFORNIA

Dear Evangelist:

Lathrop sends Christian greetings after a long silence. We are very much gratified with the improvements and the beauty of our church paper, both as to contents and appearance. It has always been good, and now even better.

It was our good fortune to have Brother J. Allen Miller with us a few weeks ago, and were glad to hear him again, he having preached at one of our state camp meetings when a young man. His messages remain in the hearts of the people.

Last spring it was thought best to give up our much loved pastor of the last six years, Brother J. Wesley Platt, to the Manteca congregation as there was great need of his entire time and work there in view of the fact that they were contemplating the building of a church house. Though we feared we would not soon find one who could fill Brother Platt's place, we rejoice to say we found that one in Brother N. V. Leatherman. We surely are blessed to have such a devoted Christian man to succeed our busy self-denying Brother Platt. Our pastor now has the Ripon colony, and Lathrop churches to preside over; preaching three times each Sunday, also holding three prayer meetings and Christian Endeavor services. Since last April eleven young people have been added to the Lathrop church by baptism and two young men lately returned from overseas are awaiting baptism. Brother Leatherman has baptized six of this number.

Our young people gather at the church Thursday evening for Christian Endeavor and remain for the Bible study and prayer meeting which follows.

We expect to hold Communion next Monday night. Though we are small in number we hope to enjoy the Lord's blessing at our Love Feast.

Sister Hannah E. Beer, widow of one of the chief founders of the Brethren church is still living and, though eighty years of age lives alone—no not alone! for she has "Jesus with her all the time." A more cheerful, thankful, uncomplaining Christian it would be hard to find in our church, east or west, yet poor in everything but spirituality. Her husband lies in an unmarked grave and it would surely be to the credit of the church to start a fund for the erection of a suitable monument for the last resting place of this veteran of the Cross, who in the long ago actually sacrificed his home and gave his time to the interests of the Brethren church. None have done more than he, to uphold a "Whole Bible church." Let us not forget his dear wife, who shared in his every sacrifice and labor. Pray for us of the west. We have perhaps the trials and hindrances in common with all God's people, so we will pray for you of the east. May we all be found worthy to partake in the first resurrection in our prayer. With Christian love.

LUDA S. REYNOLDS.

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

It has been some time since there has been any report from the Oak Hill church but we are still existing.

The Sunday school at Salem is being well attended also the cottage prayer meeting each Thursday night. The Sunday school is planning a picnic for the children soon.

We had our two hundredth anniversary celebration at the Oak Hill church on July 27. We had a fine gathering and all seemed to enjoy the day. Dinner was served on the ground and we had a fine sermon in the morning by Rev. A. B. Duncan. We also had a number of splendid songs by the Duncan Brothers and essays by Miss Lottie Riner and Miss Lillian Duncan.

The Campaign Director of College Endowment may be surprised to see himself at work in the Evangelist but as this is his last report before General Conference, we wish to honor the man who has been honored of God and the church to lead us thus far to victory. The thermometer stands at ($112,000) or a little better.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

My trip into Michigan took me over territory which was new to me. I had never been in any of the Michigan churches before, and I had only met those of our people from that state whom I had met at our conferences. But our people in Michigan are like our people everywhere in that they are hospitable, and cordial, and easy to learn to know, hence very little time was needed to become acquainted.

Our first stop was at the Campbell church. This is a country congregation and the house of worship is located perhaps five miles out from Lake Odessa. It was in this congregation that our late Brother J. G. Winney served as pastor for many, many years. It was my privilege to meet his widow, Sister Winney, in her home and to have a very enjoyable visit with her. I found this good woman not only interested in the local work of her church, but also interested in the college and all of our denominational enterprises.

Brother Martin Garrison is the present pastor of this flock. He was preceded by Brother C. C. Grisso who served this field four years. As I looked the work over I was made to feel that Brother Grisso must have done good, sound work during his stay with the Campbell people; and I was also made to feel that Brother Garrison and his wife are doing earnest, devoted work to carry the cause forward. The present status of the Campbell work speaks mightily well for those who are at present, and for those who have been in the past responsible for its care and promotion.

I preached to splendid, earnest audiences during my stay at this place. And, all things considered, the result for endowment was very satisfactory. When I left Campbell the result was $1100. There was still other work to do and when Brother Garrison has finished the report will look still better. I am very much indebted to Brother Garrison for the excellent assistance he rendered me in the use of his Ford and for all of his other kindnesses to me. The home of Brother and Sister Garrison was headquarters for me and it was a real pleasure to be in their home. I was also treated with real kindness in the Mote, Henney, Miller, Darby and Nickerson homes. And for these and all of the Campbell people whom I met I can say, they are a splendid, loyal people, and my canvass in their midst was a real pleasure.

From Campbell I came to Glendora and New Troy. Either fortunately or unfortunately these two points are very close together. Glendora is a small congregation which has lately purchased a church property. This obligation, and the upkeep of current expenses is about all this little congregation can handle. Under the circumstances I did not feel to press the endowment matter very hard. However, one brother enlisted in the cause of endowment, and thus Glendora has at least some part in the good work. I am grateful to the two Weaver families for their kindness to me. I preached two nights at this place.

New Troy is the place where our good Brother J. H. English worships. Brother English has preached a great deal in the Michigan churches and he is a noble man to know. The work here at New Troy has its struggles too. With a small congregation, it makes the current expenses come heavy on a few. However, the New Troy people believe firmly in the importance of Ashland College and when I say that this little band is going to enlist for at least $100.00, it means more than folks not acquainted with the situation might think. I am glad to see New Troy have a part too in the great work we are doing for the future of our school. I preached two nights also at this place. Brother English and son took the best of care of me in their home, and I thank them, as I also want to thank Sister Penwell for her kind hospitality. Brother A. E. Thomas has been preaching for these two churches every two weeks this summer. When he closes his work there these two churches will need some man to come on the ground and take care of their work.

There remain yet two small churches in Michigan which I may visit at some later time. This will be our last report until after conference. The mercury now stands at approximately $112,000. This looks good, but it will look infinitely better when the task is done and the mercury has gone up to the $200,000 mark.

Campaign Secretary.

ASHLAND COLLEGE NOTES

MISS AMY GENEVIEVE PUTERBAUGH,
Soprano, teacher of Voice

Miss Puterbaugh came to the College last fall and took up the work of the Voice Department. She had a very successful year, the enrollment in that department increasing very considerably and it gives promise of doing so again this year. During the summer, Miss Puterbaugh has been studying in Chicago. Those who are contemplating work in Vocal should not overlook the fact that Ashland has a teacher of Voice who can not only sing but one who has been trained in the best schools.

The College has been fortunate in securing two new teachers during this past week. First, is Mr. R. R. Haun, of Virginia, who takes the place made vacant by the resignation of Mr. A. A. Grubb. Professor Grubb's work, the physical sciences, was hard to provide for. First because Professor Grubb set an exceedingly high standard, and secondly, because the work is very difficult. I want in this very brief way to express on behalf of the college our very deep appreciation of the work done by Mr. Grubb.

However, we feel confident that Mr. Haun will more than measure up to our expectations for the position. He is a member of the Brethren church, an A. B. from the University of Virginia, and lacks but a summer term of his M. A. from Vanderbilt University. Mr. Haun comes with the enthusiasm of youth and the Prudential Committee feels certain that a good year awaits the new head of the department.

The other teacher is Miss Dora Zimmerman, graduate of Kings School of Oratory. Miss Zimmerman will have charge of the Elocution work of the College and will also be director of Physical Education for Women. Miss Zimmerman is very talented and can play the violin, recite, and give a whole evening's program herself. Miss Zimmerman is a sister-in-law of Rev. Victor Leatherman, of Ripon, California, and is a member of the Brethren church.

This leaves but one vacancy, that of Director of Physical Education for men. Several men are under consideration and it is hoped that this place may be filled before the opening of the college in September.

Every room in the dormitory for women has been taken and unless there are some who will room together, other rooms will have to be provided. New men are enrolling right along and it looks now as if our goal, "One Hundred in the College and Fifty in the Seminary," may be realized.

Fall Opening, Tuesday, September sixteen.

This conference year is drawing to a close. But as I look back over the past year I see the desired accomplishments were not all realized. The rest who confessed Christ refused to follow Jesus the remaining steps. Sunday a week past we had two more confessions, one was formerly a Dunkard, William Smith, the brother of John Smith, a Dunkard preacher, and the other was his wife, formerly a Baptist. This concludes the year with nineteen additions, four by letter, one by relation and fourteen by baptism. This coming year the pastor is planning for more effectual, fervent prayer among the church members, more Bible study and more personal work. By the grace of God and these means we hope to add 50 percent to our membership before the end of 1920. Do you, reader, believe in prayer as a means of saving souls? If so, we covet your prayers for our coming revival the last two weeks in October and first week in November. These weeks were thought best by us. We will have Brother I. D. Bowman with us, and we are praying and planning for a great harvest of souls.

Our heartiest thanks to the Brethren church at large for the financial aid granted the Columbus Brethren, and our hope is to serve you better in the 1920 conference year than any year preceding.

Delinquent on Reporting

The writer has sent out a second letter with report blanks to superintendents of a number of schools requesting a prompt return of the report and even to several schools the third call has been sent and we are still without a response from the following number of schools in each district given below:

California, four schools; Ellikota, two; Indiana, seven; Maryland-Virginia, eight; Ohio, eight; Pennsylvania, eight. That means that thirty-seven delinquent schools in the Brotherhood will be reported DELINQUENTS at National Conference unless these reports are received within a few days.

Come, brother superintendent, show your loyalty to the work by giving this important matter your immediate attention.

The Holy Spirit at Work and Some Hindrances

The Holy Spirit's presence in human lives is one of the most precious and vital truths of Christian teaching and experience. That Jesus taught it no one, who has read John 14, can doubt. The Master said to his downhearted disciples, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever, even the Spirit of truth: whom the world cannot receive; for it beareth him not, neither knoweth him: ye know him for he abideth with you and shall be in you." Again in the 20th chapter and 22nd verse we are told that Jesus breathed upon them and said "Receive ye the Holy Spirit." That this promised Holy Spirit is a fact in human experience is demonstrated by the marvelous exhibition of divine power on the day of Pentecost, by his guidance of Philip to the place where he baptized the eunuch, by his coming upon the Samaritans when Peter and John had laid hands upon them and by Paul's experience on numerous occasions and by his frequent teachings and declarations. Twice in one epistle (1 Cor. 3:16, 17; 6:9), Paul declares in the most emphatic manner possible that the Spirit has his abiding within us. And down through the Christian centuries, thousands of zealous, empowered, transformed souls have borne eloquent testimony to this fact.

We have no desire to make an extended discussion of the varied functions of the Holy Spirit. Suffice it for us to note one important function to which Jesus repeatedly directs attention. It is expressed in the title, "the Spirit of truth." He is to be the bearer and mediator of the truth which Jesus embodied in his revealing, saving work. For the unsaved soul, God's redemptive action is the first great work to be wrought. But for the regenerate child of God he contemplates the translation of the motives and principles which reigned in the life of Christ into his conduct and character. That is the work he seeks to do; that is what he is trying to bring about in our lives, collectively and individually, at this very moment. His great purpose is to extend his inspiring, sanctifying, spiritual presence into every life and into the life of the church in such a way that "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness and self-control shall everywhere prevail and characterize God's children in all their relations with another. He desires that these shall be their everyday qualities as well as their virtues on special occasions. These plainest qualities are the things that ennoble the human heart; they are the finest things in the life of man. To develop these virtues within us is his aim and mission. How well he is succeeding God only knows. And yet, as by its fruit we presume to judge a tree, so we may also judge men's spiritual growth by the presence or absence of the "fruit of the Spirit." And it is to be noted that such fruit consists not primarily of the extraordinary or miraculous element of life, but of those which cover the common duties, such as patience, sympathy, generosity, helpfulness and their like. Opposing characteristics if found in the life would indicate the Spirit is being hindered and made ineffectual in its influence.

Extreme sensitiveness of temper is a hindrance to the Holy Spirit's desired work in us. The man who is irritable and peevish, who is slighted when no slight is intended, who is angered because others seek the same rights which he assumes, who thinks when others do not say "Yea, yea" to all he says, they are designing against him, or becomes impatient and hastily and harshly condemns those whose plans, conceptions and ideals are not in accord with his own, such an individual can hardly be a congenial dwelling place for the Great Spirit. A peevish Christian cannot be a growing Christian. Irritability is not conducive to strength of character. The temperamentally sensitive soul is never a great soul. God's Spirit cannot work within him that which he would; he is hindered.

Lack of brotherly love is a serious hindering element in many lives to the operation of the Holy Spirit. In fact, it is difficult to see how any life can presume to claim possession of this representative of the Great God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ when his heart is filled with hatred rather than love, when harshness and cruelty characterize his life rather than charity and consideration. God's highest attribute is love, and so distinctively characteristic of him is this that the disciple nearest his heart declared without qualification, "God is love." And he prefaced his definition by the declaration that "He that loveth not knoweth not God." The Holy Spirit can make no compromise; it must be true to the character of God. In that life where bitterness and intolerance prevails, he can perform no work of grace. Where there is no place nor desire for his loving presence he will not abide. And when he is absent life is stripped of all that is noblest and most permanent.

Where there is no love there is a decided indisposition to co-operation. Each individual is for himself and by himself. Everything must conform to his own ideas, redound to his own interests and be governed and executed by his own important person. All others are insignificant beside the greatness of his own being. To bring glory to himself, to have his own plans to carry, to hear the shout of his own name from many throats, to be a little demigod in his tribe or community, such are the aims of his selfish striving. Selfishness is the pervading spirit of life; extreme individualism is the rule of conduct; there is no team work, no co-operation. Such a spirit is not a fruit of the Holy Spirit; it is contrary to his very life and hinders the working of his good pleasure in that which is his rightful temple. He causes men to co-operate, to work together for the best good of all and to seek each man his neighbor's welfare. He will cause pastors to work not against each other or separately and unco-operatively, but together, harmoniously and for the good of the whole church. He will cause deacons, superintendents and other leaders in the local church to plan and work co-operatively, not thinking of personal glory or position. In whatever relation men find themselves, the Holy Spirit will cause them not to be self-seeking and individualistic, but unselfish, co-operative, doing all to the glory of God.

There is a spirit of willfulness growing among men, perhaps not more than ever, but it is often conspicuously demonstrated, that prevents the Holy Spirit having his way with them. If he is to be our Helper, Guide, Advocate or Comforter, or whatever office or title of his we prize most, we must be surrendered to his will and way. If two people are to walk together, one must be surrendered to the other as to their walk. If a number of Christians are to work together for the advancement of the Kingdom of God, they must be surrendered each to the other. If some are bent upon having their own way and others are equally determined on having their own way, there will be no agreement and no progress. How many are the object lessons in this matter! How many churches are wrecked today, because at sometime in the past there were two or more persons absolutely unyielding and persisted in their willfulness until the entire church was divided into irreconcilable factions! Such a spirit of perverseness will divide denominations and the whole army of God, delay the work of Christ's kingdom and make it impossible for the Holy Spirit to "lead into all truth."

Suspicion is the most effective hindrance to the work of the Spirit of God. When fellow-workers in the cause of Christ begin to suspect each other of ulterior motives and of untrue leadings, it is not long till they are far apart and the grace of God is spent in vain on their lives and efforts. In the home a suspicion of unfaithfulness on the part of husband or wife soon results in that home being rent in twain. Suspicion on the part of certain members of a congregation of the motives and faithfulness of other members of that body will soon result in rumors, slander and division. That spirit will work the same ill between congregation and congregation, or between one group of churches and another. It is diametrically opposed to the Spirit of truth and makes impossible the working out of his great mission among men. Nothing can so soon separate the hosts of God, make enemies out of friends and delay the progress of the Kingdom of God, as the toleration of the spirit of suspicion.

The Holy Spirit is ever on its mission seeking to convince the world of sin, of righteousness and judgment and ever seeking to lead our hearts into all truth. He will never cease to woo us from the dead past of wasted opportunity into the living presence of duty and service, if we will hear his voice. This is the day of our visitation. Will we hinder or permit him to have his way?

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother W. R. Deeter, pastor of the Oakville, Indiana, Brethren church, announces a Home Coming Day for his church on August 31. Doubtless it will be a very enjoyable and profitable occasion.

Rev. Miles J. Snyder, pastor of Milledgeville, Illinois, Brethren church, is visiting relatives in Ashland. He gave the Publishing House a call last week. On Sunday morning he preached a very carefully prepared and effective sermon in the college chapel.

Last week we mentioned the fact that Prof. Garber was in attendance at the Miami Valley Life Work Conference. After going to press we learned that President Jacobs was also one of the special speakers at the conference. Dr. Jacobs preached in the Dayton church on Sunday night as he was making his way home.

Brother E. A. Rowsey, president of the Ashland College Y. M. C. A., has a message in this issue for new as well as returning students. The "Retreat" idea is a splendid one and the place selected is ideal. Every fellow will want to be in on it. Notice the other announcements he makes.

Brother I. D. Bowman, for many years pastor of the Second Brethren church of Philadelphia, announces in this issue his resignation so that he may give himself wholly to evangelistic work. Brother Bowman has made a heroic struggle in his effort to build up the "Whole Gospel Mission into a self-supporting church. His effort has been constantly against odds, many of which were due to conditions in the community and its constituency. He deserves much credit for his sacrifice and perseverance as well as for the success which has attended his efforts.

A good sister from the Spokane, Washington, church recently renewed her subscription to the Evangelist and said, "I don't see how I could get along without it, I don't want to lose a single copy." It is encouraging to receive such testimonies as to the value of the paper and it is our desire to make it more and more an organ of usefulness and blessing.

"The Passing of a Brethren Church" is not a very welcome phrase, but as it comes about by the passing of a city it can with better grace be received. Brother W. C. Benshoff, pastor of the Altoona, Pennsylvania, Brethren church, reports the disbanding service of the Rosedale church. It is seldom that a church disbands in such an orderly and impressive manner. And because of the attendant circumstances we believe the Brethren church is no poorer in membership with the passing of this congregation, for they have already allied themselves with other churches and will still be loyal Brethren. And we will continue to thank God for the far reaching influence of the Rosedale church even though it is no more.

All will be interested in the letter from Brother W. H. Bock, our missionary in Carlotia, Argentina. He is confident that things are coming our way, so he states in his personal letter to the editor, but it will take patience and plodding. He also says it will be a wonderful help when the property is bought and fixed up. Our foreign missionary offering has already made possible the meeting of that need. He finds that his constant distribution of literature, personal conversation and visits are opening up the eyes of the people and preparing the way for a harvest. Much sickness and the plague in neighboring towns has hindered their plans. Brother Bock also states that their little Miriam is a great help in getting into many homes. The people don't seem to be able to shut the door on her.

A new church is dedicated; you have heard of it before, but you have not heard of its completion until now. It is the thriving congregation at Spokane, Washington. It was dedicated at the close of a Bible conference at which time this congregation and the Sunnyside church were organized into a conference district. Though only two churches are at present in this conference, we dare say they will not remain two very long. They have a missionary board composed of wide-awake energetic men who will see to it that the Brethren faith is established in other needy fields in the near future. This conference was attended by Dean J. Allen Miller of Ashland College, Brethren W. S. Bell and H. V. Wall of Long Beach, California, besides the pastor of the Sunnyside church, Brother C. H. Ashman, all of whom were prominent on the program, and a large lay delegation from Sunnyside. The Spokane people were greatly inspired and encouraged as well as given financial help by the visiting brethren. Brother R. Paul Miller is the energetic pastor and Miss Vianna Detwiler is the efficient personal worker and missionary. We are pleased to give our readers some pictures of the church and the leading workers.

The entire brotherhood will regret to learn of the death of Brother J. C. Cassel of Lansdale, Pennsylvania, which occurred at his home, August 20, 1919, at the age of 70 years, 3 months and 1 day. His funeral was conducted at the Tenth and Dauphin Street church, Philadelphia, Sunday the 24th, preceded by a service at the home. Dr. W. D. Furry preached the sermon. Burial was made in the old Germantown cemetery.

Brother Cassel was widely known and loved. He has always been active in the affairs of the church. For years he was secretary of the Home Missionary Board, a trustee of Ashland College, a member of the Brethren Publishing Company and treasurer of the Foreign Missionary Board. Only last year he was relieved of the last named position but was retained as a member of the Board. He was the father of the Montreal mission project and invested much money and effort in the work. He has always taken an active interest in the councils of the church in every way and his passing will mean a distinct loss to the entire brotherhood. Even during recent years when his activity was hindered on account of declining health, his counsels were sought and his interest still gave inspiration to those who were called upon to take up the work he laid down.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Necessity of More Intelligent Concern for the Church of Tomorrow

By Prof. W. Irvin Duker

Man's ability to be of real use to his fellow-man is largely determined by his power in forecasting the future. A writer of no small prominence speaks of the "future overworked" and quotes 2 Corinthians 6:2,—"Now is the accepted time." However the man that lives in the present with no intelligent thought of what the future will be, will continually find that the efforts that he puts forth will fail to function even in the present. The present and the future are so related that any action in the one becomes a part of the other.

In speaking of the "future overworked" David Swing, says: "Among the supposed virtues of this world, men have assigned a high place to its great law of progress. It is the consolation of all hearts that we are moving forward to all that is noble in intellect and sentiment. The privilege of this forward movement is at least supposed to be offered to all, and there are many who contend that not simply the privilege but the destiny of progress rests upon all. This at least is true, that a grand law of advance pervades the universe, and reveals itself in the seed of the oak, in the development of animal life, and in the unfolding of the human intellect. We look back and at once pity our fathers, for our boat has floated away from their barren, wintry shore, far down to what seems to us the land of spontaneous harvest and perpetual spring. Progress is real and beautiful, a great law of man full of present happiness and hope. Of this great good what now is the evil side? What is the drop of poison in this cup? It is found in the fact, that this coming glory of the future is always drawing the heart away from the present. In our inability to see two objects at once, we gaze at the future and sit down and wait for it to come. Thus the great outlook of the soul is suffered to neutralize the idea of doing with one's might what the hand finds to do."

We now see with startling distinctness that to exercise any wise concern for the "Church of Tomorrow," we must be tremendously interested in the "Church of Today." The man that fails to function in the present activities of the church because of some slight difference of opinion as to methods, will find in the future that he will have no place in its activities. It would be a great gain to our store of practical philosophy and religion if we could learn to feel that the future does not create nor bring progress: it only receives it. It is only a storehouse into which the present empties itself. If the present be barren, the future remains empty also, and, moving itself further away, waits for a laborious, patient present to precede it.

In the present, well developed plans of our church we are finding two classes of local churches with respect to co-operation. In one we find a happy, ready and enthusiastic response. This church is busy with the present and will have a glorious future. In another, for reasons not evident, all definite co-operation is lacking. This church has no future for as we have intimated, the future is only "a storehouse into which the present empties itself."

There is great need, however, of giving proper attention and study to our present activities. Simply to be busy in the "present" does not assure us of constructive work in the "future." It is altogether possible for a church to be quite busy and yet fail to function in work that will be of real value to posterity. This makes quite necessary definite plans for our churches both local and general. Our church in general conference has given much time and thought to constructive work for the church as a whole and each local organization ought to be equally interested in the work of the "home church."

How can we hope to awaken interest and promote a spirit of industry in our local churches? How can we avoid that spirit of procrastination so common in many places? For after all, the principal cause of our inactivity is found, not in a spirit of antagonism to the work at hand, but in a spirit of indifference or rather in the spirit of delay. Some of the most biting aphorisms of the great writers have been uttered against the spirit of delay that broods over the soul. One says, "We pass our lives in deliberation, and die in it." "Delays have dangerous ends," says Shakespeare. "Tomorrow is a satire on today," said Young. But Cervantes states well the folly of feeding eternally upon hope. He says, "By the street called By-and-by, you reach a house called Never." The great mission of hope is to inspire the present. The dazzling glory of the future is only to make the present all light around the foot. But if man sits down and waits till he shall come to the dazzling morrow, the morrow at once becomes dark; it takes back every banner of light, because the gazing soul has not read aright its significance.

Our only hope for the "Church of Tomorrow" is found in a thorough understanding of the plans of the leaders of the "Church of Today." The methods now in use should meet with our hearty approval. A campaign of education through our church paper relative to these plans should be continued with renewed zest. Those that refuse to co-operate in the general plan should be made to "see the light." Then with high hopes for the future and a feeling of satisfaction with the present, knowing it to be grounded upon intelligent, constructive effort, the "Church of Tomorrow" will come into its own.

The Riches of the Divine Revelation. By J. L. Gillin, Ph., D.

The Bible is the record of God's dealings with the Hebrews, Jews and early Christians. Its various parts were suited to different conditions in different ages. It also was intended to meet the religious needs of these peoples in each age. God revealed his will according to the needs of each age and according as men were able to receive his message.

As each age differed from another so the message varied. The conditions in the days of Moses were different from those in the days of Jesus; in the days of Paul than in the days of Jesus. In the time of Moses, the Hebrews were wandering tribes. They needed discipline and unity in the face of other strong religions. He gave them the law and inspired them with fear of their mighty and jealous God. He only was their God. Other peoples might have their own gods, but Jehovah was the God of the Hebrews. Only as they were faithful to him could they hope to be blessed. He took their old belief in bloody sacrifice to teach them loyalty to him and sacrifice of their best possessions to their God. The law was their schoolmaster to teach them a lesson for which they were ready. Like a wise teacher, he taught them as their experience had prepared them to learn.

In the days of the Prophets, conditions had changed. Ceremonial formalism had borne the fruit he desired. They had now learned that for them there was but one God, Jehovah. But they also had come to think that formal loyalty to Jehovah was sufficient. Riches had increased. From being a people of simple shepherds and farmers, they had developed commerce. There had grown up classes of rich and poor, noble and plebeian. The old tribal unity had been loosened. The rich had become careless of the poor and were exploiting them. Then he inspired the Prophets to teach them that ceremonial sacrifice was no substitute for righteous deeds to one's neighbor. "I desire mercy, not sacrifice," was the message of one prophet. These prophets plead with the people to learn the lesson of social righteousness. Only so could God bless them and save them from destruction.

When they refused as a people to learn this lesson of social righteousness, God allowed the Syrians and Babylonians to drive them into exile. Only a few learned the lesson. They suffered with the guilty. No longer did the people need the message of social justice so much. That lesson was now taught by the iron heel of oppression. What the poor, oppressed remnant now needed, as they sat by the rivers of Babylon and wept, was to be taught to remember Zion. They must now be saved from despair. Out of that dark period of the exile came two cries—one the message of Ezekiel counseling faithfulness to God even in a strange land, calling upon those who had not given up faith to remember that they were suffering for the sins of the nation, and the other, begun by Ezekiel but developed by others, extolling the glories of a restored Zion. Out of this latter need sprang the beginning of apocalyptic hopes and the Messianic restorer of Israel. In every period of oppression, this apocalyptic hope sprang into fresh activity in order to keep alive drooping spirits. It appears with renewed vigor again when the successor of Alexander the Great, Antiochus Epiphanes, oppressed the Jews in Palestine, and again when the Romans succeeded. The century preceding the coming of Christ was especially productive of apocalyptic writings as witnessed by the large number of extra-Biblical writings which have come down to us, such as the Book of Enoch, the Ascension of Isaiah, and the Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs.

In the days of Jesus, new conditions obtained. Classes again rent the body of the people—Pharisees, Sadducees and "common people." Jesus spoke in the face of these conditions. No reader of the Gospel can forget his words concerning the Pharisees. He linked his message to the common hopes, but he gave a new meaning to them.

So when Paul carried the Gospel to the Gentiles of the Greek and Roman worlds, new conditions must be met. Hence, Paul broke with the idea prevalent in Christian circles up to his time of activity; viz., that people must become Christians by first becoming Jews through circumcision, the sign of Judaism. Other examples might be given, but these suffice.

Moreover, God's message in each age was varied enough to meet the needs of all honest souls. Doubtless in the days of the strictest legalism expressed in the minute regulations of Leviticus there were many pious souls to whom the answer of God to their needs was in personal communion, while others found access to God only through the sacrifices and ceremonies of the Temple worship. Some found edification in the appeal of Paul to experience justification by faith, while others got more out of the legalistic exhortations of James to show their faith by their works. Just as in modern times, some in earlier days found God's message in the legal writings, others in the Psalms, others in the Proverbs and still others in the Prophets, so some early Christians found food in Paul's Epistles while others found hard to understand. Some were fed by the Gospel of John and others by the simple Gospel of Mark. Even the Epistle to the Hebrews recognizes that God has spoken in many different ways to his people (Hebrews 1:1). His message has been adapted to the experience of the people. Even to the Twelve, Jesus could not speak all he wished. They were not ready for them. Even the coming of the Spirit at Pentecost did not reveal all of God's will, else Paul and Peter could not have disagreed about eating with Gentiles.

The glory of the old Book is that it has a message for every soul, adapted in some of its diversified writings to every type of mind. To one type of mind one writer has a message, and to another type another writer speaks the truth needed. Perhaps few would find Chronicles as inspiring as the Psalms. Perhaps more find God's message in the Gospels than in the Epistles of Paul. But in some portion is God's message for each and every soul.

Furthermore, for our varying moods and different stages in our development there is a message in the Book. When our souls are cast down how that Psalm beginning "Why art thou cast down O my soul; Why art thou disquieted within me?" inspires us! When the Germans seemed about to triumph, how other Psalms, written out of a sore and troubled but faithful heart and Isaiah lifted us up, and made us hope against hope! How the Book of Job inspires us when we suffer what we consider undeserved punishment! How we cling to Daniel and Revelation when persecution tries our faith in the triumph of the Kingdom when the forces in the saddle of this old world seem about to stamp out our faith!

O, the riches of the old Book! How wisely God has spoken through it to every crying need of man! O, the riches of the wisdom of God!

Shall We Lose Our Sabbath? By H. M. Oberholtzer

Radical moral changes have taken place in the world during the recent years, not all of which are for the better. Some of our most sacred institutions are being endangered, and very notably our Christian Sabbath. Disregard for and desecration of the Christian Sabbath is becoming so alarmingly prevalent that many are asking the question, Shall we lose our Sabbath? Christians of former days may have been too extremely strict in their observance of the Lord's Day in some respects; but there is grave danger that we will swing just as far, and perhaps farther, to the other extreme, if present tendencies continue. Perhaps we have already done so. The "Continental Sunday," so lacking in religious spirit, cannot fulfill the purpose of the Christian Sabbath. A day given over to recreation, extravagant indulgence or idleness is not a Christian Sabbath.

The world is going so fast these days and the people are living such a strenuous life that the demand for relief in recreation and amusement has become very urgent. This demand is being very promptly met. Pleasure resorts and amusement places are provided abundantly for all who wish to enjoy them and care to pay the price. However, the work-day duties are so urgent that few people find time to enjoy them during the work-days of the week. Therefore, their need of recreation and amusement is considered sufficient justification for their taking the Lord's Day for that purpose. Consequently the pleasure resorts and amusement places are crowded on the Lord's Day, and many church people are found in the throngs. The proprietors of these places have expended enormous sums of money for buildings, equipment and ornamentation, and claim that the patronage on the Lord's Day is required in order to meet the expenses, which, to their minds and the minds of their patrons, justifies their operating upon the Lord's Day.

Modern methods of traveling are very convenient and inviting and make it possible for people to easily visit distant amusement parks and pleasure resorts or other places upon the Lord's Day. As a further inducement, railways run special excursions on the Lords' Day, with reduced rates of fare, and many church people patronize them. Many have purchased automobiles, which they have but little time to use during the work-days of the week, and in order to realize sufficiently upon their investment feel compelled to use them upon the Lord's Day and seem thus to justify themselves in neglecting the religious services of the day.

Sunday baseball has been legalized in Ohio, and I suppose in other states as well. Sunday sports have become so common that sports upon any other day seem ordinarily to command but little interest.

Theatres and moving picture shows operate in many places on the Lord's Day, and that in open violation of the law, and wield unchecked their corrupting influences. Church attendance has been greatly reduced in many places on this account, and some churches have been compelled to abandon their Lord's Day evening services. Many who attend the morning services of the Lord's Day attend the picture show in the afternoon, which destroys in large part the influence of the religious service. What wonder that so many youths become criminals, children are disobedient to parents and home and church are reproached. For it is generally conceded that, notwithstanding the censorship, the picture shows, as well as the theater, is very corrupt in its influence. Although it has the possibilities of great educational and moral benefit, it is without doubt one of the greatest evils of our times. An effort is being made to legalize the operation of moving picture shows on the Lord's Day, and if money has power to move a legislature, the moving picture syndicate has the money. If this is accomplished the demoralizing effect will be amazing.

Certain factories and corporations require their employees to work on the Lord's Day. The filling of orders seems so urgent or the loss of one day's shut down so great, that they consider themselves justified in operating on the Lord's Day. To them the making of money is everything and the worship of God or the nurture of the soul is very insignificant. Of course the war did much to encourage this state of affairs. We have become accustomed to it now and few people seem any longer to be very much concerned about it. Laborers seem to have come to submit willingly to the order, and to suffer no compunctions of conscience whatever. They have become so accustomed to working on the Lord's Day that many of them, when permitted to spend the day at home, do not hesitate to perform any kind of labor that needs to be done. They seem to persuade themselves that they might as well work for themselves on the Lord's Day as for anyone else. They work in the garden, mend furniture, repair their property or settle accounts. In many places they hammer and saw or run noisy machinery without fear of rebuke or molestation. Neighbors seem to raise no objections. If laborers demand and are given the Lord's Day, usually it is not that they may spend it as the Lord requires, but for their own carnal desires. They seem to find but little delight in the worship of God, in Christian fellowship or other things spiritual.

I have only hastily mentioned a few facts which seem to me should cause alarm and stir the faithful to action. Perhaps I have omitted facts even more alarming, but in consideration of these, I ask seriously, Shall we lose our Sabbath? Of course the loyal and faithful servants of God will answer, "No, by God's help we shall not lose our Sabbath." But it will require much prayer and earnest effort. Sentiment favorable to the restoration and preservation of the Sabbath must be created. The pulpit must diligently and enthusiastically sound forth both warning and appeal, which must be faithfully re-inforced by the lives and influence of the laity. Let the people turn from their desecration of the Lord's Day and find delight in the worship of God and in Christian fellowship. Let the day be spent as the Lord requires. "The Sabbath was made for man," because God knew that man needs the Sabbath, and he knew just what kind of a Sabbath is needed. The Sabbath God made is the best and will adequately fulfill every Sabbath requirement of man, no matter how strenuous his life may be. Some may find it easy to excuse the things they do on the Lord's Day, in the light of present day standards, but God's Word will not excuse them. If recreation and amusement is needed, we should arrange for their enjoyment on some other day, perhaps a holiday or half holiday in the middle or at the end of the week. If it is urged that work must be done on the Lord's Day, let us remember that no material gains can compensate for our spiritual losses. We must restore and preserve our Christian Sabbath or great calamity will befall us. Destroy the Sabbath, with its sacred instruction and uplifting influences, and you strike a death blow at the very vitals of our religion. The Christian Sabbath is the bulwark of our religion and of civilization. Material as well as spiritual prosperity is conditioned upon the proper observance of the Lord's Day. God has said, "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, and the holy of Jehovah honorable; and shalt honor it, not doing thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words; then shalt thou delight thyself in Jehovah; and I will make thee to ride upon the high places of the earth; and I will feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father; for the mouth of Jehovah hath spoken it" (Isa. 58:13, 14). Let us be "in the Spirit on the Lord's Day" and "remember it to keep it holy."

General Conference Finals.

By Prof. J. A. Garber, Secretary, Executive Committee

We are now ready to write the final words of instruction preparatory to the coming General Conference. Certainly no reader of the Evangelist can plead ignorance on a single point. For, in addition to the contributions by others, the Editor has done his utmost to popularize Winona and to prepare the mind of our people for a great conference.

Transportation

Knowing that many conferences had enjoyed the advantages of the certificate plan devised by the Railroad Administration, we feared that our people would ask why no effort was made to secure for them the one and one-third fare. Not wanting to be charged with default we communicated with the proper authorities. Realizing that it would be difficult to secure the required minimum number of 250 tickets we deemed it worth while to make the effort. If we fail it will not be for want of people, but because many of them do not travel by rail. While in southern Ohio we learned of churches that would send scores and dozens of delegates. All who will should purchase the going ticket on the certificate plan (See detailed instructions in the last Evangelist). Should we fail to secure the 250 ticket purchasers you will have to return at the rate of full fare, which, in most cases, all would have to do. Thus we have tried and you have a chance to save some expense.

Board and Room

As previously announced, the rates at The Inn, which is regarded as headquarters for us, will be as follows: Room and Board for two in a room, $9.00 per week; a charge of $5.00 per week will be made for children under six years occupying, of course, the same room with their parents. These quotations were made by the Management without any persuasion of ours, and we are assured satisfactory entertainment. They tell us that some needed improvements have been made in the building. Other places, we presume, will be open at about the usual prices. Families desiring cottages for light housekeeping may secure them without serious difficulty.

Large Attendance

The prospect of relatively low cost of travel and entertainment should encourage our people to attend in unusually large numbers. The late date promises a conflict with the opening of public schools, but in some sections this difficulty has been removed through the postponement of the opening of school. It is needless to say that a large attendance is earnestly desired. Come early and remain until the closing session if at all possible. Those nearby people finding it impossible to spend the entire week at Winona will be helped by coming for the week-end. Sunday promises to be a record-breaking day. Sunday school will open at 9:00 o'clock at the call of Superintendent Harry E. Price, Brother J. W. Dewey having had to decline the superintendency. Brother Price will doubtless bring his entire Nappanee school to Winona. Goshen has been doing so for several years. Other Indiana schools may follow suit. The morning sermon will be preached by Dean J. Allen Miller. At the Bi-centennial Celebration in the afternoon addresses will be delivered by Brethren Shively, Burnworth and Jacobs. The evening message will be brought by Brother Reagan.

Real Brethren

The stage is set for a real conference and we can have

Love of the Brethren, the Proof of Discipleship. By Ora E. Oxley

In this subject we have two things that we will consider, first, LOVE, second, discipleship of Jesus. Love is one of the many things that is easily talked about, but not so easily defined and still harder to find it exemplified in the lives of the professors of Jesus Christ. A colored man once said when he was in love he felt like the angles of heaven had poured "lasses" all over him and when asked how he felt when he was out of love, he said he felt like a "lot of little devils had come and licked it all off." Now this is a true illustration of the way human love works, but the love we speak about here is a love that came from God. It will abide because it is from above. When I speak about "Brethren," I do not mean those who belong to the Brethren church only, but all of God's people, black or white, male or female. And in fact we can not have this great love that comes from God unless we love all brethren. A minister in a popular church said he loved the black people, but he wanted them to keep their side of the street. How about when he goes to heaven, if he does? A question.

Have you noticed how we came to have the love and how it shows itself? It is because the sinful, suffering condition of this old world touched the heart strings of God that he gave us of his love. He so loved us that he gave his Son for us. This is a proof of true love. There are those who say they love God, yet down deep in their hearts they have ill-feeling or even hatred for a brother man. Let them read 1 John 4:20, which says, "If a man say I love God and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his own brother whom he has seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" Now this is the first proof of discipleship, that we love our brethren. We need in our hearts that love which is from above that will cause us to love others. We need that love which will cause us to reach out to every soul as to our own brothers in need. Especially do we need a larger portion of that true love for those who are members of the church of Christ with us. We cannot say we are Christ's disciples unless we have this. That love will cause us to stand by them in the work of the church, to work in harmony and to do our part in bearing the financial burden of the church. We say we love our brethren and love the church, and then we let others do all the work and give all the money and the church gets nothing to prove that we really do love it.

We need to bear full proof of our love and so of our discipleship in many ways. We hear of ministers who are leaving the pulpit to take up other lines of work. Why? Because, in a large measure, of the lack of the proof of true discipleship among the churches. People do not love one another and the church enough to support and to carry on the work of the church in a business like way. Men love their own business and look after it in a businesslike way. And they are faithful to its interests in every way. But they have not love for the church and their brothers in Christ enough to do their part in the Lord's work. There are those who love pleasure enough to drive their automobiles many miles to a "fair," but they have no time to attend prayer meeting. They love the shows and amusement places, but do not care for the church. And yet they are members! Brethren! What is wrong? They need the love that is the proof of discipleship. They need to heed the words of the Lord, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead." They need to get out into the deep waters of God's love. Too it if we are real Brethren. Will any brother of the New Testament type say or do anything that will mar the unity of the church? Will he not out of love for his brothers accord them the same rights he desires for himself? Will he not cultivate a fuller understanding of possible points of disagreement that differences may be reduced to a minimum? Will he not maintain a teachable spirit and a prayerful mind? Will he not always remember "One is your Master and all ye are brethren?"

many stay at the water's edge and gaze out upon the ocean of God's love. We must get in, be immersed, be overcome completely with his love. Then the pastors will not have to care for the members as for a little child, and the leaders too will be strong and friendly and kind. Then we shall dwell together and work together in harmony and with power. Then prayer meetings will be revived, souls will be converted and there will be rejoicing around the throne of God. There is too much hatred in our hearts; too little of the true love of God. We are killing the church, ruining our own spiritual lives and destroying our hope of glory. If you are a child of God you will know it by 1 John 3:14. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the BRETHREN."

About the saddest thing I ever saw was what was called "the devil's lane." It was a lane built between two farms both of which owners professed to love God. Do you say you love God and not your brother? But both of you expect to go to heaven. To which part of heaven do you expect to go? If you do not love your brother whom you see, how can you love God whom you have not seen? Remember love of the brethren is the proof of discipleship.

Teacher Training Progress

We are glad to report the graduation of another class. The work had been slightly delayed but through persistent effort the students finished their work in fine form. No little credit is due the teacher, Brother E. L. Miller, who believes in having a class each year. Those graduating are, Allice I. Wolfe, Ethel Conaway, Mrs. Anna Miller, Walter Hibbs and Charles Solomon. The Uniontown school may take pardonable pride in their training work which, doubtless, will be continued without interruption.

A Successful Year

Because of serious interruptions last fall when classes were being organized we questioned our ability to make a gratifying report at the end of the year. The recent tabulation of results shows that our fears were not well grounded. Against the 19 classes with 116 students of last year we now report 27 classes with 254 students. This encouraging record should inspire other schools to take advantage of the offer made recently. By certifying the organization of a class between this and General Conference you will qualify on point 5 of the Standard. Do it now. J. A. GARBER.

The difference between life without Christ and life with Christ is the difference between ebb and flow—the one is growing emptier and the other is growing fuller.—Charles Cuthbert Hall.

If the owner of the beast that was to bear Christ through the streets of Jerusalem refused the disciples, they were to say, "The Lord hath need of him." How strange that the Lord should have need. Here in the same sentence is expressed Lordship and necessity, royalty and need. It seems unthinkable that the Master of men and things should be in need. And yet it is true according to the divine plan from the beginning that God needs man. He needs him redeemed to bring joy to his Fatherly heart and he needs every redeemed man's help to save the evil world.—B.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

"Some Invincible Things." By W. T. Lytle

TEXT: Herod said that John the Baptist was risen from the dead.—MARK 6:14

This incident brings to us a wonderful story of a human soul. King Herod was a Sadducee. He belonged to that particular class that believed death ended all and there was no ground for hope of immortality. He held the opinion that death came to man as to the beast, or the leaf and the grave ended all this little episode of life.

Of course for a man with as black a past as Herod this would be a very comforting way to look at things, a very satisfactory philosophy of life and death. The record of his life brings us face to face with a career of a man whose works were evil continually; it is a biography that is blackened from first to last with sin.

Many a villain has been content to pass out with only one great crime to his record; it was true of Achan the thief; Judas, the betrayer; Arnold, the traitor; Macbeth, the murderer; but Herod, like Wilhelm, the second, gathered all the crimes common to man in his arms. His selfish ambition causes him to turn against every friend and to tear asunder the most sacred ties. Even his own wife he strangled and thrust aside. Then in defiance of all decency and even the public sentiment of his day he boldly drove down the public thoroughfares, in all his royalty, sinning against God and the homes of his day.

In that hour the people muttered their indignation, and the reformer, "John the Baptist," hurled his voice like a flaming sword at his royal highness and brought forth conviction to a guilty soul. Herod, in an angry mood and for his oath's sake, had John the Baptist beheaded, and John's disciples laid his body to rest. They soon had completed their task and Herod returning to his palace, counted the incident, as far as he was concerned, to an end.

But memory keeps record and here we see the evidences of it. When conscience is offended it remains like an ever burning fire. Months have passed and at a banquet while Herod was conversing with his guests, the conversation was turned toward the acts and the deeds of a new teacher, a wonderful young Rabbi who had appeared in Galilee. Memory aroused the conscience of Herod and he became a coward so that his voice trembled and in his cowardice he rose from his throne crying as a man in pain, and in his travail of soul, he declared "That John the Baptist was risen from the dead."

Gone now are all his fanciful dreams that death ends all, and he stands in awe convinced beyond a doubt that there was another life and the horror of it faces him.

This incident ought to convince us of some of the invincible things in life, that have their abiding place in man's soul.

Conscience is Invincible

May we be mindful of the evidence of this fact, my friends. One weapon after another may be used against the intellect and attacks may be made upon man's finer sensibilities in a number of ways, but heed this admonition, conscience stands like a strong and mighty fortress, victorious midst the universal ruins. Conscience like color that is fast finds its place in the very fiber of man's soul. Certainly, neglect will sear conscience, and as a result sin will dull its sensitiveness, but remember when the "Word of Truth" is heralded by the man of God it always awakens the most dormant.

Our CONSCIENCE is universal in power. The poets tell us that it is like an avenging messenger and the scientists tell us that what the magnetic pole is to the needle, conscience is to the thought of man. Day by day we behold our conscience at work; no matter how we try to lose ourselves amidst the various activities of life or how we are pressed in our different vocations, we often feel the grip and sting of conscience. It follows us wherever we go. As an illustration of this let me remind you of the "Conscience Fund" at Washington. Note the many confessions of various crimes that have been made because persons have not been able to get away from their consciences. Friends, conscience lays hands upon the doer of wrong as strong as an iron vice and with all its tenacious hold, and the only way of release is by surrender.

Here is a worthwhile illustration, a story told by Prof. Park, of an English judge. One day, sitting with his fellow judges, fully conscious of his possessions of wealth, also of the honor of his office, the aged judge passed sentence upon a young servant who had slain his master, hidden his body, and stolen his gold, and fled into the city. After passing the sentence the aged judge laid aside his robes and the wig which he wore (representing the dignity of the law), passed into the prisoner's box, and standing there beside the boy, the old judge of the past made this confession,—"that in his youth he had slain his master, robbed his treasure box and had used the money for travel and study having succeeded in getting himself fitted for one position after another until he had mounted the height of his ambition in the present office as the judge to whom many had looked for justice." Success was his, but not peace. His soul by sin had become a solitary dismal place, yet there was not the quietness that gives rest. Day after day his conscience scourged him, night after night vision of ball and chain, and prison haunted him like the hound after the stag, and in the dark hush of the weary hours of night, conscience drew hideous faces upon the canvas in the gallery of his memory.

No weary traveler tired and hungry for bread ever hungered like this poor mortal; no lips were ever so parched and no thirst was ever so haunting as that which caused this old judge to seek the waters of justice. The conscience cried out for an everlasting JUSTICE. This is one of the experiences common to man. This experience happened to Judas, and in tones of bewildering pain he cried out, "I have shed innocent blood." It was Peter's experience when at the early dawn he listened to the rooster crow, and he realized he had denied his Master. This was David's experience and many were the times he watched in the night the picture of the troops as they marched away to battle and an innocent man placed at the head so he would be killed, that he might have his companion, for his wife. It was that experience that made him say, "I cannot build the temple for I have shed blood."

Many are the reminders of guilt to the guilty, that conscience points out until the soul becomes reconciled to the prosecution and punishment that it deserves or until some one comes alone to take away its guilt.

Memory is Invincible

Conscience has made and is ever making cowards of men, and it will continue to do so as long as conscience is a supreme moral faculty. From the decree of conscience, man unaided cannot flee; just as long as God is God, right will be right, and wrong will be wrong. Just that long Herod with all others of his type will tremble at every unknown face that appears; every foot that approaches in the corridor of the palaces of sin will bring a quickening of guilt, and the crimes of the past will appear with all their living presence. We might be able to lose our sight, hearing and our sense of smell, also all our limbs might be severed, but one thing we touch at our own peril, and that is our conscience. It proves an angel to keep watch at the gate of man's soul.

We may busy ourselves to the extent that in our hilarity, there will seem to be no reckoning taking place, or we can keep ourselves as men drunken, and stupid by the various ways we storm this moral faculty, but memory keeps record, and in the "sometime," as memory has bound together the years of conduct into a continuous whole, it will read aloud what has been written. Nothing seems to be forgotten. It takes only a suggestion, some likeness of the past to prompt conscience to open memory's record and the account becomes clear and stands open to haunt its victim. Many are the events that bring forth past deeds. We can find in Paul's experience many a thing that happened on his missionary journeys would revive again the attitude he had formerly taken against the church and the believers, and many a time did he make full confession because conscience opened the record of the past until he would plead and pray that he might yet prove his ministry to the place of making full restoration for the past.

Events like the presenting of a farthing make men think of the price that was paid to the betrayer for the Master. Events like beholding a mite, makes us think of the woman at the treasury casting in her two mites. When we listen to the playing of the patriotic music by band and on the piano we are made to think of what our liberty has cost the heroic of the past. Every time we think of sacrifice, it makes us recall to mind that "he was bruised for our iniquities, and that by his stripes we are healed."

The many contributions to the Washington Conscience Fund that have been made by various transgressors, who have evaded the hands of the law, testify to the fact that memory cannot be conquered and will demand that we make full restoration. Truly "the way of the transgressor is hard."

The value of the memory to the good man is highly appreciated for by it he recounts the many things that enable him to grow into the image of God, but the bad man becomes as one haunted when his memory recalls the things of the past and he is ever trying to justify his selfishness and crimes, as Herod and others tried in the past to do.

What Must Man Do?

Lastly, as conscience and memory are invincible, what must man do? That is the question that demands our careful consideration. There is an invincible plan; GOD has given man a way of escape. Not that he can escape suffering. Herod was not made free of the crime of the murder of this reformer. That would be unthinkable. Herod like all mankind must suffer for his sin. Sin had left its record on the very personality of Herod, but with that he became convinced that death did not end all and in his agony refreshed by the lash of conscience he recalled his horrible deed.

Therefore we must be mindful that sin is not blotted out by law, and for us to seek justification by justice administered at the hands of the executioners of the law, does not bring peace to our souls. He must seek peace and light in the midst of the darkness of sin in the Hope of all ages. He alone can enable a man to walk uncondemned from this life of sin into the eternal life of righteousness and truth. In conclusion, we must be mindful of these facts. We cannot hide one crime by committing another. We need to answer the demand and cry of our own conscience, when we have made it subject to the Christ, by confessing our guilt, seeking daily to make restoration as a true penitent believer, knowing that, "He (CHRIST) is able to deliver us."

The court of justice being in the soul of man; and as conscience, the prosecutor, brings the transgressor to judgment, and as memory calls the witness at the end of every day, may we be able to say as those who are kept by grace through faith,—

But drops of grief can ne'er repay

The debt of love I owe,

Here Lord I give myself away

'Tis all that I can do,"

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Quiet Hour. By Mrs. George S. Baer

OUR SCRIPTURE

And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith to his disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray. And he taketh with him Peter and James and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy; And saith unto them, My soul is exceedingly sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, and watch. And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him. And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me: nevertheless not what I will, but what thou wilt. And he cometh, and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? Couldst not thou watch one hour? Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak. And again he went away, and prayed, and spake the same words. And when he returned, he found them asleep again, (for their eyes were heavy) neither wist they what to answer him. And he cometh the third time, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: it is enough, the hour is come; behold, the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. Rise up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand. (Mark 14:32-42).

OUR MEDITATION

In the rush and turmoil of our present day the Quiet Hour comes to us as a calming blessing from God refreshing the soul. The very words suggest rest and composure. They speak of being alone with God! How beautiful is the thought! And how enriched and ennobled is the life that is found daily in the secret of his presence! When all else is excluded from the mind God speaks to the soul and listens to our inmost longings. I wonder if we realize our need of the Quiet Hour as we ought. Doubtless we have some feeling of our need; but do we understand how very important, how absolutely necessary it is? I once knew a dear, old, Christian lady who said, "The days when I have the most to do are the days when I spend the most time in prayer." Why was it? Because she knew that God gave wisdom for her plans and strength for her work. He is our silent partner and we must depend upon him for wisdom and strength for everything we do. Therefore we should undertake nothing without consulting him. No one can grow spiritually apart from God. And we cannot keep in touch with him unless we pray. Christ himself spent much time in prayer. On different occasions we find where he departed into the mountains and continued all night in prayer. If it was necessary for him to pray, who was Divine as well as human, certainly we poor, weak human beings should pray without ceasing, remembering that all we are or ever hope to be is by the grace and mercy of God.

When our trials and difficulties are more than we can bear we talk to our nearest friends or loved ones about them. Do we talk to God about them? Do we remember that he is our ever present help in time of trouble and that our weakness becomes strength through him when all else fails? Many times he allows us to be put to the test, and if through him, we win the victory we are rewarded with the development of traits of character which otherwise would lie dormant. Some of the most beautiful characters are those that have experienced the severest trials, but they have had their quiet hours to help them in their time of testing.

When blessings and enjoyments come into our lives we tell those who are near and dear to us, but do we, with praise and thanksgiving, tell God from whom cometh every good and perfect gift? It must bring great joy to the Father's heart to hear his children tell him of their appreciation of his blessings. We express our gratitude to our earthly friends for all of their little kindnesses but we so

The Meaning of the Kingdom.

By Dean J. Allen Miller, D.D.

I am to write for the Sunday school teachers and pupils on the subject indicated. The lesson is for study on September 7. Limited by the purpose and scope of this article we must necessarily confine our study to the large features of the subject, "The Kingdom of Heaven."

First. Let it be said that this subject is the theme of the Divine revelation expressed in its most sublime conception. It is the golden thread running through both Old and New Testaments. It is set forth in type, symbol and prophecy forecasted in the Old Testament. It is distinctly announced by John the Baptist, by Jesus and by the Apostles. In its inception it embraces the whole plan and purpose of God; in its unfolding and potential presence it embraces all the force and agencies that contribute essentially to its establishment; and in its consummation it sums up in realization the whole plan of God. It is the burden of our Lord's public and private teaching and preaching. It is the second petition in the Prayer our Lord taught his disciples, standing there next to the supreme thought in any and all prayer, the holiness of God. The expression, "The Kingdom of heaven," or its equivalent occurs almost one hundred and fifty times in the New Testament. This fact alone attests its supreme significance.

Second. To avoid a popular error and so also to avoid many difficulties in interpretation it must be said here that the church and the Kingdom represent two distinct and clearly defined ideas. One can not substitute either term for the other. That this is so let it be noted that the parables of Jesus center in the Kingdom idea. He never says the church is like, etc. He does say, The Kingdom of heaven is like, etc. The very simplest and clearest distinction between the two ideas may be stated as follows:

The church is the means by which, or the agency through which, God is working out his plan in this age. The church represents the Kingdom forces at work looking toward the goal, the consummation, the establishment of the Kingdom itself.

Upon the other hand the Kingdom is the goal or the end toward which all God's plans for this age point. The Kingdom thus lies yet in the future. The church stands related to the Kingdom as MEANS to an END.

From an altogether different point of view it may be said that the church is the body of Christ. Of this body Christ is himself said to be the Head. To change the figure again, the church is the Bride of Christ and Jesus is himself the Bridegroom. Thus it can be seen, as the New Testament also clearly indicates that the church is a called out, an elect, a chosen people.

On the other hand the Kingdom idea connotes also the idea of King, and that King is our Lord Jesus. He is the King of the Kingdom. He is nowhere said to be the King of the church. The elect live and reign with him.

Third. We may now inquire, What are the distinguishing marks of the Kingdom as revealed in the New Testament? Only the briefest statements can be made.

1. Jesus Christ will be King. When Pilate asked Jesus the question, "Art thou a King then?" Jesus replied, "Thou sayest that I am a King." In the same connection Jesus speaks of his Kingdom. Jesus Christ is the coming King. To this all agree.

2. The Kingdom will be universal. Both the Old and the New Testaments bear witness to the fact that the coming Kingdom will be universal. It will embrace within its sweep every nation. The Lordship of Jesus involves the universality of the Kingdom. "The kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever" (Rev. 11:15).

3. The Kingdom is not of the present order or world. Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world." World, the word Jesus uses, signifies the present order or regime. It includes humanity, and all the relations and activities of man. The Kingdom is not of this world-order. It is the order or regime that shall succeed upon the present order at the end of the present age.

The Kingdom will be the rule of the will of God. Absolute right and justice will obtain. The highest ideals of life will be realized. The spiritual will be given the supremacy. "Born of the Spirit" will be the characteristic epithet that will describe every one who enters this sovereignty. Loyal and willing obedience to the will of God will be given by all. "Righteousness will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea."

5. The earth will be the domain of the Kingdom. Throughout Old Testament prophecy we meet again and again the idea of a renewed and renovated earth, of an earth restored to Edenic splendor. This same idea is met with in the New Testament. "A new earth" is the expression used. Again it is said that the tabernacle of God shall be with men.

Fourth. Finally we may ask, What are the duties and tasks of the present and of the Christians? The answer to this question are clearly indicated in the New Testament. This too is the practical side of the study of this lesson.

1. Every Christian must exemplify the life of Christ. Our Lord gave his disciples the ideals of life. He indicated most clearly not only the beginning of the new life in a birth of the Spirit but also the characteristics that should mark the whole career. The daily life and the daily tasks are both to be in complete harmony with the great world-embracing purpose of God in Christ. The disciple is not above his Master but he should be like the Master.

2. Every Christian must be a herald of the Good News of the Kingdom. This is our Lord's last and supreme command. "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. So he said. Acts shows how Peter and John, Stephen and Philip, Barnabas and Paul did their best to obey the Lord's word. In Paul's own words he declares that he preached "the good news of the kingdom." The far larger part of our race is yet unevangelized. The task is not alone that of the few men and women who go into the "fields white unto the harvest." It rests upon every believer in every church.

3. Every Christian should be "zealous of good works." So Paul instructs us in Titus 2:14. In another passage, Ephesians 2:10, he says that we, the Christians, are God's workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works. In every day since Christ was upon earth, there has been much to be done for the uplift and betterment of men, women and little children in every community and in every state. This task is greater and more insistent today than ever before. It rests upon the Christian of every community to do his whole duty. He must set the example, inspire the ideal and vitalize the motive of all such endeavor. Except such tasks are done in the spirit of Christ they are not done at all.

A good education will teach us to look beyond utility to the beauty of things. One man sees wood in the forest, so many cubic feet, and thinks of what it will bring in the market. Another man sees beauty in the forest and hears the voices of the silence. When a trout leaps out of the water after a fly, one man thinks of his supper and how it would feel to have that fish cooked on the table before him. Another man enters into sympathy with the strange life under water and rejoices in the joy of the fish. Education has missed the mark if it does not lead us into sympathy with the beauty and mystery of life.

Our Young People at Work

G. C. Carpenter
SECRETARY

Winona Next. By Prof. J. A. Garber

As the time for General Conference draws nigh the thought of our young people turns toward Winona. Here many have had what they call "the time of their life."

Social Fellowship

Ample provision has been and is being made for social fellowship. Brother E. A. Rowsey has consented to serve as chairman of a committee which will plan and direct the social and recreational features. Among other things they plan to have a get-acquainted meeting, a hike and a C. E. breakfast. You will not want to miss any one of these events.

Conference Sessions

All fun and no study would prove disappointing. And, a good time is not incompatible with business for the King. There will be six conference sessions; four of a departmental nature and two of general character. The addresses will be delivered by Endeavorers of ability and experience. If each society would have at least one delegate in each of these sessions it would become practically new through the help brought back by that person.

Training Classes

If there is a demand, and there should be, we can arrange a class in Expert Endeavor. Persons completing this study will be prepared to conduct a similar class in the local church. Then Mission Study is to receive particular emphasis this year. Superintendent DeLozier is providing a supply of text-books entitled "Christian Americanization," from which you may secure the needed number for your society. Moreover, he will be glad to meet prospective leaders and instruct them how to lead a study class.

Prayer Meetings

It has been found quite helpful to have those accustomed to meet in the weekly prayer meeting at home to share in a union service while at Winona. On Sunday afternoon there will be a meeting for the Juniors under the supervision of our national superintendent, Miss Nora Bracken. Simultaneously, there will be a like meeting for the Intermediates under the direction of Mrs. H. H. Wolford. She writes that Elkhart has a membership of thirty, most of whom will be at Winona. Let other nearby societies follow their example. On Sunday evening the Endeavor hour will be in charge of Superintendent Boardman, and will be devoted to Life Work. Thus our tables are generously set and unless absolutely necessary you cannot afford to miss the feast of good things.

Your Statistics

Last Conference ruled that each departmental organization should collect its own statistics. Some months ago we provided our district officers with suitable blanks, which they mailed to the societies. Their returns have been delayed through the delay of presidents and secretaries. In one district about one-third of the societies have reported. Where are the other two-thirds? Wake up, folks! To fail to report is to deal unfairly with yourself and our beloved cause. To avoid further delay send your report to the undersigned at Winona Lake. District secretaries who have not sent in their summary will do likewise.

Remember Both Children

One of our district secretaries writes: "I cannot get away from the conviction that Christian Endeavor is one of the two legitimate children of the church, the Sunday school being the other. And if we neglect our children we shall some day awaken to regret it." After lamenting the seeming neglect of the first named child the writer urges that something be done in the coming conference to awaken our people to its need and value. The suggestion is well taken and we can only hope that the meetings at Winona will issue in such an awakening.

Helps on the Topic

It seems superfluous to announce through these columns that helps on the weekly prayer meeting topics are supplied on the Christian Endeavor page of the Angelus, but some of our people may not read regularly that interesting Sunday school paper. Last year the notes were ably written by Dr. Edwin E. Jacobs. Since his election to the presidency of Ashland College he has found it necessary by reason of other heavy duties to discontinue his valuable service for the Endeavorers. We regret Dr. Jacobs' voluntary withdrawal and take this opportunity of expressing our grateful appreciation of his good work. Beginning with September notes will appear weekly from the pen of another splendid layman and school man, Prof. E. G. Mason of West Salem, Ohio. He is an Ashland College man, being now a member of the Board of Trustees. He is Principal of the Congress High School. He is an enthusiastic Endeavorer, being a leader of his society and county officer. We heartily commend his comments and suggestions. Prayer Meeting committees will do well to make large use of the C. E. page of the Angelus.

"Are We Alive?" By H. H. Rowsey

At this time, as we read Matthew 28:19, we seem to hear the great CHALLENGE and command, given by our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, nearly two thousand years ago, come sounding and resounding down the ages. While the echo of this divine command is ringing in our ears, we hear the Macedonian call for HELP. We see the world with outstretched arms to America CALLING for Christian leadership. We are reminded that a blessing and a curse is set before us (Deut. 11:26-28).

Dear people of the Brethren church, what shall we do to show that we are alive? Shall we choose the wonderful blessing of God or his curse? I am sure you all will say with me, "we desire the blessing of God." You may say this, but do you mean it? You may read this and say you desire the blessing of God and a few minutes later you may talk and fight for your side of a business proposition, yet, when you have the opportunity to speak for Christ, you stammer a few words and blush, or, ten thousand times worse, you pass on without saying a word and the devil is patting you on the back because of the way you put over that crooked business proposition. Are you attending the services of your church? Are you giving to the support of your church? Do you ever speak a word for Christ? If you are doing none of these, you are false in your heart when you say you desire the blessing of God.

This old world is being poured out of the melting pot. The religious forces of the world can make it a fit place to live in if they will. There was never such an opportunity for SERVICE. The forces of evil are rallying to their banners and preparing for battle. We must be up and doing. This is one of the most trying times the church has faced since its organization. Will the Brethren church come out victorious?

Members of the Brethren church, your church today is facing the BIG things. You should have no place in your heart for that individual difference that is causing discord. The church and the big things she is trying to do need your whole heart. We have no place in the Brethren church for the quibbles and quarrels of the SLACKER. We must all get together and work (John 9:4).

Pastors of the Brethren church, from the viewpoint of a layman, we think some of you have failed to catch a vision of the conditions that surround you. The same old grind in the same old way will not meet the needs of today. Your message and plans must be adapted to the conditions and needs that exist now. What about those young people in your congregation whose hearts are yearning for a place to "prepare" and a place to get a "vision" for SERVICE? Why not have such a place in your church? You have kept the greatest church auxiliary—the Christian Endeavor out of your church long enough. Organize one as soon as possible. There is a young man or a young woman in your church on fire for God and with little encouragement you could line them up for full time Christian service. Have them enroll as Christian Endeavor Life Work Recruits that they may receive help from the greatest religious leaders of the day. WAKE UP, brother pastor, the young people of today are the LEADERS of the future.

Christian Endeavorers of the Brethren church, we CHALLENGE you to make your society the best in the National Union. Another CHALLENGE we wish to present is that issued to you by our Lord and Savior, who died for you. Think of the need. Do you not feel the CALL? Just now speak to God about this matter.—quietly, reverently. If you feel the call and will seriously sign the Recruit's Covenant given below, we would be very glad to hear from you. If you are interested, write us. For a college we most heartily recommend ASHLAND; meet me there in the fall of 1920.

Recruit's Covenant

"Feeling myself called by the Holy Spirit and trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise him I will from this day forth strive to shape the plans of my life so that I may give myself wholly to the service of Christ and the church.

Signed Think on these things."

Announcement

It is not too early to begin planning for Ashland College Night in your Christian Endeavor society. The Virginia Christian Endeavor Union established the Life Work Department last year, and at the present time we have a man from Ashland College, Brother E. A. Rowsey (cousin in the flesh), touring Virginia in the interest of Ashland College Night, which will be observed in Virginia as Life Work Recruit Night. The meetings to the present time have been a grand success. Every Christian Endeavor society in the city was represented at a meeting in Roanoke last Sunday.

MISSIONS

A Letter from South America

La Carlota Argentina, S. A.

June 4, 1919.

Dear Readers of the Evangelist:

Time flies so rapidly down here that I could scarcely believe it this morning when I discovered that about three months have passed since I last wrote you. But there is something to do every hour, and we are gradually working our way into new homes.

Recently we have visited two of the neighboring towns, Los Cisnes nine miles away, and Santa Eufemia eighteen miles from us. At Los Cisnes there are several believers, but only one family that we can actually count on. Several others say that they are Protestants but really, they are scarcely "lukewarm." Most of them mean it all right, but they have been away from all religious influences for a generation and some of them longer. Such isolation has its marked effect on one's religious zeal as well as on one's ways of living. To do as the Romans do when you are in Rome is much easier than to defend the Gospel and keep the faith. Few readers of the Evangelist can imagine what it would mean to be born and reared in such a land as this and have the privilege of seeing a pastor once in five or ten years, or perhaps less frequently, as it has been for some. I went into one home, where they told me that they were believers, the husband had been baptized when a baby and thought that little else was necessary. I asked if they had a Bible. At first they did not understand what I was asking about, so I took one out of my valise to show them. The wife was ready to buy it, when the husband took a notion to have a look first. He stirred around awhile among a pile of books and finally handed one to me to examine and see if it was what I was talking about. After hammering the dust off, I found that it was sure enough a copy of the Blessed Word, stored away there in safe keeping, like a buried talent. I tried to show them what a treasure they had, and before I left they promised to read it. We hope to visit them again soon. We would have gone before now, but there was a Bubonic scare in that town. In fact it was more than a scare for over twenty died. I understand that the danger has now passed and that there are no more cases, so we expect to go again soon and finish the canvass of the town.

At Santa Eufemia I found, I think about the most Godless set of people that I ever got among. I met with indifference, unbelief and scorn. I was unable to sell a single Bible, but found a few who had bought them before from the Bible coach. These I found were in trunks and other such places of safe-keeping. There was only one believer, a Swiss lady who gave us a welcome. She has a large German Bible which she said that she read every Holy Week. I expect to pay another visit to this town soon and put some literature in every home.

I have heard of a number of Protestant families at Canales, a town twelve leagues east of here, and expect to visit there soon and canvass the place with Bibles and tracts.

Here in Carlota we have been steadily at work. Our Sunday school shows a substantial growth. With a little special effort we had forty present on May 25, which is about all we could care for in our small room and with only two teachers. As it was a national holiday we gave them a little treat afterwards, cookies and cocoa. Last Sunday there was a Bull-fight staged just across the road from us at the Sunday school hour. In spite of that attraction and excitement, twenty children came. I took advantage of the occasion by distributing some five or six hundred tracts at the gate as the crowd came out. Nearly all seemed glad to receive the tracts and I believe that the majority of public sentiment is in our favor. Only one fanatical woman refused and as the lady accompanying her received one, she grabbed it out of her hands and threw it on the ground in as ugly a fashion as she knew how. She is a wealthy, ignorant woman who has the reputation of being very familiar with the priest.

It was a great joy to us last Sunday night to see the first real fruits of our labor when one man made the great confession, accepting Jesus as his Lord and the New Testament as his guide. He is of Swiss descent and is a fine fellow, with a wife and three children. Others profess to be interested and are studying the Bible.

We rejoice at the news of sufficient funds to buy a Ford for the itinerant and colportage work. Thus thousands can be reached who would otherwise have little chance of hearing the Gospel. We have not yet heard what the Easter offering was but we trust that it was the biggest ever.

Our winter is just beginning and old Jack Frost pays us nightly visits.

Fraternally yours,

WM. H. BOCK.

TAKE US WITH YOU

A lady was pleading with a poor, sinful girl, who had gotten far away from her mother's God, to come to Jesus for pardon and peace. Suddenly the girl turned to her.

"And have you been to him?" she asked.

"Yes, indeed, I have."

"And has he given you rest?"

"He has. Oh, thank God, he has. He is my Savior and Friend."

"Then take me with you. It would be easier to go with one who has been there before."

The personal touch—this is what the world needs.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Report of Bible Conference and Dedication of Spokane Church

Beginning with a fine sunrise prayer meeting, the Bible Conference held for one week previous to the dedication of the church building, began with a great blessing. During the conference, C. H. Ashman of Sunnyside, Washington, delivered many splendid addresses as well as Bible studies. Among them were, "The Sins of the Saints," "What a Man, What of the Night?" "Discerning the Signs of the Times," "The Apostasy," and five studies on Satan, answering who he is and what he does. W. S. Bell brought his usually strong messages on, "The Return of Christ, How—Why—When?" "A World's Peace and the Golden Age," "The Sonship of Jesus Christ," "The Three-fold Office of Christ," "The Brethren Church and Her Message," "A World's Federation and the End of Time," "The Empty Tomb," "The Message of the Cross," Dr. J. Allen Miller of Ashland College, will long be remembered for his great knowledge of the word of God and his ability to teach it to others. He gave us six studies on "Hebrews," three on the "Person, Work and Glory of Jesus Christ," three on the "Person, and Work of the Holy Spirit," and one splendid sermon on "The Reality of the Spiritual Life." Vianna Detwiler gave a short talk on Saturday afternoon on, "The Voluntary Dependence of Jesus." Dr. H. V. Wall of Long Beach, our field secretary of the Pacific Coast for the National Missionary Board, gave us his fine illustrated lecture on the Kentucky mission field.

Altogether the conference was most uplifting, having for its one main purpose, to glorify Christ. Every speaker was surely in the hand of God and filled with the Spirit. Long shall the Spokane Brethren remember the spiritual feast of this week. During the conference, two sessions were set aside for the conference, two sessions were set aside for the business of organizing the District of the Northwest of the Brethren church. C. H. Ashman was elected moderator, with R. Paul Miller as vice-moderator, Lillian Bowers of Spokane as clerk, and D. W. Early of Sunnyside as treasurer. A special feature of the organization was the forming of a District Missionary Board of five members consisting of the Sunnyside and Spokane pastors and three lay members. We are expecting great things of our new district and hope to soon have a strong aggressive organization pushing the work of Christ to the utmost.

Our dedication day was a decided success from every standpoint. Brother Bell gave a powerful address on "The Church of Jesus Christ." At the close of the address, the dedication offering was taken and $3,867 were raised by those present. Of this, about one-sixth was cash, the rest to be paid in by October 1, 1920. While this does not cover our indebtedness, it is a pretty good showing for a three year old church. That is, WE THINK SO! But say, you ought to have been here and seen the way Sunnyside showed what they think of Spokane! If the way they gave shows it, they sure think a lot of her. Brother Wall of Long Beach stood by to the tune of five hundred dollars. I would to God that the Brethren church had a thousand such veterans of the Cross.

This occasion has welded these two churches in the Northwest closer than almost anything else could. To see the way the Earlys, and the Rowlands and the Webers stood by to make things go, as well as the check for $200 from the Sunnyside church and Sunday school, made us all to realize greater than ever that we are all one in heart, faith, mind and purpose. Our heart's expression for the whole meeting is "Praise God."

Brother Bell is now following the conference with a short revival. What the result will be we cannot tell, for we have never attempted such a thing at this time of year before. But we will be greatly benefitted before it close we are certain. We covet the prayers of all, for our work in these parts has just begun and we go on to greater things.

R. PAUL MILLER.

SECOND BRETHREN OF PHILADELPHIA

It has been a long time since I have written for our valuable paper, but it was not because I have been idle. If the Lord is willing from this time on you will hear from me more frequently.

1. I will in a few words now state that on account of the extreme financial strain of our church, I was compelled to be absent as pastor a large part of each year, and was compelled to let my work remain in a formative condition.

2. During the last few years, primarily because of my absence, there gradually arose dissension between several of our officers. It very slowly and gradually grew worse until it became known to the laity and disintegration began less than a year ago.

3. Always when I could remain at home my work gradually came up, when away for a while it would run down. As I was compelled to be away on the average half of the time to make up finances, I saw I was attempting the impossible. My best friends for years accused me of committing sin to tie myself to pastoral work here in the city for 26 years when the Lord always blessed me in the evangelistic field. One dear brother 18 years ago said, Brother Bowman, if you will take the field, I will give you $300 a year towards your support." I said, "Brother, I have eight children and I have been away from home half of my life. My wife, the best woman I know, must be mother, father, and pastor half of the time, and now for me to take the field and place if possible a greater burden upon her, I cannot do it." He saw the point and never further pressed the claim.

Since that time my baby boy was born and he is now nearly 16. Six children are married. Two single ones are 800 miles from home and my 16 year old boy is now well able to take care of himself. I am now 57, with one child to care for and better prepared for evangelistic work than ever in my life. I can take my wife with me part of the time (and she is an ideal personal worker, ten months younger than I, looks ten years younger.) After much prayer and careful thought I have decided to resign from all pastoral work and to take the evangelistic field at least eight months out of twelve. My resignation will go in effect October 15. I will then be open for calls for revivals, or lectures on prophecy, etc.

3. I decided to ask the General Missionary Board to help settle the internal difficulties of the church, and to assist the church, with my help, to get a suitable pastor and give me a free footing for a while. After all difficulties had been fully and finally settled I handed in my resignation. A consecrated man who has the cause at heart and is willing to endure a little hardship and do some hard patient work can gradually but surely build up a permanent work here.

If some mission boards or board would furnish $300 a year for a few years, then help to secure a good missionary pastor, who could give all of his time to the Cause, this work would much more rapidly go forward. Otherwise the pastor would have to be an evangelist and by the aid of his local help the work would slowly but I think surely come up. A willing worker with a strong constitution could bring this work up by this latter method.

The almost desperate efforts to meet our financial obligations have been and are our chief trouble. I struggled hard here, one time the church owed me between seven and eight hundred dollars. I placed a mortgage of $400 on my own house to meet my obligations. All this they paid back. I turned all money from the evangelistic field into the church treasury for years. Out of less than a living salary I have given $3.00 a week to our church. Cost of living doubled but my salary remained the same. My wife received a small sum from her mother's, and I about twice as much from my fathers' estate, besides I borrowed $1,000 out of my life insurance, making a total of more than $1,300 which I have given in addition to my salary in the last few years. The church now owes me over $300, leaving a balance, I gladly and freely give, out of my own pocket of $1,000. This in addition to one and 1-2 tenths I give regularly is all I dare do.

My heart and soul is in this work and I expect to enthusiastically (financially and otherwise) stand by it, and as I have always made it easy for all pastors through my evangelistic effort, so I will lighten rather than make heavy the burdens of the pastor who will take this work.

As stated above, these are the main reasons why I have resigned for evangelistic work.

As this is the first time in my life that I shall be free from all pastoral care I will be better able to do evangelistic work than ever before.

THE PASSING OF A BRETHREN CHURCH

The Rosedale Brethren church was dedicated in February, 1884; it was formally abandoned Sunday, July 20, 1919. But why this dissolution? Why this passing of a Brethren church when we should be organizing new ones? The answer can be given in a few words; but permit us a word of history. Rosedale was, thirty-five years ago, a beautiful village adjacent to the city of Johnstown, Pennsylvania. The population, small at first, continued to increase until some years ago, when the community was invaded by the Cambria Steel Company. It is not the object of this article to give an account of the extent of the operations of this corporation, suffice it to say, that this steel company has purchased the entire community. Not a foot of land is now in the hands of private ownership. This has of course included the church. So in answer to the above question will say, that the dissolution of the Rosedale Brethren church was not the result of any internal disagreement but of industrial extension and expansion. The purchasing of an entire community is of small consequence to a corporation like the Cambria Steel Company.

July twentieth will long be remembered. It was for the people of Rosedale, Home Coming Day. No services had been held in the church for about a year. The people of the community as they disposed of their properties moved to the city of Johnstown and colored folks occupied the homes. (Rosedale is now a "Little Africa.") In order that the congregation might properly disorganize it was deemed necessary to call the membership together in a special service. The service was arranged for and advertised by the official body. There were two sessions on this special day—afternoon and evening. Lunch was served at the church between sessions. The attendance was large, interest good, everybody was agreeable, and feeling ran deep—too deep for words. The early part of the afternoon was devoted to business. Arrangements were made for the sale of the furnishings of the church, letters were granted—about 125 at this time, disposition was made of the money realized from the sale of the church. A portion of this money was given to Ashland College and the various mission boards. The balance was given to the four Brethren churches of the Conemaugh valley, each in proportion to the number of members received from the Rosedale church. The First and Third churches of Johnstown are the chief beneficiaries.

This business session was followed by the rendering of a most interesting and inspiring program, as arranged by the committee. It is of interest to note that the first address of the day was given by Elder Benjamin Goughnour, the first pastor of the Rosedale church; the closing words were spoken by Brother W. S. Baker, the last pastor. Brother Geo. H. Jones, at one time pastor at Rosedale, gave a most interesting address. A number of short talks were given by the laity. This church was well served by efficient pastors during its history. Space will not permit the mention of their names.

It is impossible to take a measure of the influence for good of any church in the lives of individuals. The opportunity of the Rosedale church for the molding of character and the influencing of the individuals for Christ was unique. Rosedale was never cursed with the saloon, or the theater and only for short intervals by the dance hall. The church was the community center, to it the people came, especially young folks. The Sunday school and Christian Endeavor were always live organizations. Naturally there was a lasting impression for good in the lives of many. The congregation produced two ministers, Brother H. E. Eppley and the writer. But the giving of two preachers is not by any means the limit of the good work of this church. There have gone out from this little village church a number of efficient and consecrated laymen who are today serving Christ and the church in no mean way.

As we sat through the services of this day it was difficult to realize that this was "the last time." It seemed to us that God's people must continue to worship here. The interior of the church was in good condition, the congregation was large and inspiring, and the singing was never better. Well, some of us felt a little like Peter on the Mount. May I be forgiven a personal reference. It was here that I was cradled; here that I found my Master; here that I received inspiration and encouragement in his service and was finally ordained and sent out to my life work. When the time came for me to speak I tried to tell of the influence of the church in my own life. It was a miserable failure. There are some things which can be felt but not expressed. Yes, the Rosedale church has passed, but it still lives. Work done for Christ is never lost. In the passing of this beautiful little village into the hands of a corporation there is no small number of us who feel that we have said, "Good bye" to home and church, but may we live in the present and for the future and permit God to use us for his glory. ASHLAND COLLEGE Y. M. C. A. SERVICE

To all new men who are planning to enter Ashland College this fall we wish to say that the college Y. M. C. A. extends to you

A Cordial Welcome

When you arrive at Ashland look for a man with "College Y. M. C. A." on his coat sleeve. Just remember this welcome, and know this that a man will be there anxious to see that your trunks are sent to the college and that you have no trouble or inconvenience in finding the way to your new home. ON TUESDAY afternoon and evening the Y. M. C. A. men will help you find your rooms and prepare for pleasant and profitable living in your new environment.

On Wednesday there will be a social function under the auspices of the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.

II. A Big "Retreat"

We are now planning to have all the committeemen of the Young Men's Christian Association and also every new man who cares to enjoy such a rich fellowship to attend this retreat. We expect to leave Ashland Thursday afternoon and go to Savannah Lake. We will camp out if the weather permits. We can secure a building for all meetings that need to be held indoors. The physical environment is very attractive. We can boat, swim or fish during the recreation hours.

It is the desire of the writer that every committeeman of the organization be at the retreat. We will plan in a general way our program of work for the year. The duty of each committee will be discussed. For fear that I do not have time to write to each man on the cabinet may I ask you to be thinking of your department and bring your plans and policy in writing so we can have a very tangible starting point. "Our motto is 'A bigger opportunity hence a bigger responsibility.' Pray and plan to make this 'Retreat' a memorable event, one that shall live and bring forth fruit in the lives of our fellow students.

The retreat begins Thursday, September 18 and closes Friday after the night session. Every new man is invited.

III. Service to Our College by Serving Her Sons

The Y. M. C. A. of Ashland College is an indigenous, spiritual, campus movement composed of students and faculty, for the purpose of serving young people who come to college to better prepare themselves to cope successfully with the complex problems of modern life. I speak not only for the cabinet but also for the faculty when I say to the young people who expect to enter college: We are ready to make your college life a real charm from the day you enter until the sacred memories of your Alma Mater become treasures that time cannot steal.

Suffer Little Children. By Alice Manning Dickey

They lay, by the trodden roadside, thin and pale, ragged and dirty, snuggled in each other's arms and sleeping as heavily as if camions and ambulances and transport wagons were not constantly rumbling past—sleeping in just the way any other little boy sleeps at night in his good comfortable bed, or any other little girl in what is still not more than a crib.

The Red Cross nurse who spied them lying there in the dusty grass and took them back to the hospital with her, wrote home a few days later:

"They do not know what has become of either father or mother! Can you imagine it? Two little children, eight and six, no bigger than Paula and Bobby, with no home, no people, facing in their baby way the problems of existence which have discouraged grown men. I tell you, my dear, here in France the agony of the wounded and the groans of the dying are not so hard to bear as the suffering of the little children.

"As to Victor and Yvonne, if I can find nobody to claim them, I shall label them 'mine!' They are so brave, so good! And I shall keep them both, for they must not be separated. That would be too cruel."

But even as she wrote a Greater Power ruled otherwise. Within the week, she had died in the influenza epidemic. Her friends in America never heard from her again, and no one has been found to tell what was the fate of little Victor and Yvonne.

To get a real picture of War, unaffected by adult pragmatism, one should be able to look into the brain of the little French child. Many of the little brains, of course have given away under the terror, shock and privation, and today humane people, through special schools in France, are trying to bring back reason to the hundreds of twelve or thirteen year old children who have been reduced to the mentality of four years. But the other little children, those who have come through the terrible experiences, who have passed through bombardments, slept in cellars, in dripping mines, by the roadside; who have lost their fathers, watched their mothers carried away into Germany, been part of the tragic possession of refugees over and over again; who have been hungry, cold, homeless, friendless—what do these little minds think about, what questions do they ask themselves?

Brought up to see church and pray to God, to honor their fathers and their mothers and believe in human kindness, what effect must all this only partly understood horror have on their attitude toward God and the world?

There was little Jeanne Dupres, for instance. When the Germans captured the town in which she lived, and carried away every boy baby, she was dragged from her go-cart by a burly German who, finding her to be a girl, dashed her to the pavement. She was permanently crippled. What thoughts does little Jeanne conceal behind the smile with which she still manages to brighten her pretty face? To be sure, she has a grandmother to care for her—a grandmother whose face bears the marks of terrible memories; who has seen war take away the father of her little grandchild, and has watched her daughter marched away into Germany never to return. And though they are poor as poor can be, yet to have a grandmother is a big piece of fortune when one remembers all the little girls who have nobody.

What would the little children of France do without the grandmothers? In every village we see them, slow of hand and foot, sad of heart, confused of brain, taking up again the cares of motherhood. They cannot do much, and—this we should not forget—what they can do will be for only a little time. Little children—grandmothers! On these two are built much of the hope of France; for 50 per cent of the male population of France under 31 years of age died in the war.

Victor and Yvonne are only two of thousands of little fatherless French children of similar experiences. On the lists of The Fatherless Children of France, an American organization co-operating with a similar one in France of which Marshal Joffre is the head, there were 60,000 little needy children at the time of the armistice, for whom aid had not been found. Some of them had mothers or were being sheltered by some needy female relative, but the fathers of all had done fighting for the peace of the world.

This American organization for more than three years has been seeking to supplement the tiny pension of 10 cents a day granted by the French Government to its war orphans at the time of the early disasters, with an additional ten cents. There have been many warm-hearted Christian men and women who have been willing to pledge $36.50 a year (10 cents a day) to care for a child, and such a pledge has immediately constituted such man or woman the "godfather" or "godmother" of a child assigned by the headquarters of this organization. Letters have then begun to pass back and forth, and soon the sad heart of the little protegee has grown warm and happy again. Fortunately children forget!

With the war "over," other interests have seized upon the world, and these little hungry homeless children are in danger of being forgotten. Their faith in God, their whole attitude toward the world in whose government they will some day have a part—if they live—depends upon the spirit of that world now toward them. Is it to be the spirit of Christ which said "Suffer little children to come unto me," or the spirit of the Pharisee who passed by on the other side?

These children should not be considered the children of any one country—even if it were as rich as France is poverty-stricken after the terrible destruction of war—but wards of a world made safe through their father's sacrifice.

If every Christian in the United States would give just $1.00 to help care for these little ones, their problem would soon be solved: and if all those who are able to do so would make themselves responsible for just one child for a year ($36.50) a new belief in the providence of God, a new love and thankfulness, would wipe out the memory of horror and suffering and the unthinkable atrocities which these children have witnessed.

For information as to donations and adoptions, write to Mrs. Walter S. Brewster chairman Special Campaign Committee, Fatherless Children of France, 410 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago. A little booklet of letters from French children will be sent to anyone interested who will inclose a stamped self-addressed envelope. Chicago, Illinois.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

TICHY-REED—Mr. Edward Tichy of this vicinity and Miss Fern Reed of Garwin, Iowa, were united in marriage at the home of the bride, June 25, 1919. There were a large gathering of friends and relatives to witness the ceremony. They will live on a farm near the Carlton Brethren church. Ceremony by the undersigned. FREEMAN ANKRUM.

IN THE SHADOW

EVANS—Annabel Evans was born in Licking county, Ohio, August 5th, 1862. With her parents she moved to Decatur county, Iowa in 1862, where, in 1884 she was married to C. S. Evans. There are five living children, Mrs. Victor Hull, Mrs. Lyman Parsons, Mrs. Henry Davis, Unice and Russell, as well as six grandchildren. The husband survives her.

Sister Evans has been a faithful member of the Brethren church for many years and noted for good works. She suffered but a short time, passing away June 3, at the age of 56 years, 9 months and 28 days. Funeral services were conducted from Crown Chapel by her pastor, a large crowd attending. G. T. RONK.

LOOSE—Irvin Alvin Loose, son of Martin and Amelia Loose, was born in Thompson township, Seneca county, Ohio, July 13, 1888. He departed this life June 24, 1919, aged 30 years, 11 months and 11 days. Death was caused by an abscess which resulted from an attack of influenza last winter.

June 17, 1909, Brother Loose was married to Miss Luella Biltman, to which union were born three children, a son and two daughters. These with the mother, two sisters and a brother, survive him.

At the age of 18 he united with the Brethren church at Fremont, Ohio, and continued faithful in his Christian duties to the end.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Holderman, pastor of the United Brethren church near the home of the deceased, assisted by the writer. Interment in York Chapel cemetery near Clyde, Ohio.

H. M. OBERHOLTZER.

JOHNSON—Esther, daughter of Samuel and Cathrine Teeter, was born at New Enterprise, Pa., April 13th, 1861, and departed this life August 15th, 1919, aged 58 years, 4 months and 2 days. In 1893 she moved to Indiana and was married to Tunes H. Johnson. Two children came to the home, a daughter, Virgie, and a son, Harry. These still are living.

She united with the Church of the Brethren in 1877, and died in the faith, after spending a life of usefulness in Christ. To one such, death has no pang, but only means crossing over to a life of Eternal sunshine at the Savior's right hand. May we all live to stand the test at the last sad hour. The funeral service was in charge of Geo. L. Studebaker, of Muncie, assisted by L. L. Teeter of Moreland and the writer, pastor of the Oakville Brethren church. Burial in the Miller cemetery near the Fall Creek Church of the Brethren.

W. R. DEETER.

Our best friends are not those who make life easy for us; our best friends are those who put courage, energy and resolution into our hearts. If you can wake up a young man, arouse his sleeping and undiscovered powers, so that he will make a fortune or do a brave thing with his own hands and brain, that were infinitely better to do for him than if you were to give him a fortune as a present.—F. R. Miller.

God writes the gospel, not in the Bible alone, but in trees and flowers.—Luther.

often forget to thank God who makes possible friends and friendship. He crowds many blessings into our lives and we selfishly enjoy them. Perhaps to them would be added still greatest blessings if we would recognize and thank God for his providing hand in our lives. If we would tarry more in our upper rooms we would realize more abundant blessings and enlargement of life. We expect power from above at the same rate of speed which moves the things of the world today but God's ways are not man's ways and, therefore, through our impatience many blessings are lost.

I know of no better way of observing the Quiet Hour than by setting aside a definite portion of time every day, if possible in the early morning, for quiet meditation and direct communion with God. Any time in the day that seems most practicable may be selected, but the early morning hour is best because then our bodies are rested and our minds are fresh and clear. Just as firmly as I believe that the first tenth of our income belongs to God do I believe that the first and the best of each new day belongs to him. He gave his best for us, surely we want to do no less. I would no more think of beginning the day without food for the spiritual body than to think of beginning the day without food for the physical body. The two go hand in hand and we cannot deprive ourselves of either without injury. A quiet inner room, a few verses from God's word, our prayer, and then silent waiting for the still small voices to speak to us is the best way to begin the day for God. The Quiet Hour has meant so much to me that it is not "A Perfect Day" unless both opened and closed with God.

OUR PRAYER

Our Father, who art in heaven, it is with grateful and yet humble hearts that we come into thy presence because thou hast invited us to come. We thank thee for the power and influence of prayer. When we pause to think how restless and empty our lives would be if there were no avenue of approach unto thee and of the great joys and blessings that come to us daily because of our communion with thee, we are made to appreciate more and more thy presence and to surrender our lives more fully unto thee. Wilt thou help us daily to call upon thee with power and to grow into thy likeness. Teach us to pray as thou didst teach thy disciples to pray. May we not be self-centered in our petitions, asking for ourselves alone, but for the distressed people about us and for the sin-sick and suffering world. May we know the joy and privilege of true prayer that does not stop with the mere asking. Forgive us of our sins and may we grow stronger where we have failed in the past. May we be wholly surrendered to thee and may thy will be done in our lives in an ever increasing measure and grant us the privilege of realizing an ever larger life of communion and service. We ask it all in the name of Jesus Christ our risen and ascended Lord. Amen.

NEAREST THE THRONE

"The bird that soars on highest wing
Builds on the ground her lowly nest,
And she that doth most sweetly sing
Sings in the shade when all things rest.
What honor hath humility.

"The saint that wears heaven's brightest crown
In deepest adoration bends,
The weight of glory bows him down
The most when most his soul ascends.
Nearest the throne itself must be
The footstool of humility."

Take my lips and let them be Filled with messages for thee.

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

WI'OUT DOOT

A deaf but pious English lady, visiting a small country town in Scotland went to church armed with an ear trumpet. The elders had never seen one, and viewed it with suspicion and uneasiness. After a short consultation one of them went to the lady, just before the opening of the service, and, wagging his finger at her warningly, whispered, "One toot and ye're oot!"

Speech reveals character and discloses the secret disposition and temper; and without reason did the Greeks teach that as a man lived so should he speak.—Quintilian.

FARMER'S GREED CAUSE OF SMALL EGGS

Mrs. Newlywed went into the grocery store to do her morning's marketing. She was determined that the grocer should not take advantage of her youth and inexperience.

"The eggs are so dreadfully small," she criticized.

"I know it," he answered, "but that's the kind the farmer brings me. They are just fresh from the country this morning."

"Yes," said the bride, "and that's the trouble with those farmers. They are so anxious to get their eggs sold that they take them off the nest too soon."

And Jehovah said unto Moses, "Wherefore criest thou unto Me?
Speak unto the children of Israel, that they GO FORWARD."

EDITORIAL

And Jehovah said—"Go Forward"

"Go forward" is the battle cry in every battalion of the Lord's army. Everywhere the command has gone forth, "Go forward," and men are resounding it from one to another until the last member of the Kingdom shall hear it and suit the action to the word. Now is the time for a drive forward in every line as never before. We must no longer "mark time," but mark progress. There has scarcely been a time when aggressive action was needed by all the spiritual forces as now. The world was never rushing at a more rapid pace; the necessity of safe, steady guiding to prevent it from veering off into chaos was never more keenly realized than now; and the possibilities for advancement in the great task of bringing in the kingdom of God were never more tremendous. History does not record a more critical period. The result of action or inaction, if we could measure its sweep, would be so far reaching that the importance of it would make us tremble with fear and call upon God mightily for courage and guidance. God is ready to throw open the doors of opportunity wider than they have ever been if we will but "go forward." And he will be to us a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night. If we refuse to follow his gracious leading and stand quibbling, we shall be overtaken by the onrushing events and as a people be entirely decimated.

Practically every church has launched a forward movement under one name or another and is planning in every conceivable way to put energy into its drive. In each denomination they have organized very thoroughly, have set before themselves big things to be accomplished, are advertising widely and in a number of cases have representatives in the field constantly seeking to enlist their entire membership in the campaign. We have not been handicapped by a late start; we were the leaders in big program building. But our vision will lose its worth and our program will rebound to our discredit if we do not press forward to its prosecution. We ought to be in the van of the battle and engaging the enemy of all truth with the utmost vigor and effectiveness. The maintenance of our self-respect as a people and the securing of the blessing of divine approval is dependent upon the working of our program with all possible thoroughness and speed.

Our intentions were good when we created our program of accomplishment and we flatter ourselves that we have made a more or less commendable record toward its attainment. There is no doubt that it has been an impetus to greater endeavor and has spurred us to work more aggressively than we otherwise would. It has been an inspiration to deepened consecration and called forth greater loyalty and sacrifice than we were wont to yield. But still our Lord is pointing us to the wisdom of this world that we may see and learn how effectively and with what great faith and challenging undertakings we ought to engage in the work of the kingdom of God.

Dr. Pinson has said a tremendous thing: "We have been singing, 'Like a mighty army, moves the church of God.' Can we sing it now? We have seen how a mighty army moves. It levies its billions of dollars and gets them. It enters our kitchens and tells us what we may eat. It builds ships, requisitions factories, builds cities over night, takes over whole railroad systems; it demands our best. Mothers kiss their boys good-bye and send them to face the cannon. Men go singing by the million, 'To the Red Rampart's Slippery Edge.' If we dare sing like that we must set an undreamed standard of loyalty to the Prince of Peace. We have not been marching, we have been marking time."

If we can ourselves be so stirred and if we can lead others to the same high and holy enthusiasm, that we shall give ourselves with the tenth part of sacrifice, ardor and perseverance that characterized the nations in the recent war we shall ere long see the approach of the Kingdom for which we were taught to pray. Dr. S. Earl Taylor tells us that the war cost the world $450,000,000,000—$7.41 per second since Christ was born! Seven hundred and twenty one dollars and twenty-five cents for every living human being! Interest charges at 4 percent for one hour exceed the total foreign gifts of America for 1918. No wonder the commander of the British fleet, who received the surrender of the German fleet, said, "If half of the zeal and passion, half of the outpouring of life and treasure or organization and efficiency that the state has put into this world war could be thrown into the cause of the kingdom of God and of the eternal verities, the world would soon be won." And that is the way we must set ourselves to our task.

Oh, great things must be done, these are serious times and we as a church must not dally. We must vitalize religion; we must evangelize the world; we must train and Christianize the future leadership; we must, every one, arouse, from our indifference, leave off our childish quibblings and be quickened and empowered anew by the Holy Spirit for a task unequalled in the history of the world. Much more is expected of us than heretofore and it can almost be said that our entire future depends upon our making good. And the evangelization, Christianization, and civilization of the world depends on it. This may not be taken as a presumptuous statement, or an rating of our importance. As much depends upon us as upon any equal number of people in all the world, and possibly more may rightly be expected of us, judged by the claim we make for our whole gospel standing, if not, we may fairly be accused of grasping at the container and neglecting the thing contained.

The salvation of the world is waiting on a vitalized, empowered, large-visioned, courageous church. The leaders of the world are pleading for such a church. General Byng, in the dark days over there, said to Bishop MacConnell, as he faced the enemy, "What is concerning me is the task before the church of God." He was not looking to the ranks in front of him but thinking of the church at home. "I trust you will go back to your own country and go to your own people, and in every way that you can urge upon them that in the days, the terrible days ahead of us, the days after the war, the church shall not fail." Colonel House said, "There can be no permanent peace unless the churches can Christianize international relationships." "Christ or chaos for the world is the question the Christian army must answer today," is a statement recently flung out by Campbell White.

What shall the answer of the Brethren church be to these appeals coming to us from these and a host of other men standing on the mountain peaks of the world? What shall be our answer to the more eloquent and pressing appeals coming from the world's sad need? What shall we do in view of the unparalleled urgency and bigness of the task now facing the church of Christ? The Lord says, "Go forward," and be assured if we do, the words of President Wilson will become true of our church as it is now of our country, "The measure of our destiny has at last become as wide as the horizon."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK.

Brother E. L. Miller, secretary of the Executive Committee of the Pennsylvania conference announces that the conference will convene at Johnstown, but the program will not appear till after General Conference. A good program is promised and a large attendance is urged.

Our readers will appreciate the splendid report of the Buffalo Christian Endeavor convention by Brother Miles J. Snyder, who was a delegate there. It would be difficult to imagine a more thorough and at the same time inspiring report than that which Brother Snyder supplies. Every Christian Endeavorer will profit by reading it and the societies will do well to paste it in the society room where all can see and read, or better still, read it before your society. It will prove a little convenient in itself.

We have another message from Africa, from our tiny missionary, Marguerite Gribble. If all our pastors were as regular in their correspondence as is this little missionary (it matters not who wields the pen), our church news department would always be full and running over. Doubtless the adult readers of The Evangelist as well as the children are interested in these messages from our mission band in the "dark continent." It will be noticed that Brother Rollier is preaching in both French and English at a nearby mission station for a short time. At the time the letter was written the season there was not healthful and our missionaries were not entirely free from the fever.

Brother Yoder, in the midst of the rush of his work, finds time to give us a brief letter from Rio Cuarto, Argentina. The work is steadily going forward and they are gradually reaping more and more fruit from their labor. Their decision day resulting in fourteen confessions would be considered quite successful in almost any of our home churches. As the other mission points are now or soon will be established in permanent quarters the work will gain confidence and favor on the part of the people and the growth will be more dependable. That Easter offering is meaning much in many ways. Aside from the greater permanency it gives to the established missions it is making possible the purchase of a gospel coach and the sending of Brother Sickels to drive it and sell Bibles and preach from town to town.

Garwin, Iowa, is one of those churches that are able to have fresh news for The Evangelist frequently. Brother Ankrum gives in this issue a summary of the work of his church for the year. This report shows a church alive and awake to its opportunities. To demonstrate their confidence in their pastor and their appreciation of his work they gave him a very creditable increase in salary. If our churches keep up the good work that has received an impetus by the extreme high cost of living, it cannot long be said that unusually low salaries keep men out of the ministry. The wisdom of such churches rounds to their own interests as well as their pastors'.

We have made frequent mention of the Southern California conference held at Long Beach in July. Now you have the privilege of reading the minutes recently received from the secretary, Brother J. C. Beal. The secretary shows himself adept at giving the gist of sermons and addresses. The Bible conference was the principal feature. The business being confined to the first day and the last day except Sunday left the entire intervening time for inspirational and educational addresses. The plan seems to be quite successful and may possibly suggest some points of advantage over the usual arrangement. Another section of the minutes will appear in a later issue.

"Over the top," that is what we are saying these days here at the office. That is what Brother Teeter is saying in his Business Manager's Corner this week. The occasion is the reaching of our goal of 5000 Evangelists to be printed each week. The subscription list has been steadily growing all the time, sometimes however it has taken leaps. That is what it did when Goshen got busy. They made the list leap farthest of any church yet. And in accordance with Brother Teeter's promise that the church putting us over the 5000 mark would have their pastor's picture on first page, we are glad to co-operate by running not only the pastor's likeness, but also that of the beautiful Goshen church. We are proud of our Goshen people and wish to assure them that we shall endeavor to serve them as well as the many other loyal readers of The Evangelist to the best of our ability. It has seemed a little more difficult for the big churches to get on the Honor Roll than the smaller ones, but the big churches are proving that it is not impossible. We shall be delighted to welcome still others, large and small; all will receive an equally warm welcome.

HOME-MADE SQUIBS

True prayer often proves costly, but why waste time on any other?

If it is true that the march of civilization can be measured by the wages of the working man, it is also true that the progress of Christian ideals on the average can be fairly determined by the salary paid the preacher.

No worth-while building of character can be made except by the daily consistent denial of selfish desires and the faithful and hearty performance of tasks which require the setting of ourselves with determination and perseverance to do.

If we look upon the words of redeeming love as "good news," we can hardly escape the thought that such news needs a messenger, and the question as to who that messenger shall be becomes uncomfortably personal with ourselves in possession of the news.

Just as the disciples needed the transfiguration scene to make the unseen world more real, so we need occasionally to have the veil drawn aside and the world of spiritual glory revealed to strengthen our faith in it. The worship of every Lord's Day should do this for us.

It is no more foolish to claim that nails that have been bent and straightened are better to drive through hard wood than nails that have never been bent, than it is to maintain that men who have been rescued from lives of sin make more effective workers for the hard fields of life than those who have never wasted their resistance by sinning. A man who has wasted his substance in riotous living may recover himself and by the grace of God do a great work, but he can never do what he could have done nor be what he might have been had he never had his life blighted by sin.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

Closing Up

We are closing up the books of another year's work. The reports—some of them—are in. I do not care to give a detail of this report, for that is the work of the secretary who will doubtless color it up for us so that we shall have a picture of ourselves at Conference. He is so expert at the analysis and so fearless to say what he wishes to say that it would be presumptuous for me to attempt it. But the books of 1919 are closed as it pertains to the Four Year Program. The record is made and for some of the churches that get a large space in telling what great things they are doing, it is all yellow. I hope that some bold fellow will have the courage to make a motion at Conference to publish a list of the yellow fellows and their churches.

"Argon"

Have you heard about Argon? A famous Englishman tells us that he has discovered an element of the air that refuses to unite with any other element. He tried it with extreme heat and extreme cold and in every imaginable way with no success and then because it had no discernable qualities of union, he called it "Argon," meaning "Doing nothing; unless." Thus it is with too many leaders (?) of our fraternity. We shall all have to hang our heads with shame at Winona because some of our men are argon—"doing nothing, unless," unless it is done in their way and told in their way that will not be a comparison with any other of their toiling brethren.

Splendid

I am now ready to say, however, that the progress has been splendid compared with last year and taking under consideration, the general unrest and apathy and worldliness of the times. That we should be able to do as well as last year under the stress of the times, is more than pleasing, it is commendable.

I shall not in this paper say what are the marks of progress as they will await a fuller digestion of the reports, but no man in touch with the Program movement will dismiss it nor discount its great good to the churches. Only the "argon" churches will fail to merit and see its value and success in their own fields.

Co-operation. With an exception or two, the District Directors have been a fine, loyal and faithful bunch. To prove how deeply they have this work on their hearts, I shall give a few excerpts from some letters they write me from time to time. How any pastor can listen to these appeals as they come to them, is more than I can figure out. But that they do it, is apparent from these letters.

"Extracted." That is the word they use frequently in telling of how they get reports. They "extract" them; pull at the pastors for reports like a dentist pulls to get teeth out. My! Just see what they say:

"July 31, 1919.

"Dear Brother Bame:

Here is another belated report, which I extracted from —after asking him several times. I finally made it out myself for him. If it is in time to be counted it will make the general report look just that much less yellow, if not it is all right. Date of receipt is 8-20-19. Very fraternally,"

"Dr. C. A. Bame, North Manchester, Ind.

"Dear Brother Bame:—I have waited till the last mail on the last day. You will find the cards enclosed. Above you will find a list of the congregations with their pastors or keymen. I have also indicated report, or no report, which statement corresponds with the cards. A count will show which have reported. It makes me shudder when I think of the YELLOW. You will note, by comparing with former reports, that we do not report as many congregations. Discovered, upon investigation, that some were only preaching points.

This report is almost a failure. But what more can I do? If you will grant us more time I shall be glad to write to each of these pastors from whose church no report has been received. I have written to most of them during the last month but will be glad to do so again if you but say the word.

Hoping this may reach you on good time and that I may hear from you soon, I remain, Respectfully and fraternally,"

"July 31, 1919.

My Dear Brother Bame:—I have waited till the last minute to receive reports and I am almost ashamed to send in the result. I am going to try to round up some tardy fellows yet. If I get anything more I'll mail it to you promptly. I don't understand why the fellows are so negligent. I wonder if going after them by correspondence would be more effective? At any rate I am hoping to get some more reports that way.

Hope other districts will not make such a poor showing as ——— has, I am. Yours sincerely,"

Another letter belated 18 days with 3 reports of churches, said, "If you can use it, O. K. If not, it is not your fault nor mine. ———." So, again, I say the District Directors are loyal men and fight to the last minute and then apologize for the "argons."

But we shall have reason to rejoice, anyway. What the Program has done for the co-operating churches and thus for the brotherhood at large is not all measured in the charts and Goals, thank God. He above, is watching and every effort that pastors and churches have made for his glory will be accounted for on the eternal books of heaven where, unerasable, they will await the worker to receive his reward. Come to Winona to rejoice this year. We shall show there, that it has been worth while. Let me thank most heartily, every pastor and layman who has had a part in making the success we have attained and we shall still pray for the "argons." BAME.

of Christianity. The subject is a fascinating one. Every public library has books that present the evidence. And every Christian will find himself well repaid, both from the pleasure to be derived from the study and from the knowledge acquired, if he will familiarize himself with the results of archaeological investigation as given in the writings of Sayce, Naville, Rawlinson, Coburn and other scholars who have shown the value of these modern researches as evidence of the truth of the Bible.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Imperialism of Christ. By Edwin Boardman, Jr.

The term "imperialism" has been defined as "the policy of practice of seeking the extension of the control of an empire or a nation." This term has been on the lips of kings always for the cherished wish of their hearts is that they might ever have increasing power and dominion. They seek to rule not only by the written law and its absolute enforcement but also by establishing commercial ties, friendly intercourse, and by various spheres of influence and power. To them imperialism is the exercise of material influence and physical power for the sake of increased prestige and material gains. The motive is usually an ulterior one at the base, no matter how much pretense there may be for the welfare of the weaker peoples involved.

In contrast to such a program of the worldly imperialists stand the imperial designs of our Master. He does have an imperial program but it is not the program of vaunting ambition and ingrained selfishness held by earthly monarchs. It is rather the desire of a great unselfish heart that finds its ultimate happiness and real joy in bringing men and nations to see the elemental factors that will make them truly great and happy. Unlike the great human imperialists of past years and centuries, Jesus never builds simply for one generation or one century, but he builds for an eternity. Perhaps this fact gives us the key to the seeming slowness of the "building" at times. Then too, the imperialism of Jesus has to do with the whole world and not with mere "balances of power."

I. The imperialistic claims of Jesus are not the earthly visions of power conjured up by the craft and skill of human wisdom or counsel. His claims are founded on eternal plan, promise and sanction. In Colossians 1:16, we read that "by him were all things created, that are in heaven and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him and for him." Then too, when the angel Gabriel made the announcement to Mary his message regarding Jesus was "He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." The Jews throughout the years prior to Jesus' first advent had long expected a conquering King to come and set up an everlasting, and glorious kingdom and Daniel clearly puts this hope into words in his prophetic book (7:14) when he says, "There was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." According to the united testimony of the New Testament writings, Jesus meets all these conditions and is the one destined to rule and reign according to God's plan forever and ever.

Perhaps we wonder what kind of a kingdom Jesus is seeking to establish and on examining the Word we find that it is of a two fold character. (1) In the present age it finds its power within the lives of the believers. Jesus told the Pharisees that "the kingdom cometh not by observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or lo there! for behold the kingdom of God is within you." Thayer, in commenting on the Greek word "basileia" (kingdom) makes this observation, "Jesus employed the phrase—kingdom of God or of heaven—to indicate that perfect order of things which he was about to establish, in which all those of every nation who should believe in him were to be gathered together into one society, dedicated and intimately united to God and made partakers of eternal salvation." Hence to Jesus his kingdom was a present one—in the aspect that it was then organized in the lives of men—inasmuch as its foundations were laid by him and its benefits realized among men that believe on him. In this sense then his kingdom is spiritual, dealing with "the inner man of the heart."

(2) In the second place—and much more frequently—the kingdom of heaven is spoken of as a future blessing "since its consummate establishment is to be looked for on Christ's solemn return from the skies, the ills and wrongs which burden the present state of things being done away, the powers hostile to God being vanquished" (Thayer). In Jesus' prayer lesson to his disciples he taught them to pray, "Thy kingdom come," and at the last supper he said, "I will not drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God shall come." His message to Pilate was, "My kingdom is not of this world"; and in Matthew 24:30-31 and Matthew 25:31-46, in which he tells of his second advent, he makes plain this aspect of the kingdom. The testimony of the disciples and Paul, buttressed by the glorious conception of ultimate victory given by the Revelation, all add to this second concept of the kingdom of Jesus.

Thus we realize that Jesus seeks to be King in men's hearts and will ultimately reign on the earth in great power and glory. These imperialistic aims have behind them eternal power and sanction. Jesus is to be Imperator by Divine Right.

II. In some of the previously quoted scriptures we have noted that the imperialism of Jesus is universal in its scope for it includes every race and clime. Dealing as he is with the souls of men and not with the treasures of earth or mere earthly glory and power he does not seek only those races that possess wealth or have special capacity. He seeks all men and his invitation has ever been, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." He is the ruler of "whosoever believeth on him."

We get the conviction from these scriptures that not all will believe on him and herein is the imperialism of Jesus different than that of worldly monarchs. The kings of the earth, thinking of men only as men, say, "You MUST." Jesus, thinking of men as free, living souls says, "Will you?" This is our day of choice and by our choices now the King permits us to choose our destiny—either eternal life and salvation in the consummation of his kingdom, or eternal damnation with the Devil and his angels. He makes no distinction in the wise or unwise, bond or free, barbarian or cultured man when he calls men to take his yoke upon them. The people from the ends of the earth ignorant of him as yet, are as dear to him as any of us who know and love him. He did not come to touch only a few. It is his will that all men come to know the good news and enter into possession of those joys and privileges that make life truly worth while. There are no color lines in his kingdom, no schemes of segregation. He does not note the color of the skin. He sees black or white hearts, sealing the cleansed ones and, as far as privilege and promise go, putting them in a place apart to be his exclusive possession.

During this age Jesus is using various agencies to extend his dominion among the sons of men: (1) The Holy Spirit; (2) the Word; (3) Redeemed men and women. The Holy Spirit reproves the world of sin, righteousness, and judgment; interprets and reveals Jesus' message to men; and makes intercession for men "with groanings that cannot be uttered." The Word is a lamp unto the feet giving men real glimpses of the Light of the world, and by its power in the lives of men it is leading souls from darkness into the marvelous light, the Word is "quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword" and is certain in its results for it "will accomplish that for which it was intended." Redeemed men and women have been commissioned by the King to bear his message to the uttermost parts of the world. (Matthew 28: 19-20; Acts 1:8) and if they are true to their trust by their work as "laborers together with God," the people in darkness will come to know him "whom to know aright is life eternal."

III. In the last place the imperialism of Jesus is not interested in mere externals but seeks the absolute control over the thoughts, intents, and loves of the human heart. Thus it is a transforming work, not a mere reforming system, for Jesus must be crowned as the King of the individual life. A thin veneer of culture, education, or refinement will not do. The life must be regenerated, "sanctified through the truth;" "sanctified and cleansed with the washing of water by the Word." His MEN must be NEW MEN in Christ Jesus and anything less than this will not do. Jesus' work is internal, dealing with the heart for "out of it are the issues of life." It has always been man's failing merely "to look on the outward appearance," but "the Lord looketh on the heart" (1 Samuel 16:7. The imperialism of Jesus is not an affair of money or material prosperity. It is a matter of Rock-founded lives, love-directed actions, and Christ-centered hopes. What a man thinks and believes about Jesus has everything to do with that man's position in his dominion. When a man really becomes a follower of Jesus his attitude to the world around him is expressed in Paul's words, "For me to live is Christ." His will is no longer his own; his desires find their ultimate expression in the Master's wishes, and he becomes universal in the sense that his vision of the world is gained through the eyes of the Christ. He fears not the iron hand of the Imperator for he knows that Jesus' "yoke is easy," but what he does fear is that he will, through any negligence of his cause pain to his beloved Lord.

These are the kind of conquests Jesus is seeking to make, conquests not of mere territory, but of immortal souls, winning them so thoroughly to him that they will never seek to leave him. He does not use compulsion but by his very attitude toward men he woos them to himself. Jesus' imperialism is an imperialism of love, a love that goes out in every conceivable way to save sinful man from the error of his way and establish in his life new desires, finer motives, and holier hopes that will prove him to be truly a citizen of the "kingdom that hath no end." Well has the old hymn put the truth,

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Doth his successive journeys run;
His kingdom spread from shore to shore,
Till moons shall wax and wane no more."

And when the kingdoms of this earth have long crumpled to ruins the spiritual kingdom of this age shall have been transcended by the glorious eternal reign of him who is destined to be King of kings and Lord of lords.

Christian Discipline.

By Charles A. Bame, D. D.

Every successful life is a disciplined life. There is no doubt that the self-disciplined life is the largest of all. That all discipline is not to be self-administered, is also apparent from a careful study of the word of God. Peter was disciplined of Paul when he "resisted him to the face because he stood condemned" (Gal. 5:11). That Paul was disciplined by the events that made his life different, is evidenced by the fact that he acknowledged that "afflictions * * * work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." That the church is called sometimes to exercise discipline, I shall show later. So then, there are at least two kinds of discipline that the Christian may be called to undergo: first, self discipline and second, church discipline. Let us study them in their order; first,

Self Discipline

Perhaps no word of the sacred canon more clearly expresses the whole idea of discipline than the words of the giant man of the apostolic church, Paul, who put it, "I bruise my body and bring it into subjection." This was to the church which had too little concern for the body. Some of the Corinthians were hungry, some were drunken and others were adulterous. Therefore, Paul asked that they "put to death the deeds of the body." That the body is important in the plan of the Almighty is stressed by Paul again when he says, "the adoption of sons waits for the redemption of the body." But the body can never and will never be disciplined till it is completely controlled by the mind. A disciplined mind can come only by a disciplined heart, a changed inner man, metamorphosed, as is the literal of Romans 12:2. A mind and a man changed through and through brings about a Spiritual service. To be carnally minded is death. But is there a way to the spiritual triumph over the mind? Most surely, and the processes are so plainly shown in the Book that none need question. It is this to which I call your attention.

First, a body brought under is a new born body. New life begins with new birth. Nicodemus had all a man could get in a common birth. His pedigree was perfect from the human side. He had all that God could offer to natural man. He was shocked beyond measure of expression when Jesus told him the most appalling thing he ever conceived or heard, that he had to be born again. Other men since in every effort of the world's evangelization have found men just as appalled. Born again? What is it? How does it happen? What takes place? What does it do? Tell me!

Tell me! And the answer of the Master was just what all men must answer, "Marvel not," it must be. Let no man believe that he does not need the new birth as long as he can not say, "I have a better pedigree than Nicodemus."

Second, a body brought under, is one that gets the proper growth. This requires proper food and environment; and I am more convinced right now than I have ever been that our present day Christianity is suffering more from improper food and environment than at any time in the memory of any living mortal. Never was there a day when people were so well entertained as in our day. With Sunday newspapers served to your door in which is a whole day's reading full of instruction and information; with shows that are entertaining and enlivening coming to your door; that too, on Sunday in many places; with keen and giant minds lulling to sleep and ease, mortals that are floating on a seemingly calm sea, men are being fed on anything but the meat of the Gospel or even the sincere milk of the Word. Do you not like the study of the word of God? Then, in the name of all that is good and holy, discipline yourself to it. Bring your body under and your mind into subjection.

But let me not pass this phase of my subject without saying that proper environment must be provided for the young. Out of all the Hebrew children that were carried away captive, three were willing to discipline themselves; the others were disciplined, but by others, and how galling was that discipline! Bowing to deities, human and inert, they were driven to a bondage a million times worse than that self-administered by the three. Discipline must be administered; if not by parents, nor self, nor church, then society will do it with jails and penitentiaries. God help us to begin at the right place.

Third, The will must be subjected to God's will. Even Jesus found this his task. "It is written in the volume of the Book, 'I came to do thy will, O God.'" These are the prayer-breathed words of our Master and Exemplar. If we will to do his will we shall know of the teaching. If we do not, blindness like that of the Jews will enshroud us. Every faculty of the mind and of the body awaits the command of the will. The leper cried for cleansing and Jesus said "If thou wilt," and he was cleansed. I may right now be speaking to one who fought like a tiger to keep from doing the will of God and then at a great moment of his life said to Jesus, "I will" and then, right then, he became a new man.

How mighty does the psychology of Jesus here appear. To the will alone, does he make appeal. To the whole man he appeals when he asks you to will to do his will.

Fourth, the conscience must be educated. Now, I shall be the last man to ask anyone to disobey conscience. He is an untrue man and a hypocrite who does not follow his own conscience. He must do the thing he thinks is right or be false to himself. This does not say that he will always be right. It does say that he is on a good road to the right. He will come out where Cornelius did who knew only the work of praying and the giving of alms. God will turn the world upside down to have such a man saved. Let me say that the reason I think Brother Yoder went just where he did in South America was because there was a Cornelius there who needed the Gospel. So with every other heaven-led missionary. But conscience will not always lead right unless it is rightly educated. Herein lies the great need of the Bible. India, China, Turkey all have religions. But the moral code that makes for the greatest nation or the greatest life is unknown to them and is therefore broken again and again, and crime and shame follow because the conscience is not rightly educated. Hence the great need of evangelization. Carry the light to them in order that conscientious people may, following their conscience, do right. How shall they hear if no preacher be sent? How shall they be saved without the Gospel?

Fifth, the reason must be balanced. Any experienced evangelist or personal worker will agree to this. The unsaved reason wrongly. They reason that sin is pleasure when it is a cancer; that sin is happiness when it is hurtfulness; that money is most important when it is least important. D. L. Moody, in his discussion of the Prodigal, said, "He came to himself; where then was he when he did not say, 'I will arise and go to my father!'" He was beside himself." So he was. So he is who neglects the most important things of life. He is beside himself so that he can not see straight nor reason rightly. He needs to discipline himself, to bring the reason in line with God's revelation. Study the Bible.

Seventh, the judgment must be advised. If every other faculty of the mind is out of joint, so must this be. If all faculties need to be metamorphosed—changed through and through—so must this. It is true to human observation. Men constantly are prone to judge each other while the Christ and Paul both spoke in the clearest terms condemning it. Let the Book advise your judgment and you will come close to what is the will of God in all you do.

The Bible and the Spade. By T. Darley Allen

The research expedition sent to Ethiopia in 1916 under the direction of Dr. George A. Reisner has uncovered near the site of Napate, the ancient capital of Ethiopia, the name of King Tirhakah, mentioned in the Bible (2 Kings 19:9).

The more one thinks of the archaeological discoveries of recent years and their importance in testifying to the truth of Scripture, the more wonderful they seem. For the Old Testament, for the most part, antedates Herodotus, the "Father of History," and was "a lonely record" until evidence from this most unexpected source came forward to vindicate the sacred narrative against infidel attacks.

These exhumed records touch the sacred history at so many points, referring to countries, cities, rulers and events mentioned in the Scriptures, that intelligent skepticism is impossible as to the fact that, as a scholar has said, the Old Testament writers "generally either had very clear first-hand knowledge of the events which they recorded or else showed remarkable wisdom in the selection of the authorities upon which they depended for their facts."

Even concerning the earliest books of the Bible, in which infidels once found so much that they declared unhistorical, there are, as Professor Naville says, "many items which could only have come from a clear knowledge of contemporaneous Egyptian customs."

Church Discipline

By the present-day tendencies in churches—I dare not say in church practice—one would almost conclude that there were no Gospel authority for church discipline. But there is. Jesus pointed out only two things about his church to the disciples. But both of these things are mightily significant; one, its eternity; the other, its authority. As to its authority, he made it the final court of appeal to Christians (Mat. 18:17). So did Paul (1 Cor. 6:1-6). Differences relative to morals or money are to be taken to the church for adjudication. The extent of the discipline is not clearly understood, perhaps. Some churches go as far as expulsion from membership. I doubt if this is warranted in the word. That there is a final discharge of responsibility to the one who sees the fault, if the offender does not hear the one offended, is my belief based on the expression, "TO THEE as a heathen man and a publican." If he simply will not hear any one, not even the church, what else could be done than that he should be let alone. The "ban" was a method of discipline in the early Dunker fraternity and seems to have the sure foundation of the Word of God (1 Cor. 5:11-13). The immediate subject is the fornicator with whom the Christian was not to eat. But the extent was larger and Paul says, "Not to keep company with a brother" if he "be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolator, or a reviler, or a drunkard or an extortioner; with such an one, no not to eat; * * * Put away the wicked man from among yourselves." Here is enjoined both personal and church, or the collective "banning" of the unfit. It can be construed only as church discipline. Let church boards and true under shepherds take notice.

Thus, our study, made brief by the limits of this paper shows a woeful lack of such functioning by the church. What church does its duty as to discipline? What denomination? What are the churches doing to the vile bunch named by Paul in 1 Corinthians 5? Once in a while you hear of a church taking in hand an adulterer, but even that is seldom done. What of the other classes? Old feuds and grudges and schisms keep numerous churches from doing their full duty and yet, because often an undisciplined old sinner has relatives on the board—ah, too often because he himself is prominent there, or because he has too much money he is left where he can mar the progress of the Cause as much as did Achan the Children of Israel." All chastening seemeth for the present * * * grievous; yet afterward it yieldeth peaceable fruit (Heb. 12:11). Let us look to the end and do our duty.

North Manchester, Indiana.

Even many years before very much evidence to the truth of Scripture from the monuments had been discovered, Brugsch, the famous Egyptologist, declared that anyone must be blind who could not realize the importance of researches in Egypt as evidence of the trustworthiness of Scripture.

The late great Assyriologist, Halevy, was forced from a radical to a conservative position in regard to the Mosaic writings, his researches convincing him that nothing was more unjustified than skepticism as to the truth of the early Jewish history.

Infidels once had a great deal to say about the Biblical references to Edom, and denied that a country had ever been known by that name, until Professor Sayce silenced them by discovering evidence that vindicated the Scriptures and showed that Edom was really one of the lands of antiquity.

The existence, too, of such a people as the Hittites was denied until the Biblical statements concerning them found corroboration from the monuments.

Indeed, so many points of contact exist between Scripture and the monuments that we now have in these archaeological researches a very important branch of the evidences

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Deathless Hope. By Alva J. McClain

My text for this morning is a burst of praise, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time" (1 Peter 1:3-5).

I know not the condition of your souls this morning. It may be that some are cast down and discouraged. It may be that things have not been going well with you. You may have troubles this morning that it seems all but impossible to bear. It may be so. Nevertheless, in spite of such things, it is the glory of the Christian faith that if you will only stop and think upon what God has done for you, your soul will cry with the writer of this book, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." Let us all say it together!

I. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ for his ABUNDANT MERCY.

1. "Abundant" means enough to supply all the need and then some left over. I have heard people say, "If I only had enough money to get the things I need, I wouldn't ask for more." Well here is something of which there has been supplied more than enough. God's mercy is more than enough. A little old woman made the trip to the Pacific Coast and for the first time saw an ocean. She gazed far and long over the vast expanse of sea. Then heaving a great sigh she said, "Well, that's the first time in my life that I ever saw enough of anything at once." Christian, take a fresh look at the mercy of God and you'll see enough of something. It is abundant.

This is the measure according to which our God deals out his good things. The word "abundant" is God's yardstick. No matter what he gives it is abundant. Is it goodness? It shall be abundant. Is it grace? It is exceedingly abundant. Is it rejoicing? He will make it abundant. Is it pardon for sin? He will abundantly pardon. Is it the gift of the Holy Spirit? He was shed upon us abundantly. Are we thinking of that blessed age which is coming when our Lord Jesus shall reign in person upon the earth? In that age even the desert shall blossom abundantly. Do our hearts rejoice as we think of those days when Christ shall speak peace to the nations? There shall be abundance of peace till the moon will be no more.

Yes, God's mercy is enough. It is more than enough. It is from everlasting. It is great unto the heavens. It is great above the heavens. His mercy shall be built up forever. The earth is full of it. But, may God burn into our souls this truth—vast as his mercy is, there is no mercy out of Christ! All of God's mercy is in him. If there are those who die without mercy, it is because they have trodden under foot the Son of God and would have none of his redemption. But such will never be able to say, "I died without mercy because there was none." There is mercy! There is abundant mercy! But it's all in Christ. Out of Christ God is nothing but a consuming fire.

II. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ for the LIVING HOPE WHICH IS OURS

Now hope is a most precious thing to every last one of us. For who is there among us that does not have hope? There is the little fellow perched on the top of a piano stool in abject misery pounding away, grinding out his lesson with a weather eye upon the clock. He just simply couldn't keep it up if it were not for the hope that when the dreadful hour is finished mother will let him go out and play. Hope keeps him going. Then I have heard of young ladies who go down town and buy a kind of a box with a lid on it. It is said that they prefer a box made of cedar. And in that box go all sorts of mysterious things of exquisite needle work and fine linen until it is filled. Such an affair is known as a "Hope Chest." It signifies that the young lady has a "hope." I will leave it to the judgment of any young lady who has one of these if hope is not a precious thing. A little mite of a baby comes into a home; just a baby, but there was never born another just like this one. He is different. Of course the parents will feel that way, and they should feel that way. I would not give much for any mother and father who did not feel just that way. Well, the parents may not say much, but say, if you could only read their minds and hearts! The picture of the future of that particular baby would dazzle even President Wilson upon his return from Europe. It outshines the glory and fame of Poch, or Edison, or Roosevelt. Such is hope. I have a friend, a woman with broken health. She has spent great sums trying different remedies and different famous specialists. I have seen her come home discouraged. But soon she would hear of another specialist who has great success with her trouble and she would be like a new person for a few days in anticipation of restored health. It was hope. There are young men today who have no time for pleasure such as others have. Every waking hour they are planning and working and saving. They have a great goal in mind, and they work because they hope to some day reach that goal. Such are the hopes of men.

But how quickly our fondest hopes are oftentimes dashed to the ground. And like Israel of old we cry, "Our hope is lost, we are clean cut off." Off the Atlantic coast there is a certain place that is known to sailormen as "The Graveyard of Ships." Many a good ship has there been wrecked and sent to the bottom. So this world is to the hopes of men. It might fittingly be called the "Graveyard of Hopes." Mighty few are the hopes that escape the rocks. And even if they do escape the shoals of this life they are broken to pieces on the last bar which every soul must cross. So at the best a hope which is confined to this life is a dying hope.

It is not otherwise with the hopes of men for the next life, if they are not centered in Christ. All such hopes are vain. The poet Tennyson sang of "The Larger Hope," and intimated this hope was his. But the larger hope is not a living hope. The Christian's hope is a living hope. There is great comfort in the word "living." When the writers of the Bible would reveal to us the true God they refer to him as the living God to distinguish him from the gods of the heathen. So our hope is a living hope. The hope of the Christian is different from the hopes of the world as the God of the Christian is different from the gods of the world. Our hope can never fail. It can never be wrecked. It can never die. It is living and deathless as God is living and deathless. And it is so because it is established and guaranteed by the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ from the dead. Says the text, "a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."

Now what does this mean to me as a Christian? It means that if I hope for eternal life, a life with Christ, a life of unending happiness, a life at his right hand where are pleasures for evermore, a life without sin or sorrow or pain or trouble, a life with loved ones that have gone before, if I have such a hope it shall never be shattered by men, angels or devils. If Christ can be dragged down out of heaven and confined once more to the four walls of a tomb, then my hope is lost. But as long as he lives my hope as a Christian is a living hope!

Would you have such a hope? There is but one way to have it, that is to be born into it. Note the words of the text carefully, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ which hath begotten us again unto a living hope." There is a young man in England who has the hope of some day being king of the British Empire. He didn't come into that hope by strenuous endeavor. He was born into it. So if you would have the hope of some day reigning with Christ, you cannot obtain it merely by strenuous endeavor. You must be born into it.

III. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ FOR THE INHERITANCE WHICH IS THE OBJECT OF OUR HOPE

Ours is not a vague hope. It is not a dim, obscure thing so indistinct as to elude the grasp of the mind. It is not merely a hope for "something." It is a hope for something DEFINITE, something TANGIBLE. The object of our hope is called an "inheritance"; not an inheritance which is of the earth, earthly; it is an inheritance above, an inheritance in the heavens, and as such it has some blessed heavenly characteristics that no earthly inheritance could ever have.

I. It is incorruptible. Perishableness is written on every earthly possession. Rust corrupts it, decay consumes

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Loving the Unlovely. By Alice Livengood

OUR SCRIPTURE

For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life. John 3:16. Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh the sun to rise on the evil and on the good and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. For if ye love them which love you what reward have you? do not even the publicans the same? Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect. Matt. 5:43-48.

OUR MEDITATIONS

Go where we will we are sure to find the unlovely as well as the lovely. There is always the opposite. We see it in the physical, the moral and the spiritual. Away back at the dawn of creation it made its appearance and has come on down through the ages.

In nature the unlovely is often changed to beauty by the genius of man and the moral and spiritual are beautified by righteous influences exercised over them.

When God called out a nation to be his people through whom he would bless all the nations of the world, he promised great blessings if they would love him and keep his commandments. But they would let the unlovely predominate in their lives. Again and again they strayed from God after the gods of their heathen neighbors but just as often did the Lord send his prophets to teach them and bring them back to the true and living God of their fathers.

These teachers they persecuted and some they slew. Always God loved them, though like an earthly parent, he had to chastise them. Finally he showed his great love for this unlovely, wicked people by sending "his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." This and the Son's willingness to come, for he said, "Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me.) to do thy will, O God." (Heb. 10:7) are the greatest evidences of love the world has ever seen.

Beecher, the great pulpit orator, said, "We never know how much one loves till we know how much he is willing to endure and suffer for us; and it is the suffering element that measures love. The characters that are great must of necessity, be characters that shall be willing, patient and strong to endure for others. To hold our nature in the willing service of another, is the divine idea of manhood, of the human character."

When we think of all that Christ gave up and came to earth and suffered for our sins we realize what love is and will do. Then only do we feel the necessity of following his teachings and of trying to do his will in all things.

In his "Sermon on the Mount" Christ gave us some guideposts by which to attain the life he expects his followers to live. To "love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you" is truly loving the unlovely and one has to grow in grace daily to do it. Christ lived true to his own teachings for on the cross he prayed for forgiveness for his murderers and so did Stephen the first Christian martyr.

There are so many ways in which persecutions, etc., attack us. Dishonesty with others in business; unkindness of action to neighbor and what not, for annoyances do spring up in most unexpected forms and places and we need ever to be on our guard to be ready to do as Jesus commands. Of course we are not to love the sins but the sinner.

I recall reading somewhere that to "pray daily for your enemy or for one you do not love that eventually the hatred is transformed into love."

Perhaps the unlovely is still there but we learn to see the lovely instead. You know Peter tells us that "charity shall cover the multitude of sins," and in James 2:8 we find, "if ye fulfil the royal law according to Scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well."

An acquaintance of mine ever since I have known her has exemplified this teaching of Christ. When lied about and despitefully used she kept on doing kind acts as occasion came, helping in illness, praying for the enemy and what a calm, happy life she lives. Her religion is put into practice.

Two old elders one time had a difference and they would not speak when they met. One day one went to the other and said they were doing wrong and he would lie down and let the other walk on him if it would help bring about their former fellowship. However, the brother would not allow that but wept instead and forgave the difference and they were fast friends ever after. Surely that was Christ's teaching exemplified. The first saintly old man made the Word his daily spiritual food and was thus fortified to overcome the evil. Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy, and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. Above all these things put on charity which is the bond of perfectness. Col. 3:12-14.

Yes, it is easy to love those who love us and to be kind to those who are kind to us but sinners do that. Professed followers of the Master must have a higher standard than the world.

Jesus said, "if ye love me keep my commandments" and loving our enemies is one of the commandments.

Someone has said "as every lord giveth a certain livery to his servants, love is the very livery of Christ. Our Savior, who is the Lord above all lords, would have his servants known by their badge, which is love."

OUR PRAYER

Righteous Father in heaven, we thank thee for all thy mercies extended to us and above all for the gift of thy Son. We thank thee, too, that Jesus taught us so plainly how to live our lives acceptably to thee. Wilt thou give us the will and strength to love our enemies and to pray for them which persecute and despitefully use us. Lord, we need the guidance and power of the Holy Spirit daily to live as thou wouldst have us live.

Bless us in our efforts and may thy name be glorified wherever thy people are found. We ask all in our Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The Future Life. By H. L. Goughnour

It is unnecessary to argue the reality of a future life. Scores of the world's best philosophers have exhausted the capacity of human intellect to prove man's immortality. The subject is of such overmastering importance, and man's desire for continued life has ever been so constant and keen that it is doubtful whether a new, valid argument to support the belief could be devised even though the attempt were made.

Scientific demonstration of the continuance of personal existence beyond physical death may be a possibility. Some scientists of undoubted integrity and scholarship are attempting to achieve such demonstration. Some believe that communication with departed loved ones or friends actually has been accomplished. Whether it has or not, cannot now be asserted. The voluminous mass of data which these investigators offer is so confused and confusing that to lay down definite deductions from their evidence would be like drawing a map of a fog, or attempting to build a castle upon a cloud.

Yet, such investigations when honestly made, do not deserve scoffing or censure. If communication with the departed should be established unquestionably, it would simply demonstrate the truth of that which Christians have always believed; viz., that human personality does have continued existence beyond death.

Although reason does not speak with absolute certainty and demonstration is not sufficiently definite, yet human beings believe almost unanimously in a future life for their kind. Why do they believe? Because ideas of extinction repel healthy thought. Belief in annihilation is morbid or doctrinaire. Healthful living, definiteness of self-consciousness, approval of life, regard and love for others, all encourage belief in immortality. In other words, to men who are socialized and enlightened, belief in the life beyond is instinctive and natural. The best qualities in man support the belief. The better men and women become, the more definite is their assurance. The more they appreciate and love others, the more they believe that death does not destroy.

What does all this mean? It means that the conviction of continued life is written by God in the human heart. It is not a deduction of petty logic, it is a conviction borne of faith in all things real. Man does not reason himself into belief of the future life; he does not wait for demonstration: he knows. Because the depths of his nature are aware somehow of the depths of the divine mind, he knows. Deep answers unto deep. He listens to God and knows. He knows that the divine mind wills it; that the divine mind could not will otherwise, at least for those who are noble and good, and perhaps for those who are capable of becoming so. Quite rightly he knows he is wiser to reject a thousand contrary appearances and arguments than to doubt the conviction of his whole being as it responds to the universe and God. He knows,

"* * * * Faith cannot be unanswered."

"And cries, 'It shall be done, sometime, somewhere.'"

Scientists tell us that the material of which man's brain is composed constantly is being worn away and replaced by new tissue. This process is so rapid that a man has a wholly new brain every seven years. A man of seventy years of age, then, has had 10 different brains, so far as matter is concerned. Yet, he can close his eyes and see his mother sitting in the twilight with him, her little child upon her knee. He can see the school house at the side of the road where he first went to school, and hear the shouts of the children at play. He can change the scene, and gaze upon his bride's virgin sweetness as he led her to the altar. He can again shift the vision and see that same face, reposing in maternal beauty and aged calm, in the midst of her funeral flowers,

His eyes and ears of flesh do not see these visions and hear these sounds. They, with the brains to which they reported, have long since returned to dust. His spirit has survived all these bodily changes. Just as easily, so the human believes, will his spirit survive the coming shock of physical death. They who now disbelieve will find, no doubt, when their last hours come, that the human race believes aright.

The nature of the future life needs more discussion in the present day than the facts of the future life. For the vast majority of human beings, belief in future life will not wane, cannot wane as long as the race survives. But the nature of the future life is inadequately understood. Even in Christian lands the conventional ideas of heaven and hell are not in accord with modern knowledge of reality. The reason is that they are based upon the imagery of Milton and Bunyan more than upon the loftier and infinitely more spiritual teachings of Jesus Christ.

Throughout the centuries the Christianization of men has progressed until today the most enlightened persons consider spiritual growth and genuine service of others the highest goals of life. To be morally, spiritually and in service like unto Jesus Christ is the only endeavor supremely worth while. To attain unto this should be the essence of the future's fascination. Yet, many of the popular hymns and books of piety urge men to long for a habitation in which there are gorgeous mansions, streets of gold, eternal rest and singing with little suggestion of moral and spiritual beauty and Christ-like service. For the person who has even glimpsed the heroic spirit of Jesus Christ much of the conventional picture has lost its appeal.

In this situation, as always, the way unto the light is to turn directly to Jesus Christ. Let us note some of the things he Master says about the life eternal.

1. The individuality of the saved person is not lost when he enters the future life. The Hindu believes himself a part of the supreme Spirit, and his one hope is to find his way back into unity with that Spirit. The Buddhist believes that all his suffering is the result of his consciousness of personality and the Nirvana for which he longs is to be delivered from consciousness of his own being.

Jesus said, "He that liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Death does not end the individual career of the unsaved person; but attention is directed to the positive phase of the life eternal in this study.

2. The life eternal is a life of signal blessedness. It is "a kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world." It is the "Father's house." Those who enter there are summoned, "Enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." The oft-recurring phrase, "eternal life," signifies life that is eternal, not only in quantity, but in quality. It connotes a life of goodness, knowledge, power, beneficence, blessedness—a life that is eternal in quantity because it is eternal in quality, a life so potent and good that death cannot touch it.

3. It is a life of glorious service and achievement. The Master does not teach mere "eternal rest." Think of an eternity of resting! Paul and John and Peter, those energetic souls simply sitting around, idly resting for evermore! Luther, Livingstone, Wesley, Carey, Paton, eternally with nothing to do!

"Don't weep for me now; don't weep for me, never: I'm going to do nothing forever and ever."

Preposterous! "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." To be God-like and Christ-like is to be a worker. Heavy, slavish toil and drudgery? No; heaven is not under a capitalistic regime, and there is no bondage of sin there. But, Jesus pictured it as a field of vast spiritual enterprise and mighty, although glorious, achievement. He said, in figures, "Have thou authority over ten cities and thou over five."

"Thou hast been faithful in a few things. I will make thee ruler over many things." "Ye shall sit on thrones and judge the twelve tribes of Israel." The supreme joy of congenial, constructive work, especially the service of others, need not be left on this side of the river. One-third of the human race has died in childhood. And if we were to indulge our imaginations we might exclaim, What a joy it will be to help to educate these little ones for God—to lead them forth into full citizenship in the kingdom of God, voluntarily chosen.

4. It is a life of ennobling, refining, inspiring and joyous fellowship. Although Jesus touches lightly upon the palms and singing and streets of gold, he stresses that which is infinitely better: "Ye shall be with me where I am."

"The bride eyes not her garments;
But her dear bridegroom's face.
I will not gaze at glory;
But at my King of grace:
Not on the crown he giveth;
But on his pierced hands.
The Lamb is all the glory
Of Immanuel's land."

With him shall be gathered the noblest spirits who have ever dwelt upon this earth. "They shall come from the east, west, north and south and sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God." What a delight such celestial fellowship will be! The dreamy mystic of the east, the energetic builder of the west, the rugged conqueror of the north, and the chivalric cavalier of the south all shall contribute to the social environment of that sphere. There are gathered, those whose deeds make the pages of history glorious. There, those equally regal souls who were "born to blush unseen, and waste their sweetness on the desert air."

5. It is a life of ceaseless development and endless progress. "Ye shall be perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect." John echoes, "We shall be like him." Paul declares, "conformed to his image." How shall we attain Christ-likeness? All that we know of all life shouts the answer: By means of growth. Heaven will not be a realm of perfect character miraculously bestowed—and a gallery of carved statues ever afterward. It will be a realm of progressive and fascinating growth unto the likeness of our Lord.

Oh, all ye upward-reaching hearts! The joy of aspiration and the thrill of accomplishment will not fade when earth's shadows fall. Still shall we—ourselves—gain new heights of knowledge, conquer weaknesses, overcome deficiencies, develop our spiritual powers, perhaps acquire new ones, while ever we shall lose ourselves in more-abounding services of love. In the warmer atmosphere of the Father's smile and the Master's presence, we shall become like them.

Echoes from Buffalo. By Miles J. Snyder

The International Christian Endeavor Conference, postponed from 1914 because of the Great War, was held at Buffalo, New York, August 5th to 10th, 1919. In many ways it was a significant conference. Coming as it did, the first after the ending of the world war, new and complex problems presented themselves for solution and, in a sense, new foundations had to be laid.

Significance

That the conference met the situation in a magnificent way was the consensus of opinion of those privileged to attend this notable gathering. The attendance greatly exceeded that anticipated by the Christian Endeavor leaders. Over two thousand registered delegates were present from a wide territory, including practically every state in the union and a number from Canada and foreign countries beyond the seas. This representative body registered the Christian Endeavor pulse of the world and enabled the conference to intelligently formulate plans and map out a worth-while, forward-looking program and campaign for the next two years.

Personnel

The conference was under the direction of Francis E. Clark, President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor and the World's Christian Endeavor Union, Daniel A. Poling, Associate President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Amos R. Wells, Managing Editor of the Christian Endeavor World, William Shaw, General Secretary, and Ira Landrith, Extension Secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. Besides all these, the list of speakers included the names of such men as Newton D. Baker, John Timothy Stone, Karl Lehmann, Bishop Samuel Fallows, Dean Shailer Matthews, J. Campbell White, William Jennings Bryan, and a number of others.

Challenge

This conference was officially known as the "Challenge Conference," and one of the valuable features growing out of it were the challenges issued by different state Christian Endeavor unions to others with a view of arousing them to more earnest efforts. For instance, Pennsylvania challenged any state to secure 200 new Junior societies within the next two years. A number quickly accepted that challenge. Ohio challenged Pennsylvania to organize as many new Christian Endeavor societies as Ohio will during the next two years. Iowa challenged every state bordering on it to a ten per cent increase in new societies. North Carolina challenged Virginia to secure as many Tenth Legionaries as the former will enlist. Ohio challenged Illinois, Pennsylvania, California, and New York, to enlist as many Comrades in the Quiet Hour as it will during the next two years. Pennsylvania challenged Ohio to send in as large a number of subscribers to the Christian Endeavor World as the former will secure. And many other challenges were made and accepted in a spirit of friendly rivalry in order to "provoke one another to love and good works."

Purpose

Another interesting feature was the calling of the roll of states and having a representative respond with one or more outstanding purposes for the coming year. Among the purposes and aims named were such as the following: Organize every county in the state; inaugurate a poster campaign giving publicity to Christian Endeavor; deeper consecration; survey and organize; "Wisconsin for Christ;" "Double up;" "Watch us grow."

The Tithe

In a number of addresses the tithe was emphasized. During the past year the Tenth Legion enrolled 4900 new members, and now has a total enrollment of 52,753 members. An interesting development in Christian Endeavor work is the inauguration of the union tithe. Christian Endeavor has done pioneer work in challenging individuals with the acceptance of the tithe as a minimum gift for God's cause. But lately city, county and state unions have been accepting the principle of the tithe and are tithing their budgets for the extension of Christian Endeavor in mission lands through the World Christian Endeavor Union. Sixty-nine unions have already adopted this method.

Stewardship

Dr. David McConaughy, secretary of the Interunion Movement of the Presbyterian church, gave a stirring address on "Stewardship, the Next Great Revival." He said this is a revival now, not next. Stewardship applies not only to the giving of money but also to the saving and spending of it. There is not only a cash side to stewardship but also a character side. Stewardship is not man's scheme for raising money but one of God's schools for raising men.

Life Work

"What will you do with your life?" This is another of the challenging questions that Christian Endeavor has been putting up to young people at the time when life-decisions should be made. This is given emphasis because God has a plan for each life which in turn is related to his world plan. Nearly 5000 young people have already covenanted with God through Christian Endeavor that they propose to so shape their life-plans that they may give themselves to full-time service for Christ and the church. This means much for the future since the efficiency of the church depends upon efficient, Spirit-led leadership. We can do nothing better than to strive to find what God's plan is for our life. He will speak to us when we are nearest to him.

Christian Endeavor Experts

Along with the emphasis upon spiritual realities, corresponding stress is being placed upon practical lines of service. Last year 5,247 Endeavorers successfully passed the examination in "Expert Endeavor" and received the degree C. E. E. There are now 24,844 such Christian Endeavor Experts. Many unions conduct Expert classes; and the Maryland state union has taken the advanced step of establishing a correspondence course in Expert Endeavor.

Alumni Association

One of the newest things in Christian Endeavor activity is the organization of Alumni associations. These are composed of men and women who once were active in Christian Endeavor work but who now are otherwise engaged in the work of the church. The object of the Alumni association is to enable such to again lend their sympathy, fellowship, encouragement, and help to the Christian Endeavor movement. The original Alumni association was organized in Cleveland less than four years ago, and now has a membership of over 500. There are now 84 such Alumni associations scattered from Massachusetts to California and from Texas to Canada, with a total annual pledge for the work of the United Society at home and abroad of $20,000. The Alumni association plan affords vast possibilities for the future.

Christian Endeavor Week

This year only two days of Christian Endeavor week have definite subjects fixed, being the opening Sunday which is Christian Endeavor day proper and the closing Sunday which is decision day. The following subjects for the special week are optional for any day: Fellowship, Church Loyalty, Social Day, Junior Day, Intermediate Day, Extension Day. Detailed programs will be available early in November. The results of the week will be in proportion to the efforts to make it a "victory week."

Monthly Service Topics

The special service topics for the coming year are assigned as follows:

September-October: Enlargement and enlistment.

November: Home Mission study.

December-January: Better Christian Endeavor Prayer Meetings.

February: Foreign mission study and giving.

March-April-May: Loyalty to the pledge and work of the church.

June: Convention month and union work.

July-August: Community service.

Two-Year Campaign

Program covering a two-year campaign was formulated by the Trustees and Field Secretaries in session at Buffalo, to be known as "The Loyalty Campaign." It means:

Loyalty to Christ to church to pledge to C. E. ideals in service.

Standard of loyalty: Whatever he would like to have me to do:

Whatever in living, doing, being, thinking, speaking, giving;

Whatever in the church, Sunday school, Christian Endeavor;

Whatever in the home, business, community, state;

Whatever in recreation, social standards, amusements.

Loyalty Goals:

1. A 50 percent net membership increase in two years in every Christian Endeavor society.

2. A society of some kind in every church in the community or know the reason why.

3. A denominational money goal for missions in every state.

4. A full time or part time field secretary in every state.

5. An Alumni Association in every local union.

Christian Endeavor Challenge: Come on.

Response: Let's go!

it, death destroys it, and in a few short years, it has utterly passed away. There is not a mansion, however splendid, or an inheritance, however ancient, that does not have within it the seeds of corruption, and which in spite of all the efforts of men to preserve it, will not one day crumble to dust and ashes. But the believers inheritance will never perish. It can never perish because it is incorruptible. It is eternal in the heavens. It is not subject to death, neither indeed can it be.

2. It is undefiled. The word means unblemished, pure, holy and without spot. What is there on earth of which this may be said? There is in India a magnificent palace of marble adorned with gold, silver and precious stones called the Taj Mahal. It took thousands of men years to build it, and it is one of the most beautiful structures in the world. But it is defiled, polluted by the groans of thousands of starving men who worked upon it. Are we better? I understand that we are getting ready to build victory arches and memorial buildings which shall take much labor and thousands of dollars. We shall build them while the Armenians starve, while babies die in our own city for want of proper medical attention. Christian churches here in Philadelphia build wonderful cathedrals, adorn them with art windows, and equip them with expensive organs. They hire singers to dedicate them while at almost every second a soul launches out into eternity without ever having heard the message of Christ. Such things are polluted with the blood of souls. Thank God our heavenly inheritance will be undefiled. It is purer than the light, fairer than the cloudless sky, and brighter than the sun. And mark it, "There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth." Amen.

3. It fadeth not away. The poets have spoken of "amaranthine" flowers, which never withered, neither did their beauty or splendor ever fade. The word from which "amaranthine" is derived is used here of our inheritance. It is an "amaranthine" inheritance, its beauty is unfading. Everything that is earthly fades, whether it be our flowers, our works of art, our temples of stone, our faces, our bodies; "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory thereof as the flower of the grass. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, BUT the word of the Lord abideth forever." And his word has promised to us an inheritance that fadeth not away.

Such, then, is the glory of our inheritance. In substance it is incorruptible. In purity it is undefiled. In beauty it is unfading. And this is the object of our hope. O, I grant you that we do not have full knowledge of that future inheritance, but this one thing I know—It will be different from the heritage of this world in that no stretch of time be it ever so long, no mutations, no catastrophes, no earthquakes, no storms or tempests, no winter's frost, no summer's scorching heat, no unforeseen circumstances can ever affect it or subtract one infinitesimal fraction from its glory.

It is for this that we hope, and in closing let me assure you that,

Some have doubted. Some are doubting, and I suppose it will always be so. To such the Word is, "My righteous one shall live by faith; and if he shrink back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." But to all them that believe on the Lord Jesus Christ the inheritance is SURE. Their hope shall never be disappointed.

Only two things could possibly disappoint our hope. When an inheritance is left here to some one, oftentimes the inheritance is lost or squandered before the heir comes into possession of it. And so his hope is disappointed. Or as the heir is just about to lay his hands upon the inheritance he is stricken by disease and is cut off without ever having enjoyed its possession for a day.

Nothing like this can happen to disappoint the hope of the Christian. The text speaks very plainly. (1) "The inheritance is reserved in heaven for you." (2) We "are kept by the power of God" for the inheritance. Blessed facts! The inheritance is "reserved." The heirs "are kept." Somewhere out in the vast bounds of space, perhaps on some glorious, central sun, a place bathed in the sunlight of God's eternal Presence, there is an "inheritance" reserved for "you." And by that same power that holds the stars in their courses, the power of the mighty God, "we are kept," kept unto a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ who has done it, and is doing it, and will continue to do it.

MISSIONS

Another Letter from Africa

Brazzaville, French Equatorial Africa,
June 23, 1919.

Dear little friends: I wrote to you last about the middle of May and this afternoon being alone and rather lonely I think I will send you another letter.

Marie and Julia and I had such good times the last two weeks in May playing here in camp together.

The last Sunday in May, Uncle Antoine commenced preaching both in French and English at Portoport, a native church in another part of Brazzaville, but as it is some distance from here. I have only been able to go once. On June 2nd Uncle Antoine and Aunt Mary and Marie and Julia went to live in some rooms at the Swedish Mission. Uncle Antoine is helping for a time in their work while Mr. Ader is away. I miss Marie and Julia so much, although we see each other often, not being half a mile apart.

The first morning after they went away, as soon as mamma finished dressing me, I started to run over to their tent, forgetting that they were not there. Then, how I cried, saying, "Oh mamma, Marie and Julia won't live with me any more." But I was comforted when on that day and others, I went to see them and play with them at the mission; and at times they came to spend the day with me.

Our school is rather interrupted. It is a small school, just three little girls, and often only two, as I don't always go. We have had several teachers, mamma sometimes, sometimes Aunt Mary, sometimes Uncle William and sometimes Aunt Toddy. Aunt Toddy has been nursing so much of the time that we couldn't have her steadily for our teacher.

May 29 was celebrated as Ascension Day, here, especially in the Catholic church. There was also an eclipse of the sun, and the natives were greatly affected by it, some thinking it was the end of the world. But some of them who had been taught, would tell us that it was the "moon passing over the face of the sun," and seemed to be content. It is the first time I ever looked at anything through smoked glass, and I would get my little fingers and face so black that mamma said I looked like a Bakongo, too.

There is a little mulatto boy who is going to school at the mission, named Victor. Marie and Julia and I play with him also, and he seems so glad, as he is very lonely, as is often the case, mamma says, with half caste children. He speaks only French, so we learn a little French by playing with him. His is a very sad little life for here in Africa when one's father is white and one's mother is black, the children are usually brought up as orphans, and must board in some mission or other school, sometimes Catholic, sometimes Protestant, as the father wishes. How lovely it will be if little Victor truly comes to know Jesus!

This season is not a healthful one. I have had two days of fever in June, and have been in bed another day with a very bad cold. Marie and Julia too have had slight attacks of fever and severe colds. We are all well just now, however, and thank the dear Lord for keeping us and delivering us.

We were all so sorry last week when Aunt Toddy had a severe attack of fever, which in spite of all that could be done lasted five days. But a week from the time she was taken sick she started nursing again, because she felt she was so badly needed in a home where she had promised to go. We do praise God for delivering her from the fever and are asking him to give her strength for each day.

The other day I went with mamma to take a little food to a man who was sick. When we were coming back, a little black boy, my own age, came out of a native house and some way or other, we just put our arms around each other, and then the little boy started to come home with me. His mamma was pleased and called us back and gave me four eggs. I am very, very fond of eggs, and so are Marie and Julia. They came out that night and we had custard for supper! The little boy, however, wasn't permitted to come on home with me, but another little child came from the same village the next day, and we played with my blocks and the wagon and had a very happy time.

We are grateful for your prayers. We pray daily for all our little Christian friends in America. His loving arms are around us all, and although we still wait, our faith is greater, and our hope brighter than ever for Africa's lost little ones. Yours lovingly,

MARGUERITE GRIBBLE.

Time passes so rapidly when one is busy that it is difficult to remember all of one's duties. I fear that I have been negligent in writing to the Evangelist but if so it has been for lack of time rather than for lack of material.

We are just now in the winter vacation for the schools and for this time had planned revival meetings but our plans have been rather spoiled this year by the rainy weather and the prevalence of the gripe. The Bible coach came from Villa Maria with several workers of the Plymouth Brethren, but they had to leave it here and return on the train as the roads were impassable on account of the mud. They hope to return again later and resume their journey.

On Sunday, July 8 we observed Decision Day and followed with meetings during the week. There were fourteen confessions of faith but we were obliged to close on account of so many being sick. We hope that later on we may begin again. Our winters are usually dry but this year is an exception.

We have recently purchased a property for the work in Cabrera and are negotiating for one in Carlotá. We hope to dedicate the one in Cabrera July 27 and follow with meetings and will then write more about it.

By the time this reaches the Evangelist the General Conference will be on hands and Brother and Sister Sickle should have arrived here. We are eager for their coming and shall not fail to remember the Conference much in our prayers. We are happy that the work of missions is growing in favor with the brethren at home. C. F. YODER.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

EIGHTH ANNUAL BRETHREN CONFERENCE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Held at Long Beach, California, July 18-27, 1919, Devoted to Business, Bible Study, Addresses, Sermons and Lectures

Friday, the first day of the conference, was spent in business. All the churches were represented by a full quota of delegates and the reports from the churches showed commendable work being done in all the congregations.

At the beginning of the morning session the courtesies of the conference were extended to Brethren Miller, Ashman, Shank and all other visiting brethren.

The Mission Board reported commendable progress in the new work at Filmore. There is at present a membership of sixty-three in the church, a Sunday school with an average attendance of sixty-five and two Christian Endeavor societies with a membership of forty-five. The pastor reported the services as being well attended and the work in general making splendid progress.
